Many of us have regretted the failure of the plans of the missionaries in those islands. They sought to make an Arcadia, a limited monarchy, an industrious, well-schooled, and Christian people, and a reign of the Ten Commandments. It seems to me that they might have succeeded had not the sugar industry prospered. That was the curse of Hawaii, as a friend from Fiji told me it is everywhere a curse. It brought in monopolies, coolie workmen, and white overseers; and the three are enough to ruin any land. There are a great many people who seem to think that somehow a paradise awaits a white man settling in Hawaii. Indeed, the land is lovely, but the life there is not so. If you live in town, gossip, cliques, scandal, and narrowness annoy you; if you live in the country, society you have none. Of course, one in love with nature, or one who loves outdoor work, can be happy there; but for those who desire more, Hawaii is no place. A mechanic must enter into competition with Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese. I don't think I see much chance for any other pursuit, where a man relies on his own industry, save stock raising and market gardening, and I fancy capital and Oriental labor would be needed there. Of course, there are nooks here and there where Arcadia still lingers in Hawaii, Kona, and Puna, on the great island, are still full of natives, who seem to be happy and thriving. But it seems to me that the day when Americans shall fill up Hawaii with their settlements is a long way off; and that day will never come with the form of government purposed to be inflicted on Hawaii by the foreigners there now.

TOLERANCE AND INTOLERANCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While it is unmannerly to call names out of pure malice, it is clearly permissible, when men ally themselves with the brute creation or savage humanity in their exhibition of folly or passion or ignorance, to designate them definitively by such concrete terms as will best symbolize the passions with which they have identified themselves. On this ground I applaud, even to its title, the timely editorial of Jan. 23 under the caption "Wild Men in Public Life." It seems to me that it is possible to err in the matter of toleration for the sake of conserving a principle like that of the freedom of the press or freedom of speech. Granted that great personal inconvenience is not too large a price to pay, in order that every man may have his rightful freedom and a little more; but when the offense is so rank as that which occasioned the suppression of Havana papers by Gen. Ludlow, or that which called down the merited rebuke of The Times upon the Senators who have compromised the dignity of the American Nation, if they have not violated, as our representatives, the spirit of neutrality, then, I say, toleration ceases to be a virtue. We have been warned of the folly of treating semi-savages in the same way as we would treat persons accustomed to the usages of civilized life, on the principle involved in the precept, "Cast not your pearls before swine." Is there not danger of the same sort in according to our "wild men" at home privileges which they so wantonly abuse?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the "special" to your paper dated Baltimore, Jan. 16, which related to the statues of Marylanders to be placed in Washington, I beg to be allowed, as a descendant of none of the parties under discussion, but as a lover of justice, to correct a mistake of your correspondent which makes a vast difference in the view to be taken in the present situation. The Statuary Commission appointed to make its choice of names and to report to the last Legislature did not mention John Hanson as one of those to be honored by a statue. The act to provide for, placing two statues, &c., and indorsed, "Rules suspended, read third time, and passed by yeas and nays," went through the two houses in the night session of April 4, 1898, a little before the adjournment of the Legislature sine die. Its "acts" are all printed, and this particular act—No. 311, I believe—states very clearly that the Statuary Commission recommended Charles Carroll of Carrollton for one statue, and for the other they said that if military services were to be preferred for recognition, Col. John Eager Howard would be their choice, and if civil services were to be preferred, they would recommend Thomas Johnson, first Governor of the State. The Legislature set both suggestions aside and declared that the other should be "John Hanson, the first President of the Continental Congress and ex-officio President of the United States." This statement alone testifies to the ignorance of those who rushed the measure through, literally at the eleventh hour. John Hanson was a President of the Continental Congress, but not the first. For ten days the Governor could not be prevailed upon to sign the act, but finally the deed was done, and on the acts of the Maryland Legislature it stands, "Approved, April 14, 1898."

IN THE NAME OF JUSTICE.

Baltimore, Jan. 20, 1900.

A Wrong That Should Be Righted.

From The Rochester Union.

We direct attention to a leading article from THE NEW YORK TIMES printed in another column. In a word, it shows the justice of a bill pending in Congress to right the gross wrong and nullification of a provision of the Wilson tariff act of 1894 by which manufacturers using alcohol in the arts or in medicinal compounds have been robbed of $6,000,000 through neglect of the Secretary of the Treasury to obey the law and prescribe regulations for rebate or repayment as provided. His neglect is upheld on a mere technicality by decision of the Supreme Court on a divided bench of nine Judges, 5 to 4, and therefore there is no redress except by act of Congress. Whatever justification the five Judges may claim for their decision, there can be no possible defense for a refusal by Congress to give effect to the nullified section of the Wilson tariff.

KISSING OUR BOYS GOOD NIGHT.

W. L. Sanford in Galveston News.

Oh! what a change comes over things,
What quiet fills the place;
The Winter evening slowly drags,
The purple flames that race
Far up the chimney seem to shed
Less cheerful warmth and light,
When, putting on their little gowns,
We kiss our boys good night.

We follow them as off they go,
With ringing laugh and shout,
To fondly tuck them in the bed
And turn the gaslight out;
And, clasped in one another's arms,
So warm and snug and tight,
They fill our hearts with worship
When we kiss our boys good night.

And as they drift to Slumberland
We linger 'round their cot,
For lo! a strange enchantment
Binds us voiceless to the spot.
And life somehow grows sweeter,
And the vexing cares take flight,
When, bending o'er their sleeping forms
We kiss our boys good night.

Then, looking to the future,
Into whose mysterious years
They must go to meet life's issues,
Now with gladness, now in tears;
We pray that He may lead them
Ever in the path of right,
When no more beneath our roof tree
We may kiss our boys good night.

DEPUTIES PASS THE LIE

SOLDIERS REMOVE A MEMBER

PARIS, Jan. 24.—As a result of the accusation of the Public Prosecutor, M. Bulot, at the trial of the Assumptionist Fathers before the Correctional Tribunal, that the Assumptionists were responsible for the election of M. Jean Charles Bernard, Socialist, member for the Second District of Bordeaux, there was a scene in the Chamber of Deputies to-day, when M. Bernard called M. Bulot a liar, and the Minister of Justice, M. Monis, who rose to explain, was similarly stigmatized.

The President of the Chamber of Deputies, M. Deschanel, asked the House to censure M. Bernard, saying that the day when the Chamber allows a Minister to be insulted with impunity no discussion is possible. Amid protests from the Rightists M. Bernard was censured.

M. Lasies, Anti-Semite, member for the Condom District of the Gers, who intends to challenge the Government on the High Court prosecution, here shouted:

"The Public Prosecutor is a mere minion of the law!"

M. Deschanel called M. Lasies to order and M. Bernard cried:

"Now the lies will recommence!"

M. Deschanel begged the Chamber to listen to M. Monis's statement and put an end to the "scandalous proceedings."

M. Monis said he had letters of M. Bernard and M. Chiche, Revisionist, member for the First Division of Bordeaux, showing the Assumptionists had sided in their election. Amid uproar M. Lasies exclaimed:

"You are a bandit and a canaille!"

M. Deschanel called on him to withdraw his statement and M. Lasies said he begged the Chamber's pardon, but maintained the truth of his remarks. This increased the tumult, during which the Chamber censured M. Lasies.

The discussion then proceeded in a comparatively quiet manner, M. Chiche denying that he wrote a letter to the Assumptionists saying he owed his election to them.

A little later another storm broke. M. Bernard called M. Monis a swindler and a canaille, refused to withdraw his expressions, and the Chamber, at M. Deschanel's request, voted his temporary expulsion. M. Bernard refused to budge, the session was suspended, and a squad of soldiers, headed by the Colonel commanding the guard at the Palais Bourbon, was marched into the Chamber. The Colonel summoned M. Bernard to withdraw, and the latter protested, but obeyed, shouting as he left, "Vive la republic honnête!" while his friends responded with "Vive Bernard!"

Several other Deputies having protested at remarks made by the Public Prosecutor concerning them, the Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, said he agreed that the rectifications made by some of the Deputies were perfectly legitimate. But, he added, he was astonished at the violence of the protests against a Magistrate who simply read prepared papers. The protests, he continued, were apparently based on newspaper reports, but there were none which he could declare alike, and he could not allow the Assumptionists' trial to be dragged into the Chamber for discussion while it was still proceeding.

M. Gourd, Progressist Republican, member for the Second Division of Lyons, asked that the matter be transformed into the regular form of an interpellation. M. Waldeck-Rousseau refused and asked that the interpellation be postponed until the end of the trial.

The Chamber, amid Ministerial cheers, voted, by 319 to 214, the postponement for a month of the discussion, the incident thus ending in a virtual vote of confidence in the Government.

The trial of the twelve Assumptionist Fathers before the Correctional Tribunal resulted to-day in the sentence to pay a fine of 16f. each and the Court decreed the dissolution of the order.

The imposition of merely nominal fines is explained by the fact that the main object of the prosecution was not the punishment of the Fathers, but the dissolution of the Order, which the Government had long regarded as a reactionary political association and an important financial buttress of the Nationalist movement.

The trial began Monday. The Public Prosecutor said the defendants were prosecuted because, in violation of the law, they had been living in France for the past fifty years without the authorization of the Government or the approbation of the Holy See. It was also alleged that the Fathers were involved in the so-called Royalist and anti-Republican conspiracy. The Superior of the Order, Father Picard, who was the first of the defendants questioned, denied that he belonged to an illegal association, and declared he never took part in political agitation. Father Picard added that the Assumptionists attended to purely religious questions.

The Public Prosecutor later produced facts in support of the charge that the Fathers had entered actively into the electoral campaign against the republic. Finally, the Public Prosecutor demanded the dissolution of the order, contending that its continued existence was a menace to the social system in France.

GERMAN COURT PLANS.

Festivities Will Continue If the Empress's Mother Survives.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—The curtailing of the Court festivities because the death of the mother of the Empress, the Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein, is expected daily, has occasioned numberless heartburns among the Court attendants. The Duchess, however, may live another week. In case she survives a défiler cour will be given for the military to-morrow. This is a novel feature, introduced by Emperor William, as hitherto the military and the civilians have been received together.

The Kaiser will receive the Diplomatic Corps and others in the morning. At noon he will attend religious services in the Castle Chapel. In the evening, instead of the gala opera performance, there will be a performance of Auber's "The Bronze Horse," members of the Diplomatic Corps paying for their boxes instead of attending as invited guests. Emperor William will probably appear for a short time in the royal box.

United States Ambassador White, with the other diplomats, will attend a dinner given by Prince Hohenlohe before the opera.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The body of John Ruskin was removed to ... y from Brantwood to Coniston Church. The coffin was borne by twelve villagers, and was followed by Mr. and Mrs. Severns and a few friends and neighbors. The bier was covered with blossoms. The public will be admitted to view the casket until the time of the funeral, which takes place to-morrow.

Prussian Teachers May Whip Pupils.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—Dr. Studt, the new Prussian Minister of Education, has issued a decree abolishing the restrictions of his predecessor and fully re-establishing the right of a public school teacher to inflict corporal punishment. This has caused amazement in Liberal circles.

CHINESE PIRATES ACTIVE.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The Hongkong correspondent of The Times says:

"The pirates, emboldened by recent successes, have been again attempting to blackmail foreign firms at Canton. They have demanded 10,000 taels from the China Merchants' Steamship Company and 50,000 taels each from Reuter, Brackelman & Co. and Deacon & Co., under a threat to blow up their offices with dynamite.

"The Chinese authorities are consulting with the foreign Consuls. The German gunboat Itis was telegraphed for, and is now anchored off Shameen."

Blood Flows in a French Duel.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—A duel was fought yesterday at the village of Maisons-Laffitte between the well-known sportsman M. Jacques de Bremond, owner of the race horse Holocauste, which stumbled and broke his pastern at the English Derby last year, and a young clubman named Perier, partner in a champagne firm. It arose out of a trivial dispute. Both men were pinked in the lung, M. de Bremond dangerously and M. Perier slightly.

TO BUY TISSOT'S PAINTINGS.

Brooklyn Institute Secures an Option on the Collection Illustrating the Life of Christ.

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, through its President, A. Augustus Healy, has secured the option for the purchase of the Tissot collection of paintings illustrating the life of Christ, and numbering about 400 pictures. At a special meeting of the Board of Trustees of the institute, held on Tuesday, A. Augustus Healy, the President, said that through the efforts of a number of the members of the institute it was possible to buy the entire collection for $60,000, and a resolution authorizing the Director and the Committee on Art Museum to raise by public subscription the money necessary was adopted. The sum of $13,100 was subscribed at the meeting. The option on the paintings expires on March 1.

If the paintings become the property of the Brooklyn Institute they will be placed in one of the large galleries of the Institute Museum on Eastern Parkway. It is said that if the Institute purchases the paintings, M. Tissot has agreed to come to America and supervise the decoration of the gallery in which it is proposed to place them. It is also said that he has offered to paint a large portrait of Christ to place at the end of the gallery in which it is planned to place the smaller paintings.

The Tissot collection was painted between the years 1887 and 1897, and is considered to be the most important series of scenes in the life of Christ made since the great masters of the Italian, Spanish, and Dutch schools of painting. The artist spent ten years in Palestine in the study of the country, the people, the history of the Jews from the earliest times, the temples, the shrines, and all the physical conditions that surrounded Christ and the Jewish people at the beginning of the Christian era.

Interest in the works of M. Tissot has been greatly increased since his paintings have been exhibited in Paris, London, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and other cities.

ARTIST ACCUSES A CRITIC.

Henry W. Ranger Has David C. Preyer Arrested on the Charge of Criminal Libel.

On the complaint of Henry W. Ranger, the well-known American landscape artist, David C. Preyer, editor and publisher of the art journal known as The Collector and Art Critic, was arrested yesterday on the charge of criminal libel, and brought before Justice Hogan at the Jefferson Market Police Court. Charles Miller appeared for Mr. Ranger, and Leavitt Hunt for Mr. Preyer. The arrest created much excitement in art circles up town when the news of it became known.

Justice Hogan, after looking at the papers in the case, released Mr. Preyer on his lawyer's parole until to-morrow. It is quite likely, it is said, that whether or not the case is dismissed to-morrow it will be pushed civilly by either plaintiff or defendant.

Mr. Ranger applied for the warrant for Mr. Preyer's arrest on the ground that he had been libeled in the issue of The Collector and Art Critic of Jan. 13. In this issue there appeared an editorial which alleged that Mr. Ranger, some of whose works were about to be introduced to the notice of the English public, was less representative of American art than others specified, and containing sharp criticism of his style.

It was said yesterday by people well informed in art matters that if Mr. Ranger could have Mr. Preyer held on the charge of criminal libel for this notice of his work, other artists and critics could be frequently proceeded against when they published adverse notices or criticisms of artists' works. Mr. Preyer, it is said, intends to summon other art writers, who he states have expressed opinions of the same general character as his own, and the case has led to wide discussion.

Mr. Preyer was formerly associated in the editorship of The Collector with C. C. Ruthrauff, the picture owner and collector. Mr. Preyer resigned from the editorship of The Collector last year, and started his present journal, The Collector and Art Critic. Mr. Ruthrauff and Mr. Ranger are said to be warm friends and associates in the Lotos and other clubs.

It was yesterday remarked in art circles that formerly when an artist of any standing in New York felt himself aggrieved by adverse criticism or notice on the part of any art writer or critic he took his revenge by using his influence to have the offending writer or critic blackballed whenever the latter might come up for election to a leading club of an artistic and literary character. The arrest for alleged criminal libel of an offending critic, it was further remarked, would seem to be a departure from the old method.

RUNAWAY IN SIXTH AVENUE.

Mrs. Egbert B. Seaman Hurt and Her Carriage Wrecked—Horses Frightened by an Elevated Train.

A team of horses attached to a coupé, in which was seated Mrs. Egbert B. Seaman of 788 Park Avenue, became unmanageable at Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street yesterday, and dashed into an elevated railroad pillar, wrecking the carriage and throwing the driver from his seat. The driver, Frederick Childs, of 16 East One Hundred and Fifteenth Street, was taken to the New York Hospital with a broken thigh. Mrs. Seaman was taken to the same hospital.

It was said at the hospital last night that Mrs. Seaman was not seriously hurt, her only injury being a bruise on the left side of the head. Mr. Seaman, who is the proprietor of a livery stable at Park Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, said his wife would be out again in two or three days. He said she was riding behind a rather spirited team of horses, which became frightened at a passing elevated train, and that when the driver got them under control another train had come along, causing them to start again. Just then a newspaper wagon had come along, and the coupé collided with it. His wife had obeyed his oft-repeated instructions to remain quiet and open the window. She had not attempted to jump out, which accounted, in his opinion, for her not being killed.

METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE.

"Die Meistersinger" Sung for the First Time This Season.

Wagner's comic opera, "Die Meistersinger," was performed at the Metropolitan Opera House last night for the first time this season. The audience was one of uncommon size, and it paid the tribute of the closest attention to the performance. This tribute was more than perfunctory, for it was commanded by the merits of a representation of more than ordinary fidelity to the composer's intentions. If the outcome was not always in accord with the aims of the singers, the shortcomings were due to natural limitations and to personal peculiarities not always possible, and invariably very inconvenient to overstep. The interest of the comedy was sustained from beginning to end, and in the treatment of the stage groupings and action there were evidences that Mr. Van Rooy, the Hans Sachs; Mr. Friederichs, the Beckmesser, and Mme. Schumann-Heink, fresh from the Baireuth experiences of last Summer, had been potent influences in the preparations for the production.

The reconciliation of the two elements, recitative always bordering on speech and pure lyric singing, which are the fundamental factors of the vocal part of "Die Meistersinger," is not always so successfully achieved as it was last night. Most of the conversational recitation is in the hands of Beckmesser, and this character was last night, to the benefit of the audience, in the hands of such a capable interpreter as Fritz Friederichs, who is conceded to be the best Beckmesser in Germany. Those who were expecting that he would attempt to sing the music may have been disappointed, but those who fully understood the dramatic purpose of Wagner in writing the part were delighted with his complete and convincing conception of the character, one that did not include any element of buffoonery, and a presentation of it which never transcended the bounds of legitimate comedy. His treatment of the text was deliciously funny, and his parlando, which often ran into simple talk, was a much more convincing demonstration of the possibilities of Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies's "cantillation" than that admirable singer's own.

Happily paired with this Beckmesser was the Magdalena of Mme. Schumann-Heink, an impersonation perfect in its conception and deliciously, delicately artistic in its details of execution. It was worth going to the opera last night just to hear the humorous manner in which she pronounced the words. The contribution to the lower comedy of the opera made by Mr. Breuer as David was very small, and his singing was of a kind on which comment is best omitted.

Mr. Van Rooy appeared as Hans Sachs for the first time here. His interpretation of the part was conscientious and painstaking; but for some reason, not easy to name, it missed the note of genial bigheadedness which is essential to conviction in this part. Possibly this was due to his deficiency in variety of facial expression, and it may also have been the result of the explosive energy of his singing. Whatever was the cause, his Hans Sachs lacked definiteness of characterization and warmth of feeling. Mr. Dippel was a gallant and demonstrative Walther von Stolzing, but he was not wholly satisfactory in his delivery of the lyric measures of his rôle. Mr. Bertram was a wholly conventional Pogner, but he sang the address with dignity and earnestness. The minor masters were all badly represented, and their singing in the first act was a thing to make angels weep.

Mme. Eames was the same lovely Eva as of old, and the change from Italian to German, not made for the first time last night, did not prevent her from singing the music beautifully. The apprentices were a lively set and contributed much to the animation of the same. Mr. Paur conducted, and for him and the orchestra hearty commendation is in order. The orchestral work was full of flexibility, grace, and musical beauty. The instruments sang their share of the work most vocally, and Mr. Paur showed a complete understanding of the work and a genuine sympathy with it.

"THE ABSENT-MINDED BEGGAR."

Mrs. Langtry to Recite Kipling's Poem at Each Performance.

Mrs. Langtry having received numerous requests to recite Rudyard Kipling's patriotic poem, "The Absent-Minded Beggar," has consented to give the recitation every evening and matinee for the remainder of her engagement at the Garden Theatre, beginning next Monday night.

The poem will be recited at the close of each performance, as it was given in London, Mrs. Langtry being attired in the semi-military costume. Immediately following the close of the performance the orchestra will play the music composed by Sir Arthur Sullivan especially for this poem.

Charles Frohman's New Comic Opera.

From present indications and recent announcement from London, it appears that Charles Frohman intends to make a new departure in theatrical attractions by presenting for the first time in this city at some future date a new comic opera in two acts, entitled, "The Rose of Persia; or, The Story-Teller and the Slave." The piece is by Basil Hood and Sir Arthur Sullivan. Mr. Frohman purchased the American rights from D'Oly Carte through his English representative. The opera is the present attraction at the Savoy Theatre in London, where it has been filling a successful engagement since Nov. 29.

THE STRAND THEATRE TRANSFER.

The Broadhurst Brothers to Remain in the London Field.

The sudden leasing of the Strand Theatre in London by the Broadhurst Brothers last season has ended in the latter sub-letting the house to Frank Curzon, the present manager of the Avenue Theatre, who will take possession Feb. 10. Mr. Curzon will accordingly produce a three-act farcical comedy, entitled "Facing the Music," by H. J. Darnley.

George Broadhurst said yesterday that he and his brother had accomplished all they desired in the English metropolis by the establishment of their name, and that the turning over to the new managers of the Strand Theatre their lease, which has nearly seven years more to continue, does not in any way mean that they intend to abandon the English theatrical field. Mr. Broadhurst added that he and his brother were negotiating with the owners of the Vaudeville, and if successful in securing the house they would revive "The Wrong Mr. Wright," so as to extend the run of the play, which has been doing an excellent business, considering the unsettled condition of affairs in London on account of the South African war.

E. E. Rice to Have a Benefit.

Several prominent theatrical managers met yesterday and decided to tender a benefit performance to Edward E. Rice, at the Metropolitan Opera House Thursday afternoon, Feb. 15. Almost all the theatrical managers in this city will be identified with the affair, and they promise to do all they can to promote its success and make the bill to be presented a notable one. The entertainment will commemorate Mr. Rice's twenty-fifth year as a New York manager. Owing to some unfortunate enterprises he was identified with recently and to show their appreciation of his past service for theatricals the New York managers determined to give him the benefit.

Rudolph Aronson Goes to Europe.

Rudolph Aronson sailed for Europe yesterday on the White Star liner Oceanic. He will go direct to Paris for the purpose of closing negotiations for the establishment of a roof garden during the exposition. He will then visit Vienna to procure the American concession for the Buffet Automatique. During his stay abroad Mr. Aronson will make an effort to get some new specialties for the Sire Brothers to be given at the New York roof garden.

Benefit at Fifth Avenue Theatre.

A performance will be given Thursday afternoon, Feb. 8, at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, for the benefit of the Sacred Heart Orphan Asylum, in charge of the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart. Edwin Knowles has given the use of the theatre and the entertainment will be under the direction of Augustus Pitou, who promises to arrange an attractive programme for the occasion.

Miss Nethersole at Atlantic City.

Word was received in this city yesterday from Washington, D. C., that Miss Olga Nethersole has improved sufficiently to allow her to leave that city for Atlantic City, where she will remain until it is time for her to come to New York to appear at Wallack's Theatre in "Sapho." It is regarded as probable that the play will be presented next Monday night.

"The Belle of New York" in Berlin.

BERLIN Jan. 24.—The American play "The Belle of New York" will be presented here next Summer in English, with an American ensemble.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Yesterday was not a particularly gay day, and was filled with incidents more than events. The afternoon was devoted to "at homes," and the most notable of these informal receptions were given by Mrs. James M. Varnum, Mrs. Alexander T. Van Nest, Mrs. Lewis F. Whitin, Mrs. J. Fred Pierson, and Mrs. Willard S. Brown. The evening, with no other distractions of importance, brought one of the best houses yet seen at the opera, where "Die Meistersinger" was produced. The third Wednesday cotillion was danced at Delmonico's, and there was quite a good attendance at the wedding at St. George's Church in the afternoon of Mr. William A. Robinson and Miss Elwyna L. Lee.

***

To-day will make up in the way of social events for the dullness of yesterday. The afternoon is crowded with "at homes," including those of Mrs. George T. Bonner and Miss Mabel Bonner of 115 East Twenty-first Street, Mrs. Schuyler Quackenbush and daughters of 142 West Fifty-seventh Street, Mrs. George Shrady of 8 East Sixty-sixth Street, Mrs. James Francis Ruggles of 69 Irving Place, Mrs. Robert McMaster Gillespie of 8 West Fifty-third Street, Mrs. Louis F. Bishop of 54 West Fifty-fifth Street, Mrs. James Brown Lord of 603 Madison Avenue, Mrs. Lawrence Jacob of 42 East Forty-ninth Street, Mrs. R. P. Lounsbery of 12 East Thirty-fifth Street, and the Misses Parsons, daughters of Mr. John E. Parsons, of 30 East Thirty-sixth Street. Mrs. Henry H. Cook and her daughter, Mme. de Heredia, will give a large reception with music at their residence, 1 East Seventy-eighth Street, this afternoon. The evening will be filled with dancing, with the second meeting of the Knickerbocker Dancing Class at Delmonico's; the second Assembly ball at the Astoria, and for a less fashionable, but still representative element, the annual Old Guard ball at the Metropolitan Opera House.

At the wedding of Miss Elizabeth C. Fordyce Barker and Mr. Murray Witherbee Dodge, which is to be celebrated at St. Thomas's Church on Feb. 6 at 12 o'clock, Miss Lillian F. Barker, sister of the bride, will be her maid of honor, and Miss Alice Babcock and Miss Fifi Potter will be the bridesmaids. Mr. Marshall Dodge, a brother of the bridegroom, will be best man, and the ushers will be William Dixon, Harry Hollister, Lawrence Stoddard, John Adams Dodge, Frederic Kernochan, Jr., Charles Brayton, and Samuel Hawley. The bridal party at the wedding of Mr. Eugene Lentilhon and Miss Florence Bergh Brown in the Church of the Heavenly Rest on Tuesday, Feb. 27, will be composed of Miss Mary Holden of Boston, Mass., who will be the maid of honor, and Messrs. Richard King, A. Cochran, A. W. Whitney, and A. Maclay Rentz, who will be Mr. Lentilhon's ushers. The wedding of Mr. Frederick Longfellow and Miss Julia Livingston Delafield will take place about the end of April.

There was a quiet little wedding celebrated at St. John's Church at Far Rockaway, L. I., on Tuesday afternoon, the news of which will bring surprise to many people. It was that of Mr. Charles E. Sherman of California and Miss Hannah Newbold Lawrence, a daughter of the late Alfred Lawrence, and a sister of Mr. John Lawrence, who married Miss Alice W. Work. Miss Lawrence is related to several prominent Long Island families, and is a cousin of Mr. John Suydam and Mrs. Walter Suydam and of Mr. James W. Walsh. By the death of her parents in 1884, she and her brother, Mr. John Lawrence, inherited a goodly fortune, and are now owners of a large land holding at Lawrence, L. I., where for many years they have resided. Miss Lawrence, who has devoted herself for some years largely to charitable work, spent a Winter recently in Southern California, where she met Mr. Sherman. The ceremony, which was attended by only a few immediate relatives, was celebrated by the Rev. S. W. Sayres, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church.

MRS. PULLAR SAW WALLER.

When the suit against ex-Gov. Waller of Connecticut and others, brought by Joseph W. Pullar, to set aside a contract made under alleged duress by which he transferred a $50,000 interest in the will of his second wife, Johanna, to ex-Gov. Waller and Alfred K. Page, was resumed before Justice Bischoff in the Supreme Court yesterday, the plaintiff's first wife, Mary T. Pullar, took the stand.

Mrs. Pullar testified that she was married to Joseph W. Pullar in 1877 and separated from him in 1892. "I heard that Mrs. Johanna Goodwin had been married to Mr. Pullar after our separation," she continued. "I thought maybe she did not know that he was already married, so I called at her house to tell her about it."

Mrs. Pullar said that she heard of Mrs. Goodwin's death in 1896. She testified that James Farrell had called on her in April, 1897, and asked her if she knew that her husband had been married to another woman. "I told him," said Mrs. Pullar, "that there was no record of such a marriage. Mr. Farrell then told me that Mrs. Goodwin had left Pullar $70,000, and that he would look out for me in the matter."

She declared that she had called several times at ex-Gov. Waller's office, and that his partner, Mr. Carleton, had told her that Mrs. Goodwin was incompetent to make

AGAINST THE HORTON LAW

OPPOSITION TO APPEAR FEB. 7

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—The Codes Committee of the Assembly gave a hearing to-day on Assemblyman Lewis's bill, which calls for the entire repeal of the so-called Horton law, which permits prize fighting in the State. Prior to listening to the arguments advanced in favor of the bill, Chairman Weekes fixed Wednesday, Feb. 7, as the date for the final hearing, at which time those in opposition will be heard, after which the adherents of the bill will reply briefly. Assemblyman T. P. Sullivan informed the committee that the opposition would be formidable, and would take up several hours of the committee's time.

Assemblyman H. D. Stevens of Franklin presented a memorial favoring the repeal of the Horton law, signed by the leading citizens of that county, and requesting their representatives in both branches of the Legislature to work for the passage of the Lewis bill. Assemblyman F. W. Griffiths of Wayne and L. M. Martin of Clinton presented petitions favoring the repeal of the present law singed by various organizations in those counties, all of which were placed on file.

The Rev. Dr. Hite, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of this city, was the first speaker. He opened his remarks by stating that there was an overwhelming sentiment throughout the State for the repeal of the law which permits prize fighting, which was certainly an indication that the law as it now stands, would be repealed. "The repeal of this law would not interfere with athletics so far as it is wholesome, pure, and healthful," continued the speaker. "We all believe in taking care of our bodies from a physical standpoint, but we are denouncedly and strenuously opposed to prize fights and the prize ring. We as Americans feel a great horror and shrinkage for Spanish bull fights, but, gentlemen of the committee, I feel that the bull fight is not to be compared for brutality with prize fighting. I stand here before you in behalf of the fathers and mothers of the young men who are growing up and ask you to repeal this law, which has been a blot on the escutcheon of our State."

At the conclusion of the reverend gentleman's remarks, Mr. Sanders of New York asked him what he thought of football as a sport, to which he made answer that he was opposed to it as being brutal, but thought it infinitely removed from the atmosphere and level of the prize ring.

"Have you ever seen a prizefight?" interposed Mr. Roche.

"No."

"What athletic associations are there in Albany County?" was the next question put.

"I can't say."

Assemblyman Swift of Broome, who was the next speaker, said that he drew the line at prizefighting. The way to amend the present law, he thought, was to amend it by root and branch, as it was a standing disgrace to the State to have it on the statute books.

"Is it not a fact that the Young Men's Christian Associations have boxing in their gymnasiums," asked Mr. Frisbie.

"Very true," was the response, "but boxing and prizefighting I regard as entirely different things."

"Oh, then you sanction sparring exhibitions, but object to prizefighting?" interjected Mr. Sanders of New York.

"The law hasn't been lived up to or enforced, and these so-called scientific exhibitions are prizefights pure and simple," retorted Mr. Swift.

Mr. Lewis, the introducer of the bill, was the last speaker. He said:

"My bill was really introduced a year in advance of public sentiment, it was regarded at that time as a huge joke, and an amendment was tacked on by a gentleman supposed to be interested in prizefighting for profit which forced me to move to strike out the enacting clause and virtually killing the bill. For nearly fifty years the policy of the State of New York has been to prohibit everything in the nature of a prizefight. Fighters were regarded as brawlers and disturbers of the public peace.

"What are the results of the Horton law? The passage of that act opened the doors of the State of New York to every prizefighter. Those persons who 'toil not, neither do they spin,' but who desire to promote their own selfish purposes without giving anything of value in return, proceeded to incorporate athletic associations and to lease buildings in which to hold fights. The provision tacked to Section 408 in 1896 was designed deliberately for the purpose of permitting the carrying on of prizefighting in this State for profit. No other reason can be assigned. No person can tell me that George Horton did not know what results would follow.

"Sparring was permitted by members of athletic associations before the Horton law was passed, and will be permitted after it is repealed. But sparring for exercise and fun is not prizefighting, such as is conducted by the New York Athletic Club, Knickerbocker Athletic Club, Coney Island Club, Lenox Club, and other clubs of a like ilk in Greater New York.

"Statistics will show you gentlemen of the committee that last year nine human beings lost their lives in the United States in the prize ring. Is that sporting? In forty-four States of the union prizefighting is absolutely prohibited. This law as it now stands permits about a dozen men of New York City to fill their pockets; these favored few conspired together to secure the passage of an amendment to the law so that they could give prize fights for an admission and disgrace the State.

"No man here will dare say that the Choynski-McCoy fight was not a brutal exhibition, or the one that preceded it. If the law permitting prize fighting is to remain on our statute books, then in heaven's name let us place dueling also on the statute books. When you challenge a man to a duel you probably have good cause for it, but there is no good reason for prizefighting, excepting to pound one another for money.

"You legislators will be held responsible by the people if this law is not repealed, as the eyes of the masses are fastened upon you, and I tell you, gentlemen, that whosoever fails to vote for this repeal is a doomed man. Popular sentiment demands its repeal, and you must bow to the inevitable. If this Horton law has any supporters they are to be found among the Democratic members, not the Republicans, and you will find that those who are most active to defeat this bill are those who are personally interested and who represent the sporting element of New York City."

Mr. Fiske of Brooklyn wanted to know if the speaker knew how many deaths had been caused by football playing, which question Mr. Lewis answered in the negative.

Mr. Sanders of New York presented a petition from the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States urging the committee not to consider the Lewis bill in a favorable light.

BOXING PROMOTERS HAPPY.

Sure the Horton Law Is Safe and Will Introduce Reforms.

The managers of the boxing clubs in this city are in much better humor than for some time, for the word has been passed along the line to them that the Horton law will not be repealed, and they feel safe in going ahead with new plans. Manager Considine of the Broadway Athletic Club has arranged for several reforms which may in future do away with the dissatisfaction that has been shown by the patrons at many of the shows held there.

One of the improvements contemplated is the naming of two judges in addition to the referee. The judges will decide on what constitutes a foul or a hold, and at the conclusion of a bout they will vote that the decision be awarded as it appears to them it should be. If they do not agree the referee will be empowered to order extra rounds until a sufficient number have been fought for them to give a decision.

This change will meet with the approval generally of the patrons, for it will in a great measure do away with draw contests. It is also proposed to have an electrical clock hung in the ring in order that a correct count may be taken in scoring knockouts.

At the Coney Island Athletic Club there are signs of a new lease of life. The principal interest in the club passed yesterday to "Tom" O'Rourke, and he and "Alec" Brown will hereafter conduct the club's affairs. William A. Brady, who obtained the controlling interest in the club before the Jeffries-Fitzsimmons fight last year, has, it is said, been frozen out of the management.

Bids for Corbett-Jeffries Fight.

At a meeting yesterday between representatives of James J. Corbett and James J. Jeffries, Feb. 1 was decided upon as the closing date for bids by clubs for the boxing contest between these two men for the championship of the world. The Coney Island, Broadway, Utica, Buffalo, and San Francisco Athletic Clubs will bid for the contest. William A. Brady has received a proposition from the Paris Hippodrome, offering a percentage with a guarantee of 125,000f. for the contest to take place in Paris in July or August.

STATE EXCISE REPORT.

Total collections, $12,643,593.64; County Treasurers' fees, $61,344.93, leaving a net balance for the fiscal year of $12,582,248.71. Of this amount the State's share was $4,231,231.06, and the cities and towns' share $8,351,017.65.

The report states that a review of the year's work shows a large increase of business in every branch. Rebates exceed those of last year, and have greatly increased each year since the law went into effect. The system adopted for their payment operates satisfactorily when correct surrender papers are furnished.

Excise litigation during the year has been varied, and covers 453 legal proceedings in which the department has been interested, 361 of which pertain to the fiscal year. Many decisions have been made by the courts sustaining important and essential provisions of the law.

More criminal convictions have been secured under the law than in any previous year. Slot machine gambling had special attention, and the efforts of the Commissioner to rid the State of this nuisance from places selling liquor have been uniformly successful and satisfactory. A large number of actions were brought against dealers maintaining these machines.

The statistics of arrests for drunkenness and public intoxication have been compiled for the fiscal year, and show a decrease as compared with previous years, under the present law, or under operation of the old excise law. This decrease since 1895 is 12,600, or 14 per cent., the percentage being only a little less than the percentage of decrease in drinking places.

Among other things, the report shows the amount collected in every city, town, and county in the State; the share of liquor tax revenue received by each town and city, and by the State; comparative tables showing results under the old and new laws; present rate of liquor tax in every locality; a digest and table of cases decided and reported under the liquor tax law, and a statement showing the result of the vote in every town on local option questions submitted.

EXCISE LAW AMENDMENTS.

One Prohibits Sale of Fancy Drinks in Department Stores.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman Nelson Henry of New York has introduced, by request, a bill amending the excise law which will prohibit the sale of fancy drinks, such as cocktails and cordials, in department stores in the Greater New York and other cities of the State, having a population of over 25,000.

Another amendment limits the number of licenses to the number that was in existence on Jan. 1, 1900.

Senator Mackey to-day introduced a bill amending the excise law, designed to protect an attorney who may have advanced money in a proceeding subsequent to the surrender of the liquor tax certificate. Under the proposed law the attorney would be enabled to recover the rebate now forfeited to the State.

ELECTION LAW PROSECUTIONS.

$20,000 Needed for Expenses of the Bureau—No Judge Yet Named.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—A bill will be introduced in the Legislature during the week at the request of State Superintendent of Elections McCullagh, asking for an appropriation of $20,000 to defray the expenses of the Bureau of Elections in prosecuting the cases of the persons already indicted for violating the election laws in New York City, to carry them through the year and the November election.

Chief Deputy Superintendent Van Dusen of the metropolitan election district conferred to-day with Gov. Roosevelt and Attorney General Davis regarding an assignment of a Justice of the Supreme Court in place of Justice Werner to try the persons indicted in New York City for violating the election law.

The case will come up at an extraordinary term of the Supreme Court, to be held in March. Justice Werner was to have presided, but he has since been elevated to the Court of Appeals bench. No decision was reached.

LAWS SIGNED BY THE GOVERNOR.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Gov. Roosevelt has signed Chapters III. and IV. of the Laws of 1900. They are:

Chapter III. Mr. Kelsey's bill legalizing a special election held at Lima, Livingston County, at which a bond issue for water works purposes was voted on.

LEGISLATURE'S PROCEEDINGS.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—In the Senate to-day Senator Ambler introduced a resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to pass a law providing that whenever any dairy or food products are imported from one State into another, or from any territory of the United States into another State or Territory, such goods, immediately upon coming into such State or Territory, shall become subject to the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though they had been manufactured within such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of the fact that they were imported or brought in in the original importer's package. The resolution was tabled.

The same resolution was offered in the Assembly by Mr. Witter, and was also tabled. Mr. Green offered an amendment that the Attorney General be instructed to proceed immediately against the violators of the law, and without settlement to proceed to trial for the collection of penalties.

These bills were passed in the Assembly: Mr. Allds—Increasing the salary of the Secretary of the Paris Exposition Commission from $2,500 to $5,000. Mr. Hill—Increasing the salary of the stenographer of the Erie County Court to $2,100.

Both the Senate and Assembly adjourned until Thursday at 11 A. M.

Injunctions in Labor Strikes.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Assemblyman S. F. Hyman of New York appeared before the Codes Committee of the Assembly to-day in favor of his bill to prohibit courts of law from issuing injunctions in labor strikes. Senator BROWN—Amending the Code of Civil Procedure so as to allow a Justice of the Supreme Court to grant an injunction order on Sunday when in his judgment it is necessary to prevent irremediable injury or the service of a summons with or without a compaint, if accompanied by an injunction order of such Justice permitting service on that day.

Senator BRACKETT—Amending the legislative law to provide that in the publication of the session laws, new or amended matter must be underscored, and the parts omitted placed in brackets in the same form as the bill when introduced.

Senator FORD—Making all police matrons, clerks, and Superintendents of boilers in the Police Department of New York City subject to the rules and regulations and all privileges of law relative to the police force.

Senator DOUGLAS—Giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to settle all claims arising in relation to money under the control of the State belonging to the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, or any individual Indian of that tribe or his descendants.

Senator MACKEY—Amending the Penal Code to provide that when the final award to any owner is less than $50 in proceedings, to condemn the right of way for telegraph poles and wires, he shall not be entitled to any costs in any action or proceeding that may be stayed, nor to any costs in the proceeding for the condemnation of real property.

Senator BROWN—Providing that cities of the second and third class shall make annual report to the Secretary of State of their financial condition, and directing the Secretary of State to report to the Legislature the feasibility of a system of uniform accounts for such cities.

Senator NORTON—Providing that sewage disposal works or plants in New York City shall be construed as being a part of a sewer, and the cost of constructing and erecting them shall be paid by local assessments on the property benefited, in the same way as the cost of constructing a sewer is now paid for in the City of New York. Power and authority to construct and maintain sewage disposal works are granted to the same authorities as the power to construct sewers.

Senator ELSBERG—Exempting from assessments of water rates the Emanu-El Sisterhood of Personal Service in the City of New York. Assessments and water rates heretofore imposed on the property are canceled and discharged.

In the Assembly.

Mr. IRWIN—Appropriating $4,000 for improvements to the Glens Falls feeder of the Champlain Canal.

Mr. GALE—Shortening the period in which county race meets may be held. Heretofore they were held from April 15 to Nov. 15. Mr. Gale's bill provides that they shall be held from May 1 to Nov. 1.

Mr. GALE—Amending the railroad law which prohibits railroad companies from uncoupling the engine or tender from any passenger train until the train has come to a full stop at the stations and the passengers have alighted therefrom.

Mr. REISEN—Providing that the boundaries of an election district in New York or Kings County may be changed at any time when the number of registered voters at any city election exceeds 600. Under existing law the boundaries of a district may not be changed except when the number exceeds 600 at an election for Governor.

Mr. MEISTER—Making it unlawful for any person, firm, association, or corporation, proprietor or lessee of any hotel, club, building, or premises, to receive money for the use of any public street or place in front of such places unless permission is granted by the Municipal Assembly designating it as a public hack stand. This is aimed at hotels in New York City which allow certain livery men a special right to stand in front of their places.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

D. O. Mills Elected a Director of the New York Central—Company Takes Over Lunchrooms.

D. O. Mills was elected to the Directorate of the New York Central and Hudson River Railway at a meeting of the Board of Directors at the Grand Central Station yesterday morning, succeeding Horace J. Hayden. Nine Directors were present at the meeting, the absentees being W. K. Vanderbilt, H. J. Hayden, Charles C. Clarke, and William Bliss. Mr. Mills is a Director of the Lake Shore and a large stockholder of the Erie Railroad.

It is announced that the retirement from the Directorate of Mr. Hayden will make no change in his position as Vice President of the Central, and that he will be retained in the office.

An important step decided upon at the meeting was the taking over by the company of all the dining and lunch rooms along the line of the Central between New York and Chicago. It is believed that better service will be afforded if the company itself controls and operates the dining rooms, which it is intended shall be operated in connection with the dining cars by the passenger department.

THE WESTERN MARYLAND ROAD.

Baltimore's Mayor Will Ask that Foreclosure Be Deferred.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 24.—Mayor Hayes, after a conference to-day with City Solicitor Carter, decided to ask the City Council to defer the contemplated foreclosure of the Western Maryland Railroad for a year, in order to protect the floating debt of the road.

About $225,000 of floating indebtedness will fall due within a short time. The railroad company professed its inability to meet the amount unless the city would promise to protect holders of obligations chargeable to this account. The city's law officers could not see their way clear to indorse any more paper of the railroad company, and thus the matter stands at present.

A resolution will probably be presented to the Council at its next meeting, on Monday, which will postpone any foreclosure or proceedings on the part of the city.

STEEL CARS FOR FRANCE.

War Department Plans to Use Them for Transport of Troops.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—The French Government has given to the Pressed Steel Car Company of Pittsburg an order for 100 steel freight cars for the Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean Railroad. The War Department of France is planning to equip the Government roads with steel cars that can be converted without difficulty into armored cars for use in the transportation of troops.

The results obtained in the use of these cars, which will be shipped to France in a short time, will determine the French Government's course of action in equipping all Government lines with steel cars. It is probable that orders for thousands will be placed in this country.

The order is the result of a visit to Chicago this week of Lucien Mareschal, Victor Peyras, and A. Paris, officials of the Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean Railroad, who are in charge of the rolling stock of the Government roads. The cars weigh 100,000 pounds each, and will be shipped in sections.

PROGRESS IN MANZANILLO.

Gen. Wood Finds a Clean City and Much Evidence of Prosperity.

MANZANILLO, Cuba, Jan. 24.—Governor General Wood, with his party, arrived here at noon to-day on the Ingalls and spent three hours this afternoon in inspecting the city, which, according to a census taken with considerable care since the American occupation, has a population of 14,000. He expressed himself as greatly gratified with the police record, which showed only two cases untried.

Later Gen. Wood started on an overland trip, accompanied by Gen. Chaffee, Col. Black and others, with an escort of the Tenth Cavalry. All the sugar estates of the neighborhood were found running on full time, and any person wanting work can obtain it in that locality. The public buildings are gradually taking on an aspect of prosperity, and everything in the city proper is looking so much better than it did when Col. Ray took control in October, 1898, that it is difficult to realize that the old and the new Manzanillo are the same.

The greatest cordiality exists between the Americans and the Cubans. The public works have given employment to thousands, and as a result the whole section is filled with small farmers, owning their land, oxen, and tools. There is no wasted charity. Here at least "indigent rations" are not given to people who do not need them. The only charitable organizations are an orphan asylum, a hospital, and a dispensary, free to poor persons.

From the beginning of April to the end of December 140,000 cart loads of refuse were removed. In December there were 14,000 cart loads removed as compared with 10,000 in April. Gen. Ludlow believes that this increase shows that the inhabitants are becoming accustomed to the idea of having rubbish removed regularly and of cleaning out their own premises instead of allowing an accumulation.

Havana Vital Statistics.

HAVANA, Jan. 24.—A complete report of the vital statistics of Havana for 1899 has just been issued. The deaths show an apparent excess over the births of about 4,000. Gen. Ludlow says, however, that a great many births were not recorded.

GRAND JURY AND COL. GARDINER

Explanation Regarding the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Case Investigation.

Col. Gardiner and Assistant District Attorney McIntyre went before the Grand Jury yesterday to explain to that body why a Special Grand Jury had been ordered for February to investigate the Brooklyn Rapid Transit case. This case was considered by the December Grand Jury, and the present Grand Jury has been anxious to take it up.

The Grand Jury later went into Part I. of the Court of General Sessions and the District Attorney went in, too, and, after the usual business had been transacted, addressed the Court and the Grand Jurors.

"It has come to me," he said, "that the Grand Jury is anxious to continue the work of the December Grand Jury in regard to certain illegal actions in stock transactions. Your Honor remembers his attention being called to the matter at that time. I thought then that it would be possible to get the proper evidence in time to lay it before the present Grand Jury.

"I regret to say that, so far, I have not received all of the necessary evidence. My office is not a detective agency, and I have to rely on others to get the requisite testimony. I expect that in three or four days this evidence will be on hand. It will require fully a month or six weeks to properly investigate the matter, and I don't think this Grand Jury can give it the proper time."

"Of course," said Judge McMahon, "if the evidence is not ready the gentlemen of the jury cannot investigate the matter."

James S. Curry, foreman of the Grand Jury, arose and said the jury looked to Judge McMahon for advice. "Several members," he said, "are desirous of taking up the case, but only through their anxiety to do their duty. We are willing to take the advice of the Court."

"My advice," said Judge McMahon, "is to be bound by the District Attorney."

ORDER OF BLESSED SACRAMENT.

Branch to be Established Here to Control Eucharistic League.

Archbishop Corrigan has announced that he will sanction the establishment of a body of the Order of the Priests of the Blessed Sacrament in this city. The order will have control of the People's Eucharistic League, which was founded four years ago, and has now about 13,000 members in this city and elsewhere.

The league was organized by the Rev. J. F. O'Connor of St. Francis Xavier's Church in connection with the League of the Sacred Heart. Later branches were formed in connection with St. Stephen's Church and St. Patrick's Cathedral, until now there are branches in many other cities. The object of the league is the perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament. Some time ago it was suggested that, as the organization had now grown to large proportions, it would be well to place it under the direct control of the Priests of the Blessed Sacrament. A meeting was held to discuss the subject at the home of Miss Anne Leary, at 3 Fifth Avenue, two days ago, and was attended by Archbishop Corrigan and many prominent priests and laymen. At this meeting the Archbishop announced that he would sanction the establishment of a branch of the Priests of the Blessed Sacrament in this diocese. A number of members of the order will arrive here next fall from Montreal. A house will be rented for them until a church and rectory can be built.

Crowd Thought He Struck Woman Who Was Hurt by His Vehicle.

While crossing the street at Lexington Avenue and Twenty-third Street at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, Miss Mary McCabe, fifty-one years old, of 1,212 Lexington Avenue, was knocked down by a cab. She received a scalp wound and a severe shock, and was taken to a doorway nearby. Some one sent in a hurry call to Bellevue for an ambulance, and two ambulances responded. A policeman also called an ambulance from St. Vincent's Hospital. All three ambulances appeared simultaneously, and a big crowd was attracted.

The crowd surrounded the injured woman, who was holding an earnest conversation with the driver. The latter, who was gesticulating with his whip in hand, created the impression that he had struck the woman with the whip. An outcry was raised against him and he was greatly frightened. The woman's injuries were attended to, but she refused to go to a hospital. The cab driver was arrested.

FOR THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

A map showing the property which must be taken by the city for the towers and anchorages of the proposed East River bridge which will extend from Pike Slip, Manhattan, to Washington Street, Broklyn, was filed with the Board of Public Improvements yesterday.

As the new bridge is to be 160 feet wide, it will be necessary for the city to take a strip of land of that width on both sides of the river. On the Manhattan side the land required for anchorage will include practically all of the north end of the block bounded by Monroe, Cherry, Market, and Pike Streets. Besides this the northerly end of the block bounded by Pike Slip, Cherry Water, and Market Streets must be taken and also a part of the block bounded by Pike Slip, Water, South, and Market Streets, Piers 40 and 41 will also be needed.

On the Brooklyn side the block occupied by the Moquin-Offerman-Heissenbuttel Coal Company will be taken, together with the open dock which belongs to the same firm. This land is required for the Brooklyn tower. Besides this, the south end of the block bounded by Plymouth, Pearl, Water, and Adams Streets, the north end of the block bounded by Adams, Washington, Water, and Plymouth Streets, and practically the entire block bounded by Adams, Water, Front, and Pearl Streets will be needed. On this latter block the anchorage will be located.

The purpose of the map is to enable the Board of Public Improvements to direct the beginning of condemnation proceedings whenever the Corporation Counsel is ready to proceed.

New England Women Meet.

Mrs. Henry Clark Coe, as President of the National Society of New England Women, gave a reception yesterday afternoon in the red ballroom at Delmonico's. There was a large attendance of members and their friends, who enjoyed an attractive musical programme as well as some of Mrs. Gielow's inimitable character recitations. Miss Florence de Vere Boese, Mrs. Lawrence Earle, and Master Harold Salter sang, Miss Mary Henry rendered a violin solo. Mrs. Henry M. Gielow gave a plantation life dialect reading and the "New England Seamstress" for her impersonations.

TEST PARTNERSHIP CASE.

Court Denies Good-Will Claim of ex-Clerk and Partner of Heilbut, Symons & Co.

A test case regarded as of importance to business men, in which the contention was that if a long established concern took a clerk into partnership, it could not, on the expiration of such partnership, continue to use its long established name or carry on its business without paying the retiring partner for his good will and interest in the name and business, was decided adversely to the plaintiff by Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court, yesterday. The case was that of Meyer against Reimers and Heilbut, Symons & Co.

Heilbut, Symons & Co. of London, dealers in crude rubber, with agencies all through South America, have a selling agency in this city, and, in accordance with a custom of the firm whereby agents are taken into partnership in the various branch businesses, Arthur Meyer and Herman Reimers became partners in the New York branch several years ago, and put money of their own into the business. This partnership expired by limitation on Jan. 31, 1899, and Richard Delafield was appointed liquidator by the firm, in conjunction with Messrs. Meyer and Reimers. The assets of the branch amounted to over $2,000,000, it is said.

Heilbut, Symons & Co. renewed the partnership agreement with Mr. Reimers, but not with Mr. Meyer, whereupon the latter obtained an injunction restraining the other liquidators from disposing of the assets, and applied for the appointment of a receiver.

Under the terms of the partnership contract, it had been agreed that on the limited partnership being ended, Heilbut, Symons & Co. would be entitled to assume sole control of the business, or to constitute another limited partnership, as they deemed fit.

Mr. Reimers, in his affidavit, stated that Mr. Meyer had first demanded $120,000 for his interest in the good will and then offered to settle for $60,000.

Justice Andrews held that Heilbut, Symons & Co. had a right to form a new partnership when the former contract expired by limitation, and that no claim for good will could be established. He therefore denied the motion for a receiver and dissolved the injunction.

KRAEMER'S HOUSE ELEVATOR.

Used Once, It Injured His Nurse—The Maker's Suit.

Anton Larson, a manufacturer of elevators, has, through his lawyers, Tansky & Lesser, had William Kraemer of 524 West One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street served with a complaint in the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien of $500 upon property worth $60,000. Kraemer has filed a general denial.

Kraemer, who was formerly proprietor of the Atlantic Garden and the Thalia Theatre, and is an invalid, had an elevator constructed last July outside of his residence. The elevator was designed to take Mr. Kraemer from his room to the family dining room. One entrance opened upon the driveway, so that he could be taken also from his room to his carriage. The day following the installation of the elevator, Mr. Kraemer's nurse was injured while operating it. The elevator was not used after that, and was not paid for. Last October Messrs. Tansky & Lesser secured a mechanic's lien on the property, for the foreclosure of which the present action is taken.

LEGAL NOTES.

LIABILITY FOR TRESPASS THOUGH WITHOUT NEGLIGENCE.—While Annie E. Harten, nineteen years of age, was traveling on a public highway near Irvington, Westchester County, on the 10th of June, 1895, she was killed by a blow from a section of a tree which fell upon her, after it had been hurled more than 400 feet by a blast of dynamite which had been exploded under the roots of a large elm tree. Between this tree and the highway was some woodland. In a suit by Mary Sullivan, as administratrix, against Carroll Dunham, the owner of the land, and Theodore H. Dinkel and Philip Jewell, whom he had employed to blast out this and other trees, a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff on the first trial was reversed by the Second Appellate Division, on account of erroneous rulings, but the judgment rendered in her favor on the second trial was unanimously affirmed, and has now been sustained by the Court of Appeals. Judge Vann, who gives the Court's unanimous opinion, holds that the defendants were liable, the act which caused the killing being a trespass, and it mattered not that the defendants acted without negligence or want of skill in performing the work.

NEGLIGENCE OF MOTORMAN.—John Costello, a child eight years old, who was living with his mother in the vicinity, was run over by a Third Avenue car at Ninety-ninth Street about noon of a pleasant day in the Summer of 1895, receiving injuries of a very serious character, one leg having been amputated above the knee. Other severe wounds were inflicted. The car was proceeding up town, and a covered wagon, going in the same direction, was in front of it, on the same track. The motorman was engaged in an altercation with the driver of the wagon because the latter was obstructing the car's progress. At Ninety-ninth Street the wagon turned off to the east. At this instant the motorman, who was still engaged in the dispute, without turning his face from the east to view the track, caused the car to shoot forward with violence and at a rapid rate. The boy was then crossing diagonally toward his mother's house and was struck by the car. The Trial Court dismissed the boy's suit against the Third Avenue Railroad for damages, holding that he was guilty of contributory negligence, as matter of law. The Court of Appeals, reversing an affirmance of the judgment below by the Appellate Division of the First Department, recently decided, in an opinion by Judge Bartlett, Judge Gray dissenting, that the boy not being admitted to be sui juris, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury, taking into account his age and intelligence. The act of the motorman in projecting his car suddenly and rapidly forward in the crowded thoroughfare, and while looking in another direction, thus causing the injury, was held to be an act of negligence, for the consequence of which the company might be held liable.

LAND UNLAWFULLY TAKEN.—Sarah J. Singer, who was the owner of four lots bounded on the east side by Church Street and on the south by Weber's Lane, in this city, brought suit against the city to assert her title to a strip of land which had been taken by the Board of Education for school purposes. Weber's Lane had been laid out by the former owner of the land, on the division of the premises into lots and streets in 1847. It had been fenced on each side 33 feet wide. In 1877 the Department of Parks filed a map indicating a new street 60 feet wide, along Weber's Lane. That street, which was never opened, if named, was called Two Hundred and Thirty-second Street, but no change was made in the location of Weber's Lane or in its use, and Mrs. Singer occupied the land up to the fence. A condemnation proceeding by the Board of Education which was begun in 1892, described the lands to be condemned as being 200 feet on the north side on Church Street and 150 feet on Weber's Lane, and the line on Weber's Lane was indicated by the street line, which was marked, "Present line of Weber's Lane." The Board of Education, after the confirmation of the report, entered into possession of the premises, and in doing so made the southerly line of the property to correspond with the line of the street laid out on the map of 1877, which was 13 feet 6 inches north of the fence along the lane, thus taking a strip of land 13 feet 6 inches on the north side and 150 feet east and west, which was claimed by the plaintiff to be outside of the boundary of the land condemned. The Appellate Division, in an opinion by Justice Rumsey, now holds that the land described in the petition of the Board of Education and taken in the condemnation proceedings, had for its southern boundary the fence as it then existed on the north side of Weber's Lane. The street indicated on the map as being 60 feet wide, with the north line 13 feet 6 inches north of the fence, was not Weber's Lane, but when named was Two Hundred and Thirty-second Street, and the boundaries of Weber's Lane were never changed by this map. The laying out of the new street had no effect upon the rights of the plaintiff to the land which happened to be included within it. Therefore, there was no doubt, upon the undisputed facts, that the southern boundary of this land, which was fixed by the description at the north side of the present line of Weber's Lane, must be deemed to have extended to the lane as it was then fenced and occupied. It was therefore held that instead of a verdict having been ordered for the defendant, the verdict, upon the undisputed facts, should have been ordered for the plaintiff.

A SWORD FOR WAINWRIGHT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24. — Commander Richard Wainwright, who was in charge of the Gloucester, the yacht Corsair, at the battle of Santiago, was presented a sword of honor and a silver service by a committee representing the citizens of the District of Columbia in the Columbia Theatre this afternoon. The theatre was filled with a fashionable audience of official and resident society, and the presentation was made under the shadow of the Stars and Stripes twined with the pennant that flew from the masthead of the Gloucester on the day of the battle.

President McKinley and Secretaries Hay and Gage and Gen and Mrs. Miles occupied boxes. Secretary Long and Admiral Dewey had seats on the stage with Commander Wainwright, immediately behind whom were the officers of the Gloucester in full uniform. President McKinley was warmly received as he came into the house, and Admiral Dewey was given an ovation as, escorted by the committee, he accompanied Secretary Long and Commander Wainwright to the stage. After a formal presentation speech by F. P. B. Sands, representing the committee, he handed the sword to Secretary Long, who, presenting the gift to Commander Wainwright, said:

"There is a roll of honor, Commander Wainwright, which is known as that of the bravest of the brave. On that imperishable roll your name has been written by your countrymen. In token of your title I present to you, to have and to hold, and to hand down to your boy, this sword, the loving gift of your many friends."

Commander Wainwright responded briefly to the Secretary's remarks, expressing thanks for the gift, and giving credit to the officers and men of the Gloucester for the work that had been done. The committee also presented to the commander a silver service, the presentation address being made by George H. Harries of this city.

Commander Wainwright is a resident of Washington, and the money necessary for the purchase of the gifts was raised among the citizens here.

The mountings of the sword, which was made by Tiffany & Co., New York, are entirely of solid gold. On the top of the pommel is a single silver oak leaf and foul anchor, the symbol of the Commander's rank, and around the edge are chased thirteen stars. Immediately below and on the forte of the hilt are the American eagle and the coat of arms of the District of Columbia. The grip is of white shark skin, bound with a band of gold sea shells. The guard is formed of dolphins and a sea nymph chased in full relief; upon the broad portion of the guard is shown the United States steamship Gloucester, accurately modeled in low relief, and upon the opposite side, in raised letters, "Santiago de Cuba, July 3, 1898."

The scabbard is of black steel damascened in gold with a decoration of dolphins and tridents, and further ornamented by three richly chased solid gold bands, composed of anchors, oak leaves, and laurel.

The blade is of fine steel, with an inscription damascened in gold and a succession of torpedo boats, suggesting the Furor and Pluton, as a fitting ornament. The belt and trappings conform in all respect to the regulations.

DOWN BANK WITH A TOMBSTONE.

Thomas Kavanagh of the contracting firm of Kavanagh & Sharkey of this city was hurt in a peculiar manner yesterday. He was attending a funeral in Calvary Cemetery, and leaned against a tombstone standing at the head of a grave. Back of the stone was a steep terrace.

A short distance away men were blasting. A heavy blast was set off, and the shock threw the tombstone from its base, and it and Mr. Kavanagh rolled down the embankment. Mr. Kavanagh was considerably bruised.

MADE HOMELESS BY FIRE.

Fifty Families in a Colorado Town Are Without Shelter.

BOULDER, Col., Jan. 24.—A large part of the town of Ward, a mining camp in the mountains fifteen miles from this city, was destroyed by fire to-day. The mills and mines just outside the town were not damaged, however.

A fire broke out also in Lafayette, about twelve miles from this city, and spread rapidly before a high wind. Lafayette is the principal coal mining camp in Northern Colorado.

The loss at Ward is estimated at $75,000 and at Lafayette $100,000. About fifty families in Lafayette are homeless, and there is no place in the town to afford them shelter.

SUES SEWING MACHINE COMPANY

Chicago Woman Claims $100,000 for Use of Her Invention.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Suit for $100,000 has been commenced by Miss Angelica R. Thomas against the Union Special Sewing Machine Company for alleged breach of contract. Miss Thomas claims to be the inventor of a ruffling device which accomplishes mechanical effects heretofore only obtainable by difficult handwork.

She alleges that she entered into a contract with the sewing machine company to manufacture machines embodying the invention, and that after they had made one machine for her they commenced making and selling them independently of her contract.

COUNTERFEITERS WORK IN JAIL.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 24.—The Virginia Penitentiary authorities are puzzled over the discovery that counterfeit nickels are in circulation within the prison walls. They are satisfied that they are made in the institution, but so far have not been able to find the plant, or connect any particular prisoner with the work.

The execution of the counterfeits is good. The theory is that the mold or molds were made in the shoe shops by taking impression of a genuine nickel in wet leather, but where the metal came from the officials have no idea. As the prisoners use oil stoves in their cells, the melting can be accounted for. It is stated that some of the counterfeits have gotten into circulation outside of the prison. A rigid investigation is being conducted.

VON HOLLEBEN IN CHICAGO.

German Ambassador the Guest of the University.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Gay students and grave professors turned out at the University of Chicago to-day to greet Baron von Holleben, German Ambassador to the United States, who was the guest of the university. Enthusiasm over the diplomatic guest reached its height when 1,000 university people assembled in Kent Theatre. The Ambassador was escorted from Haskell Hall to the theatre by the University Band in uniform, the Glee Club, and the members of the Faculty attired in cap and gown. His entrance into Kent Theatre, accompanied by President Harper, was the signal for wild cheering from the dense mass of students present.

Dr. von Holleben was welcomed to the university by Prof. J. Laurence Laughlin, who spoke of the great debt owed by America to the German patriots, authors, and scientists who found a home in the United States and aided in the development of the Nation.

The Baron responded by expressing his gratification at the cordial reception awarded him. He then told about the German universities, drawing a comparison between them and the universities of America.

The Ambassador will leave for Washington Friday.

Twenty-third Regiment Colonelcy.

It was said at the Twenty-third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn yesterday that Col. William Cary Sanger would not be a candidate for the Colonelcy of the regiment. The name of Col. Sanger had been frequently mentioned in connection with the matter of a successor to Col. Alexis C. Smith. Col. Sanger, it is said, could not find it convenient to accept the command of the regiment if it were offered to him. Col. Willis L. Ogden is being talked of as a probable successor to Col. Smith.

THIEF A WOMAN'S PRISONER.

Plucky and Keen-Witted Mrs. Herdling Tackled the Intruder on the Stairs and Held Him.

Through the quick wit of a woman, a man believed by the police to be an experienced burglar was caught in the five-story apartment house at 202 West Eighty-second Street last evening. Mrs. Charles Herdling, who lives on the top floor, is the heroine of the adventure.

She was going out, when she passed a dapper, rather goodlooking man on the stairs going up. He carried a small box wrapped in paper under his arm. Mrs. Herdling was robbed about a month ago, and ever since has been suspicious of strangers she encounters in the house. She challenged the man and demanded his business. "I have a package to deliver," he said, and passed up. Mrs. Herdling counted the flights and found that he had gone to the top.

She next heard him rapping on the door. She called up that there was nobody home, but getting no answer, went up to investigate, whereupon he descended two flights and rapped on the door there. There was nobody in that apartment, and the man attempted to go down another flight. Mrs. Herdling quick as a flash grabbed the box, opened it, found that it was empty, and then pluckily collared the man. So quickly had she acted that he had been unable to get away. He struggled violently and gave Mrs. Herdling several blows in the face, but she held to him, screaming for help all the while.

Janitor Henry Bolden heard her cries and ran to her assistance. He caught the intruder, and held him while Mrs. Herdling fetched Policeman John Bevins, who placed the man under arrest. As he was taking him from the place Detectives Deering and Day passed by. At their suggestion the fellow was searched. Two burglar's jummies, several skeleton keys, a number of watches, chains, and rings, and other articles were found on him; also $30 in money. The prisoner gave his name as David Wood, twenty-three years old, but declined to say where he lived. At the station he changed his name to George Wolf. He told Acting Captain Kear that he lived last in a Bowery lodging house. He professed not to know which one, nor could he tell its approximate location. He said he came to this city but a short time ago, but knows little about it. The Bowery lodging houses were searched to prove his claim, without success.

Clarence P. Smith of 105 West Sixty-eighth Street called at the West Sixty-eighth Street Station and identified a pencil and a gold bracelet found on the prisoner as his property. He said his house had been broken into during the afternoon in the family's absence. The two articles identified were the only things missed. There was more than $1,000 of valuable stuff lying about. He thought the thief was frightened away in some manner.

Several apartments on the upper west side have recently been robbed, and the police think their prisoner is the thief. They give Mrs. Herdling much credit for her pluck and excellent judgment. When she saw her prisoner was in safe keeping she coolly continued on the mission for which she was leaving the house, which was to make a call.

WANT TO GET CHEAPER PAPER.

DENVER, Jan. 24.—The Colorado Editorial Association, just adjourned, has stirred all Western newspaper publishers to action by adopting resolutions demanding of Congress that it repeal the tariff on wood pulp and all materials entering into the manufacture of white print paper. The resolutions adopted are broad and far-reeaching. They pledge the association to oppose for re-election any member or Senator in Congress who does not favor the immediate repeal of the duties mentioned.

To the end that all the newspapers in America shall have a voice in this matter, the association appointed a committee, consisting of T. M. Patterson, F. J. Arkins, and K. G. Cooper, to issue a call to the publishers, inviting the publishers of America to send representatives to the National Editorial Association, which meets in the City of New Orleans Feb. 26, during Mardi Gras, for the purpose of taking part in the discussion for the removal of such tariffs.

TO BRING HOME THE ALBANY.

Commander Joseph E. Craig sailed yesterday on the American liner New York to bring back the cruiser Albany, which is at the Armstrong yards, Newcastle, where the ship will be turned over to the United States Government in a few weeks. Commander Craig was accompanied by Lieut. V. Mohun, Assistant Paymaster.

The Albany was purchased from Chile just before the war with Spain. The entire crew, 240 men and eighteen officers, will sail from here on the steamer Prairie. The executive officer of the Albany will be Lieut. George F. W. Holman, formerly of the Maine, and the navigator will be Lieut. Albert G. Winterhalter. Commander Craig was formerly in command of the Concord, but during the late war he was in the Hydrographic Bureau, Washington, having succeeded Capt. Sigsbee. He said he did not know how soon he would be able to bring the Albany over. She will come to New York.

MR. HAYES WILL APPEAL.

John C. Hayes, against whom a judgment of $20,000 damages was awarded on Monday for the alienation of the affections of the wife of Frederick C. Hinkle, says he was very unjustly treated. He and his wife, formerly Mrs. Hinkle, are staying at the Hotel Washington, Jersey City. He did not put in a defense, he says, because he was assured that the trial would be adjourned. He said:

"The trial was postponed from time to time by the other side until my essential witnesses were all out of the way. If I had not been assured that the case would be postponed I would have been there. I have an absolutely good defense. Hinkle knew his wife had no affection for him, and he had neglected her.

"I met my wife three years ago. After Hinkle got a divorce I immediately married her. I intend to take an appeal. I am not a Wall Street broker as has been represented. I am in the insurance business. I have not been a member of the New York Athletic Club in a long time."

HEBREW ORPHAN ASYLUM BALL.

The seventeenth annual ball in aid of the Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum was held last evening in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Previous to the opening of the ball the asylum band, composed of orphan boys, rendered a fine concert.

The ball was opened with a general promenade, led by Moses May. The attendance was very large, and the decorations of the ballroom were both novel and beautiful.

Among those present were County Judge William B. Hurd, District Attorney John F. Clarke, Abraham Abrahams, ex-Sheriff William J. Buttling, Justices John Courtney, Patrick J. Keady, and Howard J. Forker; Congressman Mitchell May, ex-Congressman Israel B. Fischer, Warden Patrick Hayes, Jacob Bauland, Herman Newman, Leopold Michel, Emanuel Weil, Louis Firuski, Benjamin Croner, Lawrence Abraham, M. H. Straus, J. Wechsler, S. F. Rothschild, A. J. Piddean, Ferdinand Reiss, and Albert Stern.

Old Guard Ball To-night.

The Old Guard Ball will take place to-night at the Metropolitan Opera House. The arrangements are on an elaborate scale, and there is every prospect that the affair will be the most successful one in the history of the organization. In the grand military march, led by Major S. Ellis Briggs, will be seen the members of the Old Guard and the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston and many well-known army officers.

For the Anthony Memorial Fund.

An entertainment will be given this evening at Chickering Hall for the benefit of the Bill Anthony Memorial Home Fund, out of which it is proposed to build a home for the widow of the Maine marine. Among those who will take part are Aunt Louisa Eldridge and Miss Nettie Van Sickle, who will recite. The guests of honor include Admiral Philip and staff, Capt. Sigsbee, Major Gen. Roe, Gen. Delafield, Lieut. Col. G. V. Greene, Chaplain Chidwick, and Mayor Van Wyck.

Ex-Minister Phelps Very Ill.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 24.—E. J. Phelps, ex-Minister to Great Britain, is ill with pneumonia at his residence on Whitney Avenue. His physician announced to-day that, while his patient is a very sick man, his condition is not yet serious. He has been suffering from a severe cold for several days and yesterday pneumonia developed. His condition to-day, however, is taking no alarming turn.

VETERAN IS EATEN BY WOLVES.

Portion of His Dead Body Found Near a Michigan Logging Camp.

DETROIT, Jan. 24.—A letter was received here to-night stating that John Smith, a former resident of this city, had been devoured by wolves a short distance from a logging camp, where he was employed near Presque Ile, in Presque Ile County. The letter states he strayed from the camp in the early evening, and the next morning his partially devoured body was found in the snow.

That he fought desperately for his life is evidenced by the bloody snow and the carcass of a wolf that was found close to the body. Smith was a veteran of the Spanish-American war, and was quite well-to-do.

BURGLAR LEAPED FROM WINDOW

A burglar got into the rooms of Adolph Silverwitz, a tailor, on the second floor of 6 Allen Street, yesterday morning, and after eluding all the tenants in the house, who had been awakened by the noise he made, escaped by jumping from the window into the rear yard.

Emily Silverwitz, who is seventeen years old, was awakened by a man in her room. She saw the burglar feeling through the pockets of her brother Louis, who sleeps in the same room. Her screams aroused all the other tenants of the house, and when the burglar started to run down the stairs he found them crowded with people coming up to see what was the matter. He ran back into the room, and made a rush for the window, but Louis Silverwitz caught him. The burglar, however, threw him aside, and jumped out of the window.

HORACE BOIES FOR PRESIDENT.

Said to be the Man on Whom All Democrats Can Unite.

WATERLOO, Iowa, Jan. 24.—Horace Boies, as the Democratic nominee for President, is the suggestion of S. H. Bashor. Those who know the close relations existing between the two men regard the declaration as a practical announcement of his candidacy by Mr. Boies himself. In discussing the question to-day, Mr. Bashor said:

"Horace Boies was the ablest Governor Iowa ever had. On National questions he has shown a grasp and insight that time and events are proving accurate. Men who want a sound currency can find no objection to him or his ideas on bimetallism. Western men love, honor, and trust him, and Eastern men have no fear of him. He is the man upon whom all the great mass of Democrats can unite. He will poll a vote in the North and West that Mr. Bryan can never touch, and there is no Democratic sentiment in the East that cannot be enthusiastically for him.

"Mr. Bryan is only forty. If he is the statesman his friends think, he will ripen and grow with age, and years hence will be better than now. But Horace Boies is the man of the day and hour, and the Democrats of the Nation need him, can unite on him, and I believe will call him."

MARKET CONDITIONS.

The stock market yesterday waited upon news from London bearing upon the progress of the campaign in South Africa. And for the reason that nothing definite was forthcoming speculation halted and transactions were comparatively few. Operators were not inclined further to extend their commitments pending the results of a battle which might turn the speculative tide as readily against them as in their favor.

But though the speculative spirit lagged, it was a gratifying fact, and evidence of some underlying substantial strength in the market, that alarmists' rumors of a kind that on previous days had been made to do more or less ruinous work were ignored; nor could all the efforts of professional calamity howlers gain for them serious attention. One of the reasons for this undoubtedly was the comparative strength of the London market, which refused to be affected, even though its fortnightly settlement was begun. The result was that prices here opened not only firm, but in some cases higher than the closing figures of the night previous, and, though with more or less irregularity, continued comparatively strong throughout the day, with net changes generally for the better.

***

Railroad stocks were helped by the election of Mr. D. O. Mills to the Directorate of the New York Central and the announcement that he had also entered the board of the Southern Pacific. The financial world sees much that is significant in the more active participation in railroad matters of such a leader as Mr. Mills, and predictions are not lacking that developments of consequence affecting not alone these two roads, but others more or less intimately connected, are not far distant. The publication of the largely increased earnings of St. Paul for the third week in January had inspiriting effect also, following so closely upon the pessimistic wails of those sundry individuals who see only decreased earnings before the railroads of the country.

***

Steel stocks, also, were better, thanks both to the continuing excellent trade conditions and to the knowledge that with largely increased earnings, dividends, where begun, are surer of continuance; where expected, nearer of realization. Announcements of fresh foreign orders were contributory to the better tone.

***

Yet the market—save and except in respect to war rumors—was in some respects almost too easily influenced and showed clearly its feverishness. For instance, Metropolitan Railway stocks advanced over 2 points, Manhattan 1, and Third Avenue ¾ on vague and indefinite reports of a hitch in the proposed building of the Rapid Transit tunnel. On the day previous the Street had been arguing that the building of the tunnel would probably benefit one, if not all, of the local traction roads. Yesterday it was arguing that the failure to build would likewise help! Wherein is made manifest the Street's delightful consistency.

***

The continued demand for bonds and the excellent investment buying are among the hopeful signs in the market.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE STOCK MARKET.

(From a Special Contributor.)

If one sets out to ascertain from the men of "the Street" the underlying cause of the present dull and inactive state of the stock market, he will encounter difficulty. He is likely to conclude that the explanation of the supposed expert is little better than that of the lay observer. He will be most frequently told that the condition is merely one of suspense, of waiting for developments, and that the chief cause of uncertainty is the war in South Africa. Money has been flowing into New York since the beginning of the year, and is to be had in plenty on fairly easy terms, but it is not showing itself much on the Stock Exchange because it is uncertain whether the next battle in Natal or Cape Colony will result favorably to the British or the Boers. It is admitted that it cannot make any difference with the real value of the securities dealt in here, but it will have an effect in the London market, and variations in prices there will affect prices here, and so our people await the turn of events.

This seems like an explanation which does not explain. The South African war, with all its uncertainties, was going on five or six weeks ago, and there was a good deal of activity in the stock market of a kind. The real difference must lie in something else. The conservative banker, who deals with investments and scorns speculation, has a different explanation. Money may be plenty for loaning purposes, but the "dear public," who mostly furnish the funds for the game on the Stock Exchange, do not operate with borrowed money, and in the December activity they got pretty well cleaned out by selling on a falling market what they had bought for a rise. They are waiting to recuperate, and the market is left to the professional traders who watch for events that will set quotations moving, whether they are to occur in South Africa or the office of a gas company.

Disregarding the expert opinions of those who are in the midst of things on the Street, the studious observer may venture to see some general cause for the prevailing dullness which does not depend upon Gen. Buller or Gen. Joubert. In the early part of last year, when money was plenty and cheap and the hopefulness born of renewed prosperity was fresh and buoyant, there was great activity and advancing prices in the stock market. There was much promoting and exploiting, and frequent launching of new "securities." Speculation was rife and risks were taken. In short, the business was overdone, and toward the end of the year reaction came. Just when money was in full use and loaners demanded high rates and good security, there was much liquidating of expanded obligations under the pressure of a falling market. A good many people were badly squeezed and left feeling sore. A wholesome lesson had been taught, and the part of the public that is given to dabbling in stocks is still ruminating upon it.

There is more money here seeking investment than for some months past, and it can be borrowed on easier terms, but there is a lack of last year's eagerness. Investments are being made and there is considerable activity in the bond market. That is a healthy sign, for these are mostly real securities affording an assured and calculable income. So the shares of railroads which make reports of their business and make no secret of their financial condition are inactive because they are held for investment, and there is no immediate reason for their changing hands. They fluctuate little, and are not much speculated in. Those held in London may be affected from day to day by the turn of events in South Africa, and that will cause a little agitation in our market, but the general dullness is hardly due to those uncertainties. People are not waiting so much on account of the war as on account of a general condition at home. The professional speculators are doing what they can to manipulate the stocks of which the value is uncertain, and are turning to the best account war rumors and reports and agitating events, but the outside public is not heeding them much. The people are attending to business and investing more quietly than they were last year, and it is better for them. A. K. F.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC'S AFFAIRS.

Of late Wall Street has heard much of pending developments of consequence to Southern Pacific. The purchase of the Stanford, Crocker, and Hubbard holdings by the Huntington-Speyer syndicate was regarded as the initial step in the movement, while, later, the buying of Southern Pacific stock at C. P. Huntington's advice by E. H. Harriman and Jacob H. Schiff, representing Union Pacific, was looked upon as no less consequential.

But significant as these developments appear, yesterday developed others which financiers and railroad men regard as equally significant. One of these is the announcement by President Huntington that Mr. D. O. Mills—who was yesterday elected to the New York Central Directorate—has been admitted to the Southern Pacific Board; that Mr. John W. Mackay will also join the board, and that the changes are due to the fact that holdings of the stock of the company have lately changed hands.

"It is a fact," said Mr. Huntington yesterday, "that Mr. Mills is now a Director of our company, and that Mr. Mackay will shortly become a Director also. There recently has been a change in the holdings of the stock of the company, and new interests have come in.

"Mr. Mills and Mr. Mackay are in sympathy with the plans for development which I have mapped out for the Southern Pacific, and which are going steadily ahead. I am very well satisfied with the outlook, and have every confidence in the future.

"As to the talk of a transcontinental trunk line, I do not think we will see one running through from New York to San Francisco for some time, although in a more limited sense of the word it might be said there are several transcontinental trunk lines now."

Exactly what are the plans of Southern Pacific development to which he referred Mr. Huntington did not disclose; but it is looked upon as more than a coincidence that the entrance of Mr. Mills into the Central Directorate should follow so closely after his election to the Southern Pacific Board.

OHIO SOFT COAL ROADS.

Nothing but favorable news comes concerning the condition and earnings of the Ohio soft-coal roads. From Columbus yesterday it was said that the statement of the Hocking Valley for the third week in January will probably be a record breaker in the history of the road, while of the Wheeling and Lake Erie the news is also especially favorable. In the third week of the present month the Wheeling Road increased its earnings at the rate of over $2,000 a day, while since July 1 the increase has been $238,970 and the total earnings $1,428,280.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit was strong yesterday on buying by Flower brokers and houses reported to be purchasing for Standard Oil interests. During the day further stories of new interests in the Directorate of the company were heard, this time the names mentioned being those of E. H. Harriman and H. H. Porter, the latter being said to be slated for the Chairmanship of the board. It was also said that while D. O. Mills will not enter the board, he will be represented by his personal nominee.

But, as on previous days, no definite information in the matter could be had. At the office of Flower & Co., a member of the firm said: "Wait and see."

FOREIGN ORDER FOR CARS.

A report from Chicago that the French Government has given to the Pressed Steel Car Company an order for 100 steel freight cars for the Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean Railroad is officially confirmed at the offices of the company here. The order, concerning which correspondence has been passing for some time, was placed a few days ago, and the contract price is in the neighborhood of $100,000. Delivery will be made within two months.

DIVIDEND INCREASED.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Twin City Rapid Transit Company yesterday, a dividend of 1½ per cent. upon the common stock, payable Feb. 15, was declared. This is an advance of ½ per cent. over the dividend declared in August, 1899, which was the first paid by the company.

President Thomas Lowry, discussing the affairs of the company, says that its condition is satisfactory in every sense of the word.

DISCOUNT THE FUTURE.

The strength of American Steel and Wire yesterday, marked by a rise of nearly three points, was due to a revival of the reports of action on the common stock dividend to be taken at the meeting of the company Jan. 29. It is also said that a pool has been made to force the quotation higher.

SUGAR'S FLUCTUATIONS.

Sugar was neither weak nor strong yesterday, the quotation moving up and down spasmodically and with little apparent reason either for the decline or for the appreciation. Boston was a seller of the stock.

WHAT THE NEGOTIATIONS MEAN.

In connection with the denial by Senator Depew, who is a Director both of Union Pacific and of Northwest, that there is any truth in the report that Northwest will lease Union Pacific Wall Street now hears that the negotiations which have been going on between officials of the roads have looked simply to a renewal of the recently expired traffic arrangement which had existed for years.

GRANGER STOCKS ACTIVE.

The Granger roads continued strong yesterday on reports that the farmers would soon begin to send their crops forward, while there was added a better feeling by reason of the published statement of earnings of St. Paul which showed an increase in the third week of January of $89,200, and since July 1 of $2,352,770.

PAN HANDLE'S DIVIDEND.

The declaration by the Pan Handle Directors yesterday of a semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent. on the preferred stock places that stock definitely upon a 4 per cent. basis. No dividend on the common can be paid until the full 4 per cent. on the preferred is paid. The earnings of the road for eleven months of the current fiscal year show a net increase of $236,830. The total net earnings for the year, it is said, should be about $2,250,000, which will show about 2 per cent. earned on the common stock.

FEDERAL STEEL GOES UP.

In anticipation of the promised declaration on Feb. 13 of a further dividend on the common stock, Federal Steel, which latterly has been somewhat weak, yesterday was well supported by strong inside interests, who speak confidently of the outlook.

ABSORBING THE STOCK.

The pool buying of Missouri Pacific, which on Tuesday seemed to have ceased, was renewed yesterday. In this connection it is said that within the present week one Stock Exchange house has absorbed fully 15,000 shares of the stock.

IRON AND METAL TRADES.

Discussing the condition of the iron and metal trades, The Iron Age will to-day say:

"The present is a trying time for both sellers and buyers, since both are pretty far apart and there is practically a deadlock in nearly all the branches of the trades. Buyers have the encouragement which may come from the fact that there are some signs of yielding prices. Sellers hold that, considering the fact that the severest test is applied to values at this season of the year, the markets show great inherent strength, which in the opinion of many of them may develop into a further upward movement.

"In some departments of the iron trade values are upheld by main strength by leading interests, always a method which breeds suspicion and caution. Much is deservedly made of the fact that a very large tonnage is booked for a long time to come, but professions of this kind are perhaps too freely discounted by buyers when they find that sellers follow them only too closely by a willingness to meet requirements even for the first half of the year.

"The result is a nervous tension which makes the trade unusually watchful as to developments whose tendency is not very pronounced as yet. Consumption seems very heavy still, to judge from the manner in which deliveries are taken. The fact that consumers are constantly testing the market proves that they realize that any happenings likely to hamper output may swing values against them.

"Very little is being done in foundry irons. It is worthy of note, however, that export inquiries are again making their appearance, and that a little business has been done lately. The English warrant market is have recovered considerably lately, and whenever low rates of ocean freights can be secured business can be put through. To what extent the foreign markets would take larger quantities without flinching it is difficult to say. The Continent, from all advices, is drawing heavily upon England, and is seeking relief from famine by looking to this side.

"In steel the deadlock is almost complete. If some of the large producing and consuming interests should come together, other buyers would probably follow suit soon, and we might experience a lively market.

"There has been more activity in steel rails, some good orders having been placed in the West, among which is one for 15,000 tons for a transcontinental road. A good deal of new construction is under consideration, and this will bring out additional tonnage. The renewal requirements for this year were pretty well covered when the last advance was decreed.

"Plates, which have had a somewhat sensational tumble from the famine prices of the Fall months, have lately shown some strength.

"The indications of an active demand for structural material continue good. The New York Central contract for 13,000 tons of bridge material has been divided among three works, Pencoyd, Pennsylvania, and Detroit. Another large order is now in the market for a first nine months of the fiscal year were $4,000,000, and it is estimated that the total income for the year will approximate $6,000,000.

An official of the American Hide and Leather Company quoted as saying that the trade in upper leather is the most satisfactory in years. The output of the tanneries has been sold for six days in advance, and in some cases the output of the next six months is sold ahead.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading yesterday in the market for outside securities was broader and somewhat more active than on the previous days of the week, but prices were more irregular, and among the net changes for the day were several substantial net losses. As a whole, however, the market showed considerable firmness, and in some quarters where bear attacks were made final figures showed little sign of the efforts to reduce prices. Early in the day there was some selling that had the appearance of being forced, and some low prices were recorded, but at the close the market became stronger, and several of the issues most prominent in the early trading recovered from the morning prices and closed fairly strong. Good buying of Standard Oil continued, resulting in another large gain in that stock, which, with other less prominent stocks, served to improve the general condition of the market. Little news was had to affect the course of prices, though one or two issues were strengthened by reports of near at hand favorable developments.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was the object of a bear attack early in the day, which forced the stock down to 22. It showed much firmness, however, and recovered quickly from the figure to which the stock had been offered down, with the purpose seemingly of calling out loosely held stock. Bids for large blocks of the common stock appeared in the market, and with the strength showed by the preferred practically frustrated the effort to depress the stock. After selling at 22, the stock got back to 23, and closed with only a fractional net loss, at 22½ bid. In the common stock sales were made as high as 7½, and it closed at 7¼ bid, against 7 bid on the previous day. Friends of the stock commented on the strength which it showed in the face of the efforts made to bring about lower prices, and it was felt that this indicated that persons in a position to know the actual condition of the company are confident of better prices for the Distilling stocks.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS preferred was weak. It sold at 47, and later was offered as low as 46½, with practically no bid. The common stock was very dull, and at the close was quoted at 22½ bid, a fractional decline for the day. The bonds remained unchanged.

STANDARD GAS showed considerable strength, being in demand at figures considerably above those of last week, with little stock offered. It was reported that bids of as much as 112 were privately made for round lots of the stock, while none of the issue was offered under 125. The preferred stock closed at 130 bid, with none offered.

STANDARD OIL was less active than on the first two days of the week, total transactions for the day amounting to about 300 shares. It continued very strong, however, and recorded a larger net gain than that made on any day recently. It sold up to 509½, and closed at 508 bid, a net gain of seven points. Little disposition was shown to sell the stock, as much confidence is expressed as to the course the stock is likely to follow, and buyers found it difficult to procure stock anywhere near the opening price. It is said that the rumored extra distribution on the stock will be a stock dividend of probably two or three shares on every hundred, which would be equal to a cash dividend of about 10 to 15 per cent.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER sold off a point, to 9, on transactions amounting to several hundred shares. It closed at 9¼ bid, showing a net loss of three-quarters of a point.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE was more active than on any day for some time past. It was traded in to the extent of about 700 shares, most of which sold in the neighborhood of 40, which was several points below the last previous sale. It later got up to 41¼, and closed at 41 bid. There was practically no demand of the preferred stock, which was offered at 75, the best bid being 51.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—The market, while narrow, was not lacking in steadiness, and stocks when traded in were firm generally. The prospect that the Commonwealth will sell its holdings of Fitchburg Railroad common stock to the Boston and Maine caused an advance of $10 in Fitchburg preferred to 125, nearly 1,500 shares selling in the morning dealings; later there was reaction to 118. The common stock, rarely quoted, sold at 35 for twelve shares this morning.

Arcadian Mining was up 3½, at 17, closing at 16, and Centennial, ½, at 16; Parrot gained ¾, to 40¼. Erie Telephone rights were active, nearly 3,000 selling in the morning; the price touched 95 cents, thence rising to 98 cents, and later selling at 92½ cents. Isle Royale was ½ better, at 21½; Massachusetts Electric preferred, 1% better, at 76, and Boston and Montana hardened 2½, to 272½. New England Gas and Coke held at 19, and 5s at 73. The close, while dull, was steady and even firm in tone.

At the Clearing House 4 per cent. was the quoted rate, although little or no business was doing. New York funds sold at par and 5 cents premium. Call money ranges from 4@5 per cent. and is in good supply at the former rate to the strongest to borrowers. Time money can be obtained as low as 4 per cent. for six months or a year, when the collateral is first-class. From this level rates range up to 5 per cent. Commercial paper is in good demand, but relatively in small supply. The best names sell from 4@4½ per cent. and good names at 5 per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24.—Local trading continued very dull to-day. The changes in quotations were too insignificant for enumeration. Most of the stocks were inclined to heaviness. Brooklyn Gas sold at 3½. The few strong stocks were Pennsylvania, Union Traction, Warwick Iron and Steel, and Western New York and Pennsylvania. A decline of 2 points in United Gas—154 to 152—and a decline of 1 point in Electric Storage Battery—79 to 78—were exceptional movements, but neither had any significance.

The close was steady at these bid and asked prices:

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The January meeting of the Fire Underwriters' Eastern Union has been called for to-day at the rooms of the Down-Town Association.

The Moscow Fire Insurance Company of Russia has been admitted to Michigan, and the Lafayette Fire Insurance Company and the North German Insurance Company have been licensed to do business in Nebraska.

The Committee on Laws and Legislation of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, at its special meeting, took up the question as to the liability of local fire insurance companies for personal taxes. The matter was taken up because such a tax has already been levied on three companies. After some discussion the whole matter went over to another meeting. Several members of the committee said yesterday that no announcement could be made yet as to what course would be outlined for the companies.

The proposition to separate, at least partially, the Hudson County (N. J.) Board of Fire Underwriters from the jurisdiction of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange, which was seriously discussed in Jersey City offices last June, is being talked about again, and the manager of a large foreign company said yesterday that the chief delay in the effort to formally introduce the subject before the Exchange has been the indisposition of the Hudson County board to take the initiative by formulating a petition asking for power to regulate fire insurance rates in Jersey City independently of the Exchange.

Everett U. Crosby of Boston was appointed General Agent yesterday of the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company of London and Edinburgh by United States Manager E. G. Richards. Mr. Crosby is the Secretary of the National Fire Protection Association and manager of the Underwriters' Bureau of New England, with which he has been connected since its inception. The companies composing the bureau are the Royal, National of Hartford, Phoenix of Hartford, Phenix of Brooklyn, Queen, New Hampshire, German-American, Home, Scottish Union and National, Liverpool and London and Globe, North British and Mercantile, Springfield and Aetna.

TUNNEL STEEL SUPPLY

Mr. McDonald Denies Transactions with the Carnegie Company.

HAS SAFE MARGIN OF PROFIT

No Fear Expressed of His Retirement from Rapid Transit Contract—Celebration of Citizens.

A report in Wall Street yesterday that the Carnegie Company has the contract to furnish to John B. McDonald the steel for the rapid transit tunnel was not confirmed by Mr. McDonald. The report, which came in the way of a publication, says:

"It is positively stated that the Carnegie Company has the contract to furnish steel to Mr. McDonald, constructor of the tunnel road, for about $10,000,000. The price is said to be low. The trouble is asserted to be that the Carnegie Company has so many other orders in hand that McDonald's order cannot be filled on time. For this reason it is stated that McDonald can probably secure a good stiff bonus to relieve the Pittsburg firm from embarrassment."

At his office, at 100 Broadway, late in the afternoon, a question was put to Mr. McDonald concerning his reported relations with the Carnegie Company. He said:

"I have no transactions with the Carnegie Company, and if I should undertake to answer questions about the cost of the steel that is to go into the tunnel it would take me a year and a half."

The printed estimates issued at the office of William Barclay Parsons, Chief Engineer of the road, do not bear out the statement that the structural steel will cost $10,000,000, or even half that sum. According to these estimates of quantities to be used in the new tunnel the steel items are as follows: Steel beams, 21,729 net tons; riveted steel, 20,147 net tons; viaduct steel, 23,168 net tons; total, 65,044 net tons. Adding a margin of say 2,000 tons, the entire amount needed would, therefore, be 67,044 tons. Engineers have said that contract prices might be $60 a ton, and in any event not over $70 a ton. Taking the larger price, the amount for the item of steel would be $4,693,080, or at $60 a ton, $4,022,640.

It is considered that Mr. McDonald's bid of $35,000,000 gives him a safe margin of profit, and there is little danger, it is believed, that he will forfeit his $150,000 check and throw up the contract to prevent a losing venture. Controller Coler and the rapid transit officials have all along stated that they have no fear that Mr. McDonald will retire from the contract. Mr. McDonald, meantime, so far as appearances indicate, is steadily going ahead and will qualify within the specified time limit. The belief is also expressed that the Carnegie Company, even with its great quantity of work on hand, will be able to deliver the steel as it may be needed without delaying this branch of the tunnel work.

Residents of the upper part of Manhattan Island will celebrate the awarding of the rapid transit contract by holding a big meeting to-night in Brady's Hall, Amsterdam Avenue, near One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street. Both Republican and Tammany organizations are working to make the celebration a success.

The meeting will be in charge of the William L. Marcy Tammany Association, which will be helped by the West End Association, the Harlem Board of Commerce, the Taxpayers' Alliance of the Borough of the Bronx, the Harlem Club, the Harlem Republican Club, the Columbia Club, the Democratic Club of the Thirty-first Assembly District, the Central Republican Club, the King's Bridge Improvement Association, the Heights Club of St. Nicholas Avenue, the Manhattan, the Sterling, and the Liberal Republican Clubs, the Minqua Club, the Washington Heights Taxpayers' Association, the Washington Heights Progressive Association, and the German American Democratic Club.

The call for the meeting is signed by Charles L. Guy, Dennis F. Murphy, Robert J. Hoguet, Thomas F. McAvoy, Collin H. Woodward, Edward J. Kiely, William E. Stillings, Henry J. Rottman, Julius M. Mayer, Moses M. McKee, and Newell Martin.

TO BID ON SUB-CONTRACT.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 24.—Park Commissioner J. R. Lee of this city has been asked by John B. McDonald, contractor for the rapid transit tunnel in New York, to submit a bid for doing a part of the work, and he will do so. Mr. Lee will put in a bid for a part of the work above Fifty-ninth Street. He and Mr. McDonald are old friends and have been associated in railroad construction in the past.

It is understood the work Mr. Lee is to bid on is difficult, and it is Mr. McDonald's wish to place it in the hands of some one he knows.

To Push Rapid Transit Amendment.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Gov. Roosevelt has decided to send in an emergency message to the Legislature to-morrow, asking for the passage of the amendments to the rapid transit law suggested by Controller Coler. Senator Stranahan and Assemblyman Davis will introduce the bills, which will be passed at once, probably.

JEWISH ACTORS STILL OUT.

But Management Has Secured Substitutes from Chicago.

The strike of the Jewish actors at the People's Theatre, in the Bowery, was still on yesterday, but neither the strike nor the boycott which their union got the United Hebrew Trades to impose upon the theatre seems to have affected the business of the place. The theatre was crowded last evening, and the managers had secured substitutes for the strikers, and a full new chorus. Two or three of the members of the old chorus, Manager Edelstein said last evening, had returned, and were taken back.

"The actors were very foolish to strike," Mr. Edelstein went on to say, "but they have only injured themselves. They were making plenty of money, but they wanted their union to control this theatre and to dictate to us what we should do. Of course, we could not accede to their demands, and the other unions in the theatrical business have approved of the stand we have taken and disapproved of the strike. We have secured a company of eighteen actors in Chicago, and they will be here to-morrow afternoon."

The actors of the People's Theatre complained to the Central Federated Union on Sunday that they had been locked out because they had refused to play with non-union actors, and also that they earned only about $11 a week, and they asked the Theatrical Protective Union to order a sympathetic strike of the stage hands employed in that theatre. Delegate Philip Kelly of the Theatrical Protective Union, however, told them that their request could not be granted because they had struck too hastily and had not consulted with his union.

New York Managers in Trouble.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—J. Lewis and Isaac Abramson, Jewish theatrical managers of New York, were arrested to-day on charges of conspiracy preferred by E. F. Glickman, manager of the Jefferson Street Theatre, devoted exclusively to Jewish plays. The arrests are the result of a quarrel between Eastern and Western Jewish theatrical managers over the services of Jewish actors. Yiddish actors and actresses are said to be scarce, and some weeks ago Glickman secured twelve performers from New York. New York managers promptly offered larger salaries than the man from Chicago, and finally Glickman made charges of conspiracy to break up his business.

Flagman Averts a Wreck.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 24.—Fred Eck, a flagman on the Ontario and Western Railroad, failing to stop a rapidly approaching train near Fallsburg with a lantern early this morning, threw the lantern through the cab window as the engine passed by. Engineer Burke was cut in the face by flying glass, but stopped the train, avoiding a wreck.

Dr. W. T. Jones Committed to Jail.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 24.—Dr. William T. Jones of Pine Bush has been committed to Goshen Jail to await the action of the Grand Jury on the charge of murdering Charles Lewis, his colored coachman. Jones's examination, which commenced yesterday afternoon, lasted throughout the night.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Noting the reference to the lack of politeness on the part of certain savings bank clerks in Brooklyn referred to in a recent issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES, a woman with accounts in a couple of savings banks in the city comes to the defense of the receiving tellers at the city savings banks with a statement that she never receives from them anything but the most courteous treatment. But at her bank of temporary deposit, on a very fashionable avenue, where are her funds for current needs, she finds a reason for complaint which she says applies to other customers who, like her, have small accounts, although the bank in question makes a feature of accommodation for women. It is the custom at this, as at other banks, that handle accounts of women to give to their patrons bills that are new or nearly so whenever this is possible. Women appreciate clean currency, and bank managers know it so well that for their patrons with accounts that are well worth the handling they always have a supply of new bills on hand. Minor depositors, on the other hand, have to be content with what they can get. "I have noticed," says this woman, "that women drawing the largest checks get the cleanest and crispest of bills handed to them by the paying teller, and treatment that is obsequious to a degree that is almost sickening. But when I and others like me present a small check, the gentleman behind the window always singles out from his pile the most soiled bills he can find. I have watched him make this selection of bills, and have seen the discrimination time and again, and other ladies have spoken of the same thing and have even dared to voice their complaint at this sort of treatment, for which of course we have no redress. I have never reached that point where I have dared complain, however, for to my few timid questions in the past I have received only monosyllabic and curt replies, generally in an incomprehensible murmur, and accompanied by a disdainful air, as if the teller could not be bothered with such as I. I presume the intention is to give me to understand that my account is of so little consequence that the bank does not care whether I continue my patronage. As I was invited to become a depositor, the treatment seems a bit unbusinesslike and discourteous. As the bank is the nearest to my residence, I don't like to go elsewhere, and so am forced to put up with soiled bills and curt treatment. But it is very annoying."

Violet vendors on Fifth Avenue, especially in the vicinity of the Waldorf and the Holland House, are not only so numerous but so persistent as to warrant the attention of the police. These venders trot about with a tray of the flowers in their hands, dogging the footsteps of both ladies on shopping tours and gentlemen escorting other ladies through the avenue. The lads cry their wares and thrust them under the noses of pedestrians. Some are insistent to a degree that is annoying in the extreme. Their attentions have become more and more embarrassing as they see that a gentleman cannot well forcibly put them aside when he is escorting a lady. So they will not take "no" for an answer, but follow on for a block or so after their intended victim. They seemed particularly annoying yesterday when the cold wind came up in the late afternoon threatening the destruction of their stock unless it was disposed of before snow came. Complaints were made at the hotels of the annoyance and it would not be a bad plan for the police to curb the impetuosity of these urchins a trifle.

If you ride a bicycle this year and wish to be thoroughly up to date you will wear a jacket of yellow khaki cloth, waterproofed. It is the proper caper now that the military spirit pervades. Besides, they have been announced in London as the very last thing. The ultra-fashionable form is to have the jacket in the military style, cut straight in front with strap and square buckle at the waist, four pockets, and a turn-down roll collar. Englishmen have pronounced this to be "the proper sort," as men connected with the military have adopted it. The less fashionable sort are cut on the regular Norfolk jacket shape. A man may wear one of these without being too much behind the procession if it be made of khaki cloth.

On his way from Indianapolis to this city Father Huntington, who is identified with the work of the church army of the Protestant Episcopal Church, stopped off at Pittsburg on Monday evening and held services that created a sensation in the Smoky City. He arranged to have a choir of surpliced singers assist him in the services that were held on the steps of the court house, and, of course, in the open air. There were twenty of these surpliced singers, equally divided as to sex, and each one carried a lighted torch in his or her hand while marching to the place where the services were held. It was a decided innovation in the slumming work of the Episcopalians and naturally attracted a crowd, most of whom thought it was some sort of Roman Catholic service, as Father Huntington wore his robes and was accompanied by a crucifer clothed in white and carrying a cross at the head of the little procession. One of the church army people intimated that the same sort of trial would be made in this city in the Spring, as soon as the weather permits. It is expected that the surpliced procession will serve to attract the attention that the Salvation Army does by the use of its peculiar uniforms, its tambourines, and its singing of religious songs set to popular music.

Some of the former subjects of Queen Victoria find solace in their expatriation in the fact that there have now appeared in the markets smoked English sprats. They come a dozen in a bunch, and retail at 10 cents, or three bunches for a quarter. As a novelty, they have caught the eye of searchers for such things, while Englishmen hail them as old friends.

It is said among transportation people that a new steamer, a duplicate of the Chester W. Chapin, launched last year by the New Haven Steamboat Company, is to be ordered at once for service between this city and Providence. The intention is said to be to retire the Richard Peck as an extra boat when the new steamer is floated, though the Peck has the reputation of being one of the fastest boats in the Sound service.

A story is afloat among the theatrical people to the effect that Blanche Walsh has found Fanny Davenport's bracelet to be a mascot. Miss Walsh, it will be remembered, paid $10,000 for the bauble when Miss Davenport's effects were disposed of. When the company with which she is playing Fanny Davenport's old parts was at Hot Springs, Ark., a week or so ago, Miss Walsh "took a flier" at roulette in one of the "clubs" at that place, and before she was wholly aware of the fact had parted with all the cash at her command. So she put up the bracelet as security for a few hundred dollars' worth of chips, and resumed the play, continuing until daylight, when the club closed. When she was compelled to cease play by the arrival of daylight she had not only won back all she had lost earlier in the game, but had recovered the money borrowed on the bracelet and had $2,900 besides. The yarn has a sort of press-agent flavor about it, however.

Increase in passenger rates on the Atlantic steamers does not worry the young men and women of the Christian Endeavor Society, who have arranged to attend the international convention of their society in London in July. They have already chartered the City of Rome to carry them to Liverpool, and the steamer will sail from this city on June 30. A fare of $280 has been fixed for the delegates, who for that amount will have a forty-five days' vacation, one week of which will be spent in Paris, ostensibly for an inspection of the wonders of the Exposition. "Passages nearly up to the capacity of the vessel have already been engaged," said one of the men active in the management of the affair, "and there is no doubt but that the representation of American delegates will be all that we had expected when the scheme was first outlined."

"It is a fact not generally known," said one of the exhibitors at the bicycle show, "that Marcena Hitchcock, notice of whose death appeared in all of the city papers last week, was one of the pioneers in the manufacture of bicycles. If I am not mistaken he was the very first man in this country to manufacture bicycles in any quantity. They were the old high wheels, and he told me that his first order was for fifty machines, and was given him by Col. Albert A. Pope, head of the then just organized Pope Manufacturing Company. Mr. Hitchcock was at the time connected with the Weed Sewing Machine Company of Hartford, Conn., and Col. Pope was then, as he is now, a resident of Boston. A rather singular fact in connection with the manufacture, too, is that the shop where the first wheels were made is now the Pope Company's bicycle factory, they having bought it after the failure of the Weed Sewing Machine Company. Mr. Hitchcock was one of the pioneers in the manufacture of the perfected firearm, and during the civil war was with the Remington Company at Ilion, in this State, leaving that concern to go to the Sharpe rifle and pistol people, then situated in Philadelphia, I believe."

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Park Place Parcel Bought by Adjoining Broadway Owner—Upper Fifth Avenue Corner Transferred.

The five-story building 6 Park Place, 25.1 by 81.9, sold at auction yesterday by Bryan L. Kennelly & Co. to Peter McDonnell for $104,000, has been resold through the same firm to Frederick B. Jennings at an advance over the auction price. Mr. Jennings is the owner of the property 234 Broadway, a seven-story structure, adjoining the National Broadway Bank Building, at the southeast corner of Broadway and Park Place, and connecting with the Park Place property at the rear. No immediate change in any of the properties is contemplated.

It was learned on good authority yesterday that negotiations have practically been closed for the sale of the stable properties occupying a plot 50 by 100 on the north side of Fifty-second Street, 120 feet west of Madison Avenue, opposite the Orphan Asylum block. Brokers said to be interested in the transaction refused to discuss it.

William R. Travers transferred yesterday to George C. Hall the plot 100 by 100 at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Ninety-second Street. By another deed Mr. Hall passes title to Worthington Whitehouse, who, it is admitted, acts only as the representative of the real buyer. The name of the latter could not be learned yesterday. Mr. Travers bought the property in December, 1898. There are mortgages on it for $225,000, including one for $100,000 recorded yesterday.

Bell & Houpt, in conjunction with E. Alexander, attorney for the owner, have sold for a Mr. Becker of Germany the irregular plot with buildings thereon at the northwest corner of Fifteenth Place and Twelfth Street. The purchaser, Charles G. Stevenson, buys the property, subject to leases, for all cash, as an investment.

Maclay & Davies have sold for J. Pierpont Morgan the three-story stone-front dwelling 540 West One Hundred and Fortieth Street, 23.3 by 50.11.

Charles E. Schuyler & Co. have sold for Herbert Dongan the plot of about three and one-half lots on the west side of Amsterdam Avenue at its junction with One Hundred and Twenty-sixth and Manhattan Streets, 197 by 90 by 175.

Kahn & Baumann have sold, in conjunction with J. Arthur Fisher, for about $35,000 the five-story double flat, with stores, 1,3,8 Fifth Avenue, 25 by 100.

Frederick Zittel has sold for the various owners the three five-story flats 237 to 241 East Thirty-fourth Street.

George M. Ehrgott has sold for William Rankin four lots on the south side of Sixty-second Street, 100 feet east of Amsterdam Avenue, to Ralph L. Reed, for improvement with five-story three-family flats.

C. A. Du Bois has sold for Henry C. Raynor the five-story flat 558 West One Hundred and Fifty-first Street, 25 by 87 by 100.

Karl M. Wallach & Son have sold for about $40,000 the six-story double tenement 39 Essex Street, 25 by 88, and have bought the five-story double tenement 424 East Seventy-third Street, 25 by 87 by 100.

COTTON.—The market was narrow and generally featureless, except for some pretty active trading in March contracts early in the session. The market opened steady at unchanged prices to a decline of 8 points, sales being disappointing and outside speculative interest offering no support. Before noon, however, the decline was recovered on covering which followed rather strong accounts from Southern spot markets, and a disposition to disregard predictions of heavier receipts in the interior. The future on large purchases by exporters in the interior. The trade was careless in respect to this feature, as it is generally expected that the movement will fall off again after the cotton en route for export shall have been shipped. During the afternoon the market was particularly dull, chiefly at a shade under yesterday's closing prices. Speculation was held in abeyance largely through uncertainties affecting the true situation of affairs in South Africa. The market closed steady with prices 1 point higher to 3 points net lower. Northern spot markets, middling quoted were officially reported by wire as follows: New Orleans, 7 9-16c; Mobile, 7¼c; Savannah, 7¼c; Charleston, 7½c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7¾c; Baltimore, 7¾c; Augusta, 7 9-16c; Memphis, 7 9-16c; St. Louis, 7 9-16c

WOOL.—BOSTON, Jan. 24.—The American Wool and Cotton Reporter will say to-morrow of the wool trade: "A very active inquiry has developed during the past week for medium and low wools, of which the American Woolen Company and other large mills have been free purchasers. They have taken on some good-sized lines of ⅜ and ⅜ blood fleeces, notably quarters, the sales of such wools amounting to something like 2,000,000 lb. These purchases, combined with those of one or two good-sized lines of Territories, have brought the total of the week's business up to silently close to 3,000,000 lb. Otherwise the demand is not at all active, and for fine wools it is practically nothing. There is no improvement in prices, however, which may be quoted as steady and on most lines nominally unchanged. The sales of the week in Boston amounted to 4,805,000 lb domestic and 15,000 lb foreign, making a total of 5,120,000 lb, against a total of 2,965,000 lb for the previous week, and a total of 3,524,000 lb for the corresponding week last year. The sales since Jan. 1 amount to 13,155,600 lb, against 15,216,000 lb for the corresponding time last year.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT.—During a good part of the session the local wheat market was moderately active and quite firm. At its best point May wheat reached 73 9-16. Foreign news acted first as a bull influence on the market and then by reason of reactions exerted the opposite effect. This was most noticeable in Paris advices, which, after several days of positive strength and advancing markets, closed unchanged to 10 points up. In explanation of this change in sentiment it was said that the best reports now received as to serious crop damage in France, the prospects at present being more satisfactory. Bromhall also reported that the Government of India confirms the rumors of good rains in the northwest provinces and parts of the central and Deccan districts, stating that it will result in small benefit to the famine districts. The same authority estimated that foreign importers will require 80,000,000 bushels of wheat during the next six months from Atlantic ports. The Liverpool market, at its opening, was 9@9½d net lower, subsequently lost half the advance and closed only ½d above the previous night. Speculation throughout the day was mostly for local account, neither foreign houses nor the public taking much interest in the market. Railroad officials state that farmers are talking of serious damage to Winter wheat as being among the future probabilities, and holding wheat in anticipation of higher prices. The Northwest movement reached 305 cars, and the primary receipts were 380,000 bushels.

COFFEE.—The indications of subsiding speculation in coffee, which have been noticed this week, were still more marked to-day. The local traders had the market pretty much to themselves, except for some outside selling in the way of liquidating long accounts. Cables were not satisfactory to the local contingent, and there was some disposition to take the short side of the account, although selling of this class was arrested by smaller receipts at Rio and Santos, and large warehouse deliveries in this country. The market opened barely steady at a decline of 5@10 points, and developed a weak feeling more or less general throughout the session. At the lowest point the decline was 10@15 points. A falling off in the demand for spot coffee was an element of instability. The market was finally steady, a net loss of 5@10 points. Total sales reached 34,000 bags.

Feared Probate Would Eat Up Estate.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 24.—The will of Katherine L. Johnston of Elmsford, who died two months ago, was filed in the Surrogate's office to-day. She wrote it herself, and, after disposing of her little stock of worldly goods and appointing George F. Hills her executor, she says she hopes he will settle everything as she has requested "without probating this will, as that would use up all the money."

A Few Reasons Why They Are Better for American Women than the Imported Corset:

BECAUSE they are fitted to American models when manufactured and consequently fit the American figure. The imported corsets are fitted to the French figure and consequently do not.

BECAUSE, fitting the American figure, they are health-giving, their shape removing the overtax on the heart, increasing the mental and physical capacity, improving the digestion and assimilation, and giving new life and ambition to the wearer.

BECAUSE they are adapted to any style of dress, for they are made to fit the American figure, and a corset fitting correctly will enable any practical modiste to give the wearer entire satisfaction in the fit of her gown, no matter what the style of her costume may be.

BECAUSE, although superior in every way, they are 50 per cent. cheaper in price than the best imported gored corset sold in New York.

"La Vida" Corsets are strictly hand-made, French gored, bias cut and all whalebone, and we guarantee every pair to give entire satisfaction both as to fit and wearing qualities. An expert fitter in attendance.

COURT ON STAR BOARDERS.

Mrs. Rhoder Complains that Her Husband Annoys Her Household—Lectured by Magistrate Brann.

"If the handsome landladies would only get rid of their star boarders they would not have so much trouble with their husbands," said Magistrate Brann, in the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday.

The occasion for this remark was the complaint of Mrs. Rhoder, who keeps a boarding house at 798 Lexington Avenue, who had her husband summoned into court to show cause why he should not cease annoying the ten boarders of his wife.

The ten boarders were all in the courtroom. They were clerks and professional men.

"There's a star boarder in this case," said Rhoder with much vehemence, "I think I am justified in objecting to certain things that have happened. I have no objection to the boarders, but all the other boarders stand by the star boarder. I do not like their interference. I am no longer master of the house. I do not count at all. The star boarder runs things, and whatever I say does not count. There is the star boarder, sitting over there."

Rhoder pointed to a young man in a frock coat, who blushed, and the auditors in the courtroom laughed.

The ten boarders were called to the bridge, and each one of them testified to the annoyance alleged against Rhoder. They declared that if Mrs. Rhoder would leave her husband they would help her fit up another place and would board with her.

"That's it! that's it!" exclaimed Magistrate Brann, when they had finished. "In all the cases of this character which have come before me the star boarder has been the cause of all the trouble in the family. I advise you, Mrs. Rhoder, to get rid of the star boarder. It would be better to get rid of all your boarders, if that should be necessary to have concord and happiness with your husband. The trouble with obliging landladies is that they think their husband of secondary importance when they take in boarders. The star boarder is often the cause of separations and divorces."

The husband smiled triumphantly as he left the courtroom. Lawyer Max Steinert, who represented Mrs. Rhoder, said that he would have occasion to have Rhoder in court again on account of the decision. Rhoder threatened to keep up his agitation until the star boarder should be eliminated from the economy of his household.

BRYANT PARK LIBRARY.

Mr. Bigelow Explains Why a Larger Appropriation Is Needed.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature by Assemblyman Davis, to remove the limit on the appropriation of $2,500,000 for the erection of the new public library in Bryant Park. President John Bigelow of the New York Public Library, yesterday explained why funds in excess of the original appropriation are needed.

"The bill," said he, "was drawn at the joint request of the Trustees of the Public Library and of the Park Commissioners. For some months it has been realized that the appropriation of $2,500,000 probably would not be sufficient for the construction of the building on the approved plans, the cost of building materials, etc., having gone up 20 to 30 per cent. Before going on with the work we wanted provision made so that no delay would arise over the question of money necessary to carry it to a successful conclusion.

"The plans, of course, could have been modified to bring the cost of the library within the limits of the appropriation, but it was not considered that such a measure would be advisable or meet with favor anywhere. The Trustees and city officials are in perfect accord in the matter. I hope the city will not be giving more than we shall give in return."

Andrew H. Green also said that the object of the bill was to enable the city to grant an extra appropriation if more money should be needed.

A Medal for Policemen.

John P. Haines, President of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has written to the Police Board stating that the society has resolved to offer a gold medal to the policeman who during the present year secures the most convictions of persons for violations of the laws relating to cruelty to animals. The board accepted the offer.

While these $2.25 shoes are now to be found only at our Prince and Leonard Street Stores, there are plenty of the most sought-for sizes—7, 7½ and 8, still on hand.

That's where we're lucky.

You're lucky in being able to get for $2.25, shoes that ordinarily retail for $3.50 to $4.50—the $5 quality are all gone.

The styles may not be the advance shapes for 1900; or in every detail the finish may not be equal to that in our best shoes; but what constitutes the only real value of a shoe, quality and durability, those are there.

DECIDE AGAINST CAPT. CARTER.

The Circuit Court of Appeals Judges Refuse to Grant a Writ of Habeas Corpus.

Capt. Oberlin M. Carter of the United States Engineer Corps, who was convicted by a court-martial of frauds in connection with the Savannah River and Cumberland Sound improvement, now a prisoner in Castle Williams, Governors Island, and who has been sentenced to a term of six years at Fort Leavenworth, must serve out that sentence unless the action of his counsel shall change the present situation.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday affirmed the decision of Judge Lacombe dismissing the habeas corpus proceedings. The decision was signed by Judges Shipman and Wallace.

Mr. Rose of Kellogg, Rose & Smith, counsel for Carter, said a mandate would issue, and that they would take steps, through a writ of error, to secure from the Supreme Court of the United States a writ of certiorari.

Major Roberts, who is in command of the post on Governors Island, said last evening in reference to the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, that no official notice regarding it had yet reached headquarters, but it would most probably be received to-day. "After receipt of the decision," Major Roberts said, "we will have to wait for orders from the War Department as to where and when to send Capt. Carter."

Her Six Sons Her Pall Bearers.

In compliance with the request of their mother, who died on Sunday, the six sons of Mrs. Charles Clancy of 148 Fifth Street, Long Island City, acted as pall bearers at her funeral, which was held from the family residence yesterday. They carried their mother's body from their home to the Church of St. Mary, on the opposite side of the street, where a solemn requiem mass was sung. Mrs. Clancy was one of the pioneer settlers of Queens County.

FOR POLICE INSPECTORSHIP.

Names of Kane, Allaire, and Druhan on Eligible List.

Acting Inspector James Kane, Capt. Anthony J. Allaire of the steamboat squad, and Capt. Thomas L. Druhan of the Fulton Street Station, in Brooklyn, who are candidates for the vacant Police Inspectorship, underwent a physical examination yesterday by the Civil Service Board. The three men have taken the mental examination, and their names are the only ones left on the eligible list for the Inspectorship.

Capt. Kane was appointed Inspector in December, 1898. The Civil Service Board, however, refused to certify his pay roll, because he had not taken an examination and the board rescinded the resolution making him an Inspector. Capt. Kane then agreed to take the examination, and although eleven other Captains were named as his competitors, Capts. Allaire and Druhan were the only ones who took the examinations with him. As Capts. Allaire and Druhan are both veterans, their names, if they are successful in their examinations, will stand before that of the Acting Inspectors on the list.

FOREIGN.—Gen. Buller reported yesterday that Gen. Warren's night attack on Spion Kop had been successful, and that the British now held that eminence and commanded the Boer flank in such a way as probably to render their position untenable. The Boers, in spite of repeated attacks, had failed to retake the position captured by Gen. Warren. Count Tolstoi in an interview denounces Great Britain for making war on the Transvaal. Gen. French is expected to begin a forward movement at an early day. Confirmation has been received in London of the reported disagreement between the Transvaal and Orange Free State troops. Various reports as to the Emperor of China appeared yesterday. One of them is that he has committed suicide, while another says that he has been deposed in favor of Pu-Chun, the fourteen-year-old son of Prince Tuan. The German naval bill has been passed by the Bundesrath. The Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein, mother of the German Empress, died at Dresden yesterday morning. The Archbishop of Paris has visited and condoled with the Assumptionist Fathers, whose order was dissolved by the French Correctional Tribunal. John Ruskin was buried at Coniston in the presence of a large number of mourners from all parts of the United Kingdom. In the French Chamber of Deputies the interpellation of the Government on the conspiracy trials was postponed for a month. Emperor William's play, "The Iron Tooth," is to be produced to-night. There are many cases of influenza in Berlin and throughout Italy. West African tribesmen attacked members of the British West African frontier force.—Pages 1. and 7.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.—In the Senate three bills were passed, including one appropriating $200,000 for the equipment of the Metropolitan Museum. A minor bill was passed in the Assembly. Resolutions were introduced in both houses and passed, calling upon Congress to arm the National Guard with modern guns. The report of the State Commerce Commission was transmitted to the Legislature by the Governor, with a message, in which he approves most of its recommendations. The report finds the New York Central Railroad especially culpable in maintaining differentials against New York. Senator Ahearn introduced a bill specifying the salaries to be paid to the school teachers. The Governor also sent in the report of the Canal Commission and indorsed its recommendations. Senator Ellsworth introduced a bill allowing the abandonment of proposed lines by street railway companies without forfeiture of charter.—Pages 5 and 9.

CONGRESS.—In the Senate Mr. Chandler yesterday announced that the Quay case would not be brought up this week. Mr. Chandler also reproached the Southern Senators for their utterances on the race question. The Senate Committee on Commerce discussed a bill for the creation of a Department of Commerce.—Pages 1 and 8.

The New Amsterdam Gas Company, which two months ago raised its price to the legal rate, in the hope that the other companies would follow suit, lowered it from $1.05 to 65 cents.

A statement purporting to be a translation of a paper by Emilio Aguinaldo appeared in The Springfield Daily Republican of yesterday. Aguinaldo says in it that he was deceived by Admiral Dewey and other American Commanders, who assured him that they were speaking on behalf of the United States Government when they told him that the Americans had no intention of annexing the Philippines. Gen. Schwan defeated a large body of insurgents at San Diego, and there is now said to be no considerable force of Filipinos remaining under one command.

It is estimated that the approaches to the East River bridge between Pike Slip, Manhattan, and Washington Street, Brooklyn, will cost $8,000,000, making the total cost of the structure $23,000,000.

The Executive Committee of the Savings Banks Association yesterday discussed the bill now pending providing for a tax on real estate mortgages. Opinion was divided, and a full meeting of the association will be held. A bill introduced in the Assembly provides for deduction of taxes paid from interest due on mortgages.

The Manhattan Life Insurance Company has issued a statement in reply to the charge of George Crocker, who is suing for alleged encroachment upon his property from the overhang of the company's building.

UNKNOWN VESSEL WRECKED.

Went Ashore in Bay St. George, and Afterward Drove Out to Sea—Believed to be an American Ship.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 25.—News has just been received that a large unknown vessel went ashore on Foxtail Point in Bay St. George Jan. 17. Her spars were all gone and a lot of wreckage was along her side, but she showed no sign of men or boats. A southeast gale on Saturday drove the vessel off the shore and the ice prevented anybody getting near the scene of the wreck.

The wrecked vessel is believed to be a large American sailing ship, probably lumber laden. It is feared the crew have perished.

The hull has been sorely buffeted, either before or after striking the coast, and such portions of the wreckage as lined the shore were split into fragments.

OBJECT TO RAILROAD TAX.

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 25.—An injunction will be served on Sheriff T. J. Davis of Vernon Parish restraining county officers from collecting a five-mill tax for five years voted in 1895 to the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad. Non-residents are the complainants.

Among the plaintiffs are George, Edward, Howard, Frank, and Helen Gould, who own between them some 20,000 acres in the parish. The plaintiffs charge fraud in the election and promulgation of returns.

A similar suit filed by the taxpayers was recently compromised by the railroad releasing resident taxpayers from present payment of the tax.

DISAGREEMENT OVER RAPID TRANSIT BOND

Contractor McDonald and Surety Companies at Odds.

HE ASKS TEN DAYS' MORE TIME

Companies Demand 1 Per Cent. a Year on $5,000,000 to Guarantee the Construction of the Road.

There was considerable speculation yesterday over the fact that John B. McDonald, the successful bidder for the tunnel contract, had asked President Alexander E. Orr of the Rapid Transit Commission to grant him the extra ten days allowed under the terms of the advertisement for bids in which to deposit his $1,000,000 in cash or securities and the $5,000,000 construction bond.

One story was that Mr. McDonald would have to throw up the contract on account of trouble to be encountered in getting the steel necessary for the construction of the road, and another was that he had been unable to get together the $1,000,000 in cash or securities which he must deposit. Both of these stories were wide of the mark, according to the contractor and his friends, but there is another trouble which the contractor hopes to have straightened out before his time expires, and this is said to lie wholly with the surety companies named by Mr. McDonald to guarantee his bonds.

The companies named as sureties on the $1,000,000 continuing bond and the $5,000,000 construction bond are the Fidelity and Deposit Company and the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Maryland, and the American Surety Company of New York. The fees required by the bonding companies in such cases are fixed arbitrarily by the officers of the institutions. The fee is usually a percentage of the face of the bond, and in view of the fact that this is to be the largest item of business of this class yet awarded, it was expected by the contractor that a reasonably low rate of compensation for the surety would be demanded.

There is also another circumstance which entered into Mr. McDonald's calculations and on which his friends say he was justified in expecting liberal treatment from the surety companies. The construction of the road is to be awarded to sub-contractors and from each of these Mr. McDonald will exact a bond at least as large as the one he will have to give for the same amount of work. As a matter of fact, the bonds to be exacted by him from the sub-contractors would be larger in proportion than his own bond, so that should anything happen he would be fully indemnified against loss. The bonds of the sub-contractors in all probability would amount to $7,500,000. Mr. McDonald would naturally be the sole judge of the sufficiency of the sureties offered to him, and it is to be expected that he would exact from the sub-contractors bonds from the same companies by which he secured the city. This would mean the turning over to the companies named of a volume of business closely approximating $13,500,000, including his own bonds, so that Mr. McDonald's friends contend that he should receive the best possible terms from the surety concerns.

ADVANTAGE OF THE COMPANIES.

According to the story told yesterday by a gentleman who is closer to the contractor than any one else in this city, and who is absolutely in his confidence as regards the details of this contract, Mr. McDonald has been unable to obtain fair treatment from the surety companies. To use this gentleman's language, the surety companies think they have the contractor in a position where he will have to avail himself of their services as bondsmen, and they mean to make all they can out of him. They have demanded, it is said, a rate of 1 per cent. a year on the construction bond of $5,000,000, and in addition to this rate they are also said to have made other stipulations as to the continuance of the bond at the percentage stated for a certain time.

Mr. McDonald made a decided protest against this demand, and pointed out to the companies that he was in a position to turn over to them about $7,500,000 of additional business in the shape of bonds from subcontractors. He told them that although he desired no commission on this business, he yet expected that it would enter into the calculation in determining the rate on his bonds.

The same authority said that the surety companies absolutely refused to make any concessions, and there was a succession of warm passages between the authorities of the companies and Mr. McDonald which ended with a threat from at least two of the former that they would withdraw from the matter entirely unless their terms were met or if there was danger of any friction. It is for this reason that Mr. McDonald made the request of Mr. Orr to extend his time for qualifying ten days from to-morrow, when the original ten days allowed from the time of the awarding of the contract would expire. It is said that Mr. McDonald may be forced into line by the surety companies, but that in the additional ten days, if allowed, he will make every effort to get the other bondsmen to induce those named to make more favorable terms with him.

"It is a downright outrage," said the contractor's friend yesterday, "and McDonald can't be blamed if he takes all the time necessary to file his bonds. I don't doubt but that some of the people who are now trying to trim him are among those who were shouting the loudest for rapid transit and offering to do all in their power, as long as it did not affect their pockets, to get it. Now when it looks assured they put every obstacle in the way of the man who wants to engineer the greatest project ever attempted.

"One per cent. on McDonald's bond alone would be $50,000 a year, and on the $7,500,000 of bonds from the sub-contractors the percentage would be $75,000. An annual income of $125,000 a year for the bond companies would not be a bad thing. I'd rather have their end of it at that rate than the contractor's. So far as the $1,000,000 in cash or securities is concerned, I know that that is ready at any time. The whole trouble is with the construction bond of $5,000,000. When that is arranged, Mr. McDonald will be in a position to fulfill every item of his contract."

NO TROUBLE ABOUT STEEL.

There was a rumor in circulation yesterday to the effect that Mr. McDonald had based his bid of $35,000,000 for the construction of the tunnel and the equipment of the railroad on a contract which he had with the Carnegie Steel Company for supplying the steel. This contract, it was said, was made when the price of steel was much lower than at present, and it was asserted that the Carnegie Company had so many orders ahead of Mr. McDonald's that it would be impossible to fill the latter in time. It was also said that while the contractor would be indemnified for any loss he might sustain for the non-delivery of the material he could not undertake under the circumstances to go on with the work and would forfeit his deposit of $150,000.

"This rumor about the steel is absurd," said Mr. McDonald yesterday. "I shall be able to get all the steel I need without any trouble, and in plenty of time. I don't know what good the circulation of these rumors is going to do to the originators, but I will say that nothing but death can stop me from qualifying as a contractor or prevent me from carrying out the contract."

Mr. McDonald admitted that he had seen President Orr, but would not say on what subject. It is understood that he offered to deposit the $1,000,000 at once, but was told that the bonds would have to be filed at the same time. He told Mr. Orr that he would need time for that.

Mr. Orr said that Mr. McDonald told him that he might need a few days' more time, but did not say that he had granted the extension, which, under the terms of the contract, is a matter solely within his discretion.

"Will you grant the time desired by Mr. McDonald within the limit?" Mr. Orr was asked.

"I have not said that it was actually asked," he replied. "Mr. McDonald said he might need a few more days. His time does not expire until Saturday and we want an underground road."

Mr. Orr several days ago said that he would do everything in his power to help the contractor toward carrying out his contract, so that there is every reason to believe that Mr McDonald will get the ten days if he wants them. Edward M. Shepard and Controller Coler both said yesterday that they understood that Mr. McDonald had asked for the ten days' extra time, and that, as they understood the facts, it had been granted to him.

The officials of the surety companies refused yesterday to make any statement regarding the differences between themselves and Mr. McDonald. Such things, they said, were matters of corporation business and could not be discussed. They refused to say what rate had been asked from the contractor, and would neither affirm nor deny the story that they had withdrawn as bondsmen.

RAPID TRANSIT BILL PASSED.

Controller Coler's Amendment Meets but Little Opposition.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—The New York City Rapid Transit bill amendment passed both branches of the Legislature this morning with but little opposition. The bill is to expedite the ratification of the thirty-five-million-dollar contract.

Senator Stranahan introduced the bill in the Senate and secured its immediate advancement to the order of final passage by unanimous consent. A single objection offered was by Senator Elsberg, and his objection was not to the bill, but to the manner of its introduction. He considered it an act of discourtesy that the bill should have been presented to the Senate for final passage by Senator Stranahan without having consulted either Senator Ford or himself. Senator Stranahan stated in explanation that the bill had been presented to him last evening by Controller Coler, and that he had no intention of offending the Senators from New York.

Later an emergency message was received from the Governor, and the bill was passed.

In the Assembly Mr. Trainor objected to advancing the Rapid Transit bill introduced by Mr. Davis to a second reading, and the bill was referred to the Cities Committee after a somewhat spirited debate, in which Messrs. Allds, Green, Davis, and Trainor took part.

Subsequently Mr. Trainor withdrew his objections, and after Mr. Davis had secured the discharge of the Cities Committee from the further consideration of the bill, it was passed by a unanimous vote.

Tunnel Contract Indorsed.

A largely attended meeting was held last evening in Brady's Dancing Academy at 1,408 Amsterdam Avenue, under the auspices of the William L. Marcy Association, for the purpose of approving the rapid transit contract. Newell Martin, President of the Liberal Republican Club of the Twenty-third Assembly District, presided. Resolutions were passed congratulating the Rapid Transit Commission, Corporation Counsel Whalen, and the city authorities generally upon the progress made toward rapid transit. Several speakers, however, warned the citizens to be vigilant lest interested corporations should yet try to thwart the project.

CAR OF DYNAMITE EXPLODES.

Runaway Train Causes Fatal Accident in the Jersey Central Yards at Ashley, Penn.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Jan. 25.—A fearful explosion of dynamite occurred in the yards of the Jersey Central Railroad at Ashley, a suburb of this city, to-night, which resulted in the killing of Frank McLaughlin of Mauch Chunk, aged twenty-seven; Michael Bird, aged twenty-two, of Ashley; William Buckley of this city, aged twenty-eight, all brakemen, and fatally injuring two unknown men.

Engineer John Rehrig of Mauch Chunk was badly injured. Engineer John Roughley of Ashley, who ran a side engine, was severely scalded. William Brown of Ashley, night boss at the roundhouse; Brakeman Thomas Rowe of Newtown, and Flagman Michael Coyle of Ashley were badly injured.

The accident was caused by the loss of the control of a heavy freight train consisting of twenty-four cars which was coming from Mauch Chunk to Ashley. The train was in charge of Engineer John Rehrig. At Laurel Run, while descending the steep grade down the mountain, control was lost and the heavy train went thundering down in the direction of Ashley at a tremendous rate of speed. It had been raining during the early evening and the tracks were wet and slippery.

At the foot of the mountain, just where the Ashley yards commence, near the roundhouse, the fugitive train dashed into a helping engine standing in its path and it was sent flying along the track into a shifting engine. The shock exploded a car containing thirty boxes of dynamite and eighteen cars in the train were wrecked. Everything that stood near was knocked to pieces.

Ten locomotives were wrecked. The stacks of the roundhouse and a large portion of the roof were blown away. An immense tank containing thousands of gallons of water was torn to pieces, and several people who happened to be in the vicinity narrowly escaped drowning by the flood in which they were suddenly submerged. Nearly every window in the town was broken. Even in this city many of the strongest edifices felt the severity of the shock, and trembled violently. The scene of the disaster resembles the track of a cyclone.

Physicians were summoned to the scene by the company, who did all they could to alleviate the sufferings of the injured. The loss is heavy, and cannot as yet be fully estimated.

PLAGUE RAGING IN HONOLULU.

Steamer Brings News of Thirty-eight Deaths—The City Panic Stricken —Ten Blocks Ordered Burned.

VICTORIA, B. C., Jan. 25.—The steamer Miowera, just arrived, has news of thirty-eight deaths at Honolulu from the plague. One death was that of a white woman of good class.

The city is panic-stricken. An armed mob prevents the landing of steamers at Hilo.

Mr. Cooper of the Board of Health of Honolulu ordered ten blocks to be burned. Thirty-four hundred Japanese at Honolulu are in Quarantine.

THE LAFAYETTE STATUE.

Senator Allison Says He Has Not Heard About Increase in Cost.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Senator Allison was asked to-day whether he had received the "open letter" written by Charles H. Niehaus to the committee of which the Senator is a member, concerning the cost of the Lafayette statue to be erected in Paris. He replied that he had read the letter.

The Senator was also asked if he had any response to make to the letter, or any comment to offer about the suggestion that an increase of cost was contemplated.

"The letter is an open letter," replied Senator Allison. "I assumed that it was meant for criticism and not for response. An open letter does not call for a reply. But I do not understand that there is any request for additional compensation to that already fixed upon. If such a question should arise I suppose that the commission, which includes Archbishop Ireland, Judge Day, and Mr. Peck, besides myself, would have something to say, just as we were empowered to make the original contract.

"There has been no other communication that I have heard of," continued the Senator, "touching the making of this statue. If there is any difficulty about it I suppose that the commission will be made aware of it by a direct communication giving the facts. In the absence of such a communication I do not see that there is anything for me to say."

1,000 ARMED MEN INVADE FRANKFORT

March Into the State House Yard and Stack Arms.

PASS SET OF RESOLUTIONS

Afterward a Majority of Them Were Induced to Leave.

All Were Provided with Taylor Badges —Threats Made Against Goebel —Preparations Were Made for Them.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 25.—By special train a thousand or more men from the mountain counties of Kentucky arrived in Frankfort this morning. Nearly all were armed, and many openly carried rifles. The men come in the guise of witnesses to testify for the Republicans in the Gubernatorial contest, but it is generally believed that they have been brought here to aid the Republicans in forcibly retaining possession of their offices if unseated by the Legislature and the contest board.

The men represented the Counties of Letcher, Harlan, Clay, Bell, Laurel, Whitley, Rockcastle, and Knox, and probably other counties. Militia companies have also been assembled from Middleborough, Pineville, Corbin, Barbourville, Mount Vernon, and other places in that section where the militia has been recently reorganized, and put in thorough sympathy with the present administration

AN ARMY OF INTIMIDATION.

The Democrats openly declare that the men were not brought here as witnesses, but as an army of intimidation. But two more days remain for the hearing of Republican testimony, and not more than 75 or 100 men can be heard under the most favorable circumstances. The Capitol was thrown into great excitement by the arrival of the army and the presence of so many armed men, many of whom were more or less under the influence of liquor, gives rise to the fear that there may be worse tragedies than that enacted in the lobby of the Capitol Hotel on Tuesday of last week, when three men were killed and four wounded.

The train on which the army arrived was provided by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. It was started on the Norfolk and Western in Southern Virginia, where the Letcher and Harlan County men joined it. These men were reinforced at every point on the Knoxville Division, and the train reached here by way of Lexington at 9 o'clock this morning.

There were fifteen coaches in the train, and when it reached here it was filled by a demonstrative crowd, many of whom had never been more than a few miles from their homes before. They had amused themselves on the way shooting from car windows, but as far as can be learned did no damage to any one.

On arrival the army plied out of the train, with weapons exposed, many carrying, besides a rifle, two large revolvers strapped around their waists, formed in line, and marched to the State House, where they were received at the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture, Throckmorton. His office and the office of the Adjutant General were made temporary arsenals, and weapons of all descriptions were stacked there, though the revolvers were mostly retained by the men.

ARRIVAL WAS EXPECTED.

In spite of the denials of Gov. Taylor, Adjt. Gen. Collier, and others in authority, the arrival of the men had been expected, for Frankfort is a small town and has difficulty in providing for the usual crowd of an ordinary legislative session. In advance of the men there had been sent here great quantities of food supplies, such as hams, bread, &c., and it developed when the men arrived that sandwiches had been made. These were distributed to the men in the State House yard, from a little red brick building at the side of the Legislative Hall, used ordinarily as an office building.

Despite the claims of the Governor that the army was not ordered here as part of a militia movement, tents belonging to the State were erected in the State House yard this afternoon for the accommodation of the men and the State Arsenal was also thrown open to them. The crowd is so great, however, that even with these accommodations the greater number will have to sleep out of doors, and as the cold-wave flag is now up the experience of the men promises to be anything but pleasant.

In compliance with a prearranged plan, published by the Republican organ—The Louisville Commercial—three days ago, and the following day denied by ex-Gov. Bradley, the men at 10:30 A. M. assembled on the steps of the Legislature Building to hold a meeting. The meeting was called to order by ex-Secretary of State Finley, and was presided over by Capt. Stephen G. Sharpe of Fayette County. Both men made speeches declaring that the men had not assembled to do violence, but to see that right and justice was meted out to those who had been elected to office. "We are here merely as witnesses," said Capt. Sharpe. Then a set of resolutions which had been drawn up were offered for adoption and after they had been adopted copies were sent to the General Assembly. The resolutions are as follows:

THE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

"We Kentuckians here assembled in token of all the free and equal men of Kentucky, do reassert 'the great and essential principles of liberty and free government,' proclaimed in the bill of rights, not as derived to us therefrom but as inherent.

"Our property we may alienate from ourselves and our children, but our liberty is a heritage to us in trust for all generations, and we may not petition, surrender nor incumber it. We declare again the prerogative right of freely communicating our thoughts and opinions, and to assemble together in a peaceable manner for our common good and the good of our fellow-men of Kentucky.

"More especially do we declare our right and authority conferred on us by Almighty Power, and not otherwise of appealing to those invested with the power of government by either petition or remonstrance, and we represent to them, our brethren of Kentucky, our agents in the Legislature convened, that the Government of Kentucky is founded on our authority and instituted for our peace, safety, and happiness and the protection of property—our own and theirs—as well as that of the stranger within our gates.

"We petition them, our proxies in the General Assembly, to heed that there is peril hovering over all those things so dear to us and them, and that calmness and prudence and wisdom need be invoked in order that truth and justice may prevail, and we exercise our right of remonstrance against their suffering themselves to be led into the temptations of partisan pride in the crisis which is on us.

"We beseech them to remember that their own just powers were loaned them by us at the polls and that among these was the jurisdiction to decide judicially and by due process of law, and not otherwise, what was then our expressed will, not their present political preference.

"We implore them that they do not on slight or technical pretexts nor flimsy or trivial causes permit the subversion of that supreme law of the land, the will of the people.

"We beg of them that they receive from the hands of our messengers and consider and do not spurn or despise this, our earnest address, petition, and remonstrance, and that they by their considerate action protect, preserve, and promote the safety and welfare and above all, the honor of Kentucky, committed to their keeping.

CHARLES FINLEY,
Dr. THOMAS W. BERRY,
A. W. KAZOR,
CLAUD CHINN."

MOST OF THE MEN ARMED.

For the purpose of satisfying themselves that the men were armed, and also to be prepared to act in case of any violence, Circuit Judge Cantrill and Commonwealth's Attorney Franklin went to the State House and inspected the delegation as it was assembled for the adoption of the resolutions. They found no one carrying the rifles they had over their shoulders when they marched from the train, but there were any number with revolvers strapped outside their coats. Seeing this, the court officials retired to their place of business, but no order was issued during the day. Their mission was explained as being merely a precaution to enable them to act promptly in case there was any call for the protection of the court by the City of Frankfort.

By orders of the Speaker of the House all visitors were kept out of the galleries, owing to the fear that some trouble might result from their demonstrations. Representative Slack, one of the Republican leaders, called attention to the fact that certain persons were being excluded from the lobbies, and several other Republicans made speeches favoring the admittance of all who desired. Chairman Trimble replied that it was his duty to see that order was kept, and he did not propose to have the lobbies and galleries filled with armed men.

"These men are now surrounding this building," he said. "I saw them bearing arms, and hey shall not come here." When Mr. Finley presented himself for admission to the House to present the resolutions adopted on the State House steps Mr. Catron moved that he be recognized. Speaker Trimble stuck to his ruling, and no citizen could be heard unless the House went into Committee of the Whole. This it refused to do, and Finley retired.

MANY OF THE MEN LEAVE.

By desperate efforts on the part of the Republican leaders a majority of the mountaineers were induced to leave town to-night, but all declared they would come back. They were told to go anywhere just so they got away. Many had no money, but no tickets were necessary to ride on the special train, which is alleged to have been provided by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company.

The 500 who remained are in complete possession of the Capitol grounds to-night, which resembles a military camp. Many of the men are drunk to-night. One, armed with a revolver, held full possession for an hour of the lobby between the House and Senate Chamber, driving everybody out and firing off his pistol.

The town is overrun with men who since nightfall have become drunk. There seems to be no control over the men by the Republican leaders. Senator Deboe is on the ground advising moderation, as are the other leaders, but they appear to have absolutely no influence. Loud talking is heard of threats to assassinate Goebel, Chief Justice Hazelrigg and others, and the apprehension lest some of the men would start a tragedy is great.

The citizens at Frankfort, the members of the Legislature, and the better elements of both parties are holding aloof from the mountaineers, fearing lest there should be an outbreak.

Judge Wheeler McGee at Louisville is charged with being in charge of the arrangements for rations, and ex-Secretary of State Finley is accused of being the one who led the movement here.

A rumor is in circulation, but persistently denied, that Judge Cantrill of the local Circuit Court, has summoned all the Democratic Deputy Sheriffs of the State to come to Frankfort. Commonwealth's Attorney Franklin says he knows of no such order.

To-day the State Contest Boards announced the result of their consideration of the contestees' counter notices. Two paragraphs were stricken out entirely, demurrers to twenty-five paragraphs were sustained, and demurrers to nine paragraphs were overruled. Attorneys for the contestees asked for and were granted time to amend the paragraphs.

Ex-Gov. Bradley announced at the beginning of the day session that a warrant was issued for the arrest of Judge Sterling B. Toney of the Louisville Law and Equity Court, wanted on the ground that the Judge refused to come to Frankfort to testify. The warrant was sent to Louisville for service to-night in response to ex-Gov. Bradley's request.

DELAY FOR THE QUAY CASE.

Owing to the Absence of a Committeeman It Goes Over—Intentional Dilatoriness Charged.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Mr. Chandler, Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, said he had expected to call up the Quay case this week, but owing to the absence of Mr. Turley, (Dem., Tenn.,) a member of the committee, the case would go over.

"I hope, however," said Mr. Chandler, "in one of the periods of the Senate's indolence to get this case before the Senate at an early date."

Senator Chandler's show of impatience may have been mainly the utterance of a feeling of irritation because of the dawdling habits of the Senate, but it is suggested that it was inspired by a prevalent feeling of uneasiness among Senators owing to criticisms reaching them of the apparently trifling manner in which the case of Quay is being handled.

If Quay's case had been a strong one, from his point of view, as is asserted by Senators who are fretting because of the delay, he would not have permitted it to be put off from time to time. The fact is that it has not been strong, and there is grave doubt now as to whether it will be possible for Quay to secure enough votes to overturn the Privileges and Elections Committee and award him his seat. There is no doubt that if Quay were sure that he had a majority he would have his case discussed as speedily as possible and voted on at once.

Democratic members of the Senate have heard that communications have been received, and mentioned to them, representing the great desire of certain corporations that Quay receive his seat. Neither Democrats nor Republicans care to have it reported that their attitude toward Quay is to be modified because certain corporations that have appreciated his services in the Senate ask to have him kept in that body.

Just where the Quay and Clark cases are allied it is difficult to discover, but those who have been inquiring into the status of the two cases insist that Senator Faulkner, who is counsel for Quay, has been doing what he could to increase the Democratic vote for Quay, in the hope that if he is seated it will add one vote to those already secured for Clark and make it easier to retain Clark's seat than would be the case if Quay were rejected.

Business is to be managed so as to help the two contestants to gain time, if that is necessary and desirable to them. The Currency bill is to be discussed, and that will not be disposed of until after the middle of February. Then, it is asserted, the Puerto Rico bill, the Nicaragua Canal bill, and the Pacific Cable bill will be taken up in preference to the Quay and Clark cases. If appropriation bills come along they may interrupt the order indicated, but that will only prolong the taking up of the consideration of the contests in Pennsylvania and Montana.

SPION KOP TAKEN BY GEN. WARREN

His Night Assault Surprised the Boers, Who Fled.

COUNTER ATTACKS REPULSED

Buller Reports He Fears the Loss Was Considerable.

Opinion Now Expressed that Gen. Joubert Will Be Forced to Retire—British Gen. Woodgate Killed.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The War Office has issued the following dispatch from Spearman's Camp, dated Jan. 25:

"Gen. Warren's troops last night occupied Spion Kop, surprising the small garrison, who fled.

"It has been held by us all day, though we were heavily attacked, especially by a very annoying shell fire.

"I fear our casualties are considerable and I have to inform you, with regret, that Gen. Woodgate was dangerously wounded.

"Gen. Warren is of the opinion that he has rendered the enemy's position untenable.

"The men are splendid."

Later advices from Spearman's Camp state that Gen. Woodgate has succumbed to the wounds he received in the attack upon Spion Kop.

Gen. Buller's phrase "The men are splendid" thrills England with pride and confidence. His taking and holding Spion Kop are considered permanent advantages.

Sir Charles Warren's opinion that miles of the adjacent Boer intrenchments are untenable is accepted by most expert observers as obviously true because of the height of the position, although some point out that it may lack adequate gun platform to resist artillery fire from the two extended sides.

It is not likely that Gen. Warren will let go anything he holds; and news of further success is calmly awaited. The military authorities recognize, of course, that in the twelve or fifteen miles between Spion Kop and Ladysmith there are continuous defensive positions and rugged hills and ravines which far outrange Spion Kop; but they are sure that the troops who have turned the Boers out of difficult places can do it again.

The military expert of The Times says:

"It is exceedingly difficult to arrive at any exact estimate of the advantage gained. A definite tactical object has been attained, and definite steps have been taken in the fulfillment of the strategic plan. It is necessary to await fuller information before attaching undue weight to the successes thus far attained. At least there has been steady progress."

It is evident, in spite of the fact that the British hold Potgieter's Drift and the hills above, that the Boers have succeeded in bringing up enough artillery to inflict considerable losses on the British force which seized Spion Kop, although Lord Dundonald is supposed to have been scouring the country beyond the ranges in order to prevent this very thing, and although Gen. Lyttleton ought to have got near enough to Spion Kop to either intercept the retreating Boers or prevent a serious attack once the British had taken possession of the hill.

The American scout, F. R. Burnham, now on his way back to South Africa, expressed considerable satisfaction at the news of the capture of Spion Kop. He said:

"It is evident that the Boer position is being shaken, and I do not think it will be a long business now to drive the Boers out of the Drakensburg. We shall then reach a rolling, open country, where there is a chance to display tactics and undertake flanking movements and cavalry operations. But the Boers are sure to make a most determined stand around Pretoria. It will not take long to reach the Boer capital, but the siege of Pretoria will be both long and difficult."

Burnham sails for South Africa Saturday on board the Scot, to take up his appointment on Field Marshal Lord Roberts's personal staff. He says Ingram, another scout, leaves San Francisco forthwith to join him in South Africa.

The relief of the tension on the Stock Exchange was very marked when Gen. Buller's dispatch was given out. Business began more cheerful all around, and with an unward movement, under the influence of the news at the War Office, and at the clubs and other resorts there was a notable change from the gloomy fears of yesterday. The appearance of the news placards on the streets sent crowds of people to the War Office, and the lobbies were soon filled to suffocation. Those near the notice board read out the news at frequent intervals for the benefit of the late arrivals, who were unable to approach, and each successive reading led to a renewal of cheering.

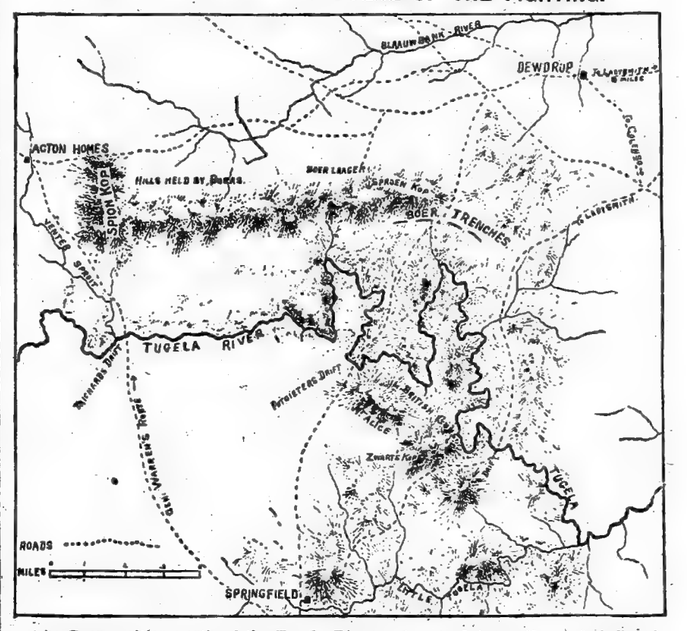
The Kildonan Castle reached Durban yesterday (Thursday) with 2,000 additional troops for Gen. Buller; and three troopships have arrived from India, bringing, among others, a regiment of lancers. Beyond these it is not publicly known here how heavily Gen. Buller has been reinforced; but those having certain connections with the War Office are confident that Gen. Buller will have as many more men as he may need to make his work easier.

"NO RETREAT," SAYS BULLER.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—In Gen. Buller's orders to his troops, the substance of which has already been cabled, after warning them to beware of false orders, he concludes:

"Our Generals will only give one order, namely, 'Advance!' Should any one at any time be surprised by a volley at close quarters he must remember that the only way to safety and victory lies in rushing upon the enemy, for the one thing the enemy cannot stand is a hand-to-hand fight. This war has been forced for the lowest and basest motives by an enemy who use every means of treachery, deceit, and conspiracy to gain their ends. Let us bear ourselves as the cause deserves."

SPION KOP AND THE SCENE OF THE FIGHTING.



The Boer position north of the Tugela River and east of Acton Homes is believed to extend along the entire range of high hills from Spion Kop on the west to the road running to Dewdrop from Potgieter's Drift. Gen. Warren's operations were at the western end of the ridge, which is described as being connected with the Drakensberg Mountains to the west by long foothills. A large part of Gen. Buller's force was still located on the north side of Potgieter's Drift, at last accounts, facing the Boer trenches thrown across the road leading to Dewdrop, about thirteen miles to the north, and thence to Ladysmith, eight miles further on, to the east. British guns placed on the northern slopes of Mount Alice and Zwart's Kop, on the south side of the river, have been bombarding the Boer position for several days. The country between Potgieter's Drift and the Boer trenches, four and a half miles to the north, is broken and hilly.

FRENCH EXPECTED TO ADVANCE.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A forward movement by Gen. French is daily expected. A dispatch to The Standard from Rensburg describes Gen. French's dispositions as now forming a great semi-circle around the Boer positions. The correspondent says he could take Colesburg, two miles away, at any time.

Gen. Macdonald at Modder River.

MODDER RIVER, Jan. 24.—Gen. Hector Archibald Macdonald has arrived and assumed command of the Highlanders.

KRUEGER AND STEYN FALL OUT?

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A letter from Pretoria gives the text of a complaint which President Krüger made to President Steyn regarding the want of co-operation on the part of the Free Staters at Modder River, and also President Steyn's address to the Free Staters. Mr. Krüger said he had learned with regret that "only about 1,000 men of the Free State fought in the last battle, and that many others remained in their camps while their brothers resisted and even defeated their enemy."

These statements appear to give official confirmation to the reports of disagreements between the allies.

TOLSTOI DENOUNCES THE WAR.

MOSCOW, Jan. 25.—Count Leo Tolstoi, in an interview published in the Russki Listok, denounces the war in South Africa as showing the "sordid and soulless commercialism that rules the world." He says:

"I hope daily to hear of a fresh British reverse. It is incomprehensible to me that England, boasting herself to be the land of freedom, should wish to crush out small republics which have never done her the slightest injury."

THE CAREER OF GEN. WOODGATE.

Gen. Edward Robert Prevost Woodgate, Companion of the Bath and of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, saw active service for the first time when he had but just joined the army as a Lieutenant of the Fourth King's Own Regiment. This was in the Abyssinian war in 1868, in which he gained a medal for distinguished bravery. He was several times mentioned in dispatches to the War Office in the course of the Ashanti war of 1873-4, and at its close received a medal and clasp.

Afterward he passed through the Staff College, and after having been promoted to be Captain was, in 1878, sent to South Africa on special service. He served in the Zulu war of 1879 as staff officer with the famous flying column, and was again mentioned in dispatches, receiving the brevet rank of Major and the medal with clasp in acknowledgment of his services.

After service in India and at home stations Major Woodgate was promoted to a Lieutenant Colon country, to-day authorized the following statement:

"The impression that is said to exist in certain quarters that Dr. Leyds is not recognized by foreign powers as the Diplomatic Minister of the South African Republic on account of Great Britain's claim to suzerainty is false. Dr. Leyds is credited to and fully recognized as Minister Plenipotentiary of the South African Republic by the following powers: Russia, Germany, France, Holland, Belgium, and Portugal. The South African Republic was represented at different Courts in Europe and on the Continent for many years past by Dr. Leyds's predecessor, the late Jonkher Beelaerts van Blockland, who had also been indirectly recognized by Great Britain.

"The suzerainty was created by the convention of 1881, but was abolished by the convention of 1884. In 1897 it was suddenly revived by Mr. Chamberlain. The Government of the South African Republic strenuously repudiated the claim, and they have been supported in this by every international lawyer of note on the Continent, as well as by such eminent authorities as Prof. Wesley, Sir Edward Clark, and Sir William Harcourt in Great Britain. The international status of the South African Republic is moreover recognized by Great Britain, as the following extract from the oft-quoted letter of Lord Derby, dated Feb. 15, 1884, will show:

"'Your Government will be left free to govern the country without interference and to conduct its diplomatic intercourse and shape its foreign policy subject only to the requirements embodied in the fourth article of the new treaty, namely, that any treaty with any foreign State shall not be effective without the approval of the Queen.'"

EXPLAINS O'BEIRNE'S REJECTION

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The President to-day sent a response to the Senate resolution requesting information concerning a representative of the South African Republic. He simply transmitted a report of Secretary Hay, who says that—

"In October last Gen. James R. O'Beirne, a distinguished citizen of New York, visited the Department of State, intimating that he was the accredited representative of the South African Republic. He was courteously received and informed that it was not the practice of the Department of State to recognize a citizen of the United States as the representative of a foreign power.

"No Government and no representative of any Government objected or protested against the official recognition by the Government of the United States of Gen. O'Beirne, or of any one else, as the representative of the South African Republic."

DR. LEYDS REPUDIATES MACRUM

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The Patrie yesterday asserted that Mr. Charles E. Macrum, former United States Consul at Pretoria, had visited the Foreign Office with Dr. Leyds "in order to fulfill a mission intrusted to him by President Krüger."

The Foreign Office declared the story a "fake"; and Mr. Leyds, in an interview published this morning, says there is not a word of truth in the statement, that he has not seen Mr. Macrum, and that he is able to affirm publicly that Mr. Macrum is not the bearer of any letter from President Krüger.

On being asked his opinion regarding the capture of Spion Kop, Dr. Leyds declared himself skeptical, implying that Gen. Buller had not gained any serious advantage. He said he was convinced that the Boer commander had a plan drawn up, and that it was part of a prearranged scheme to leave Spion Kop in the hands of the British.

Dr. Leyds said it was not correct that he was about to open negotiations for the intervention of Germany and France in favor of peace.

"At least," he added, "not for the present, because such intervention would not be opportune just now, and we must await events."

GERMANY IS MORE FRIENDLY.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—A German gentleman of high political and social status, who is fully empowered to express the views of Count von Buelow, the Foreign Secretary, upon Anglo-German relations, made the following statement to-day:

"The British now do not hold a single German vessel, and no negotiations are now in progress, since Germany has not yet formulated her claims for indemnity. Investigation is first necessary, and this is now proceeding.

"The feeling between Great Britain and Germany is growing better, despite the efforts of the jingoes of both countries to the contrary. Recent remarks must not be understood as meaning that Germany is aiming at convening a conference for the international settlement of the sea rights of neutrals before the end of the war.

"As for all the talk about intervention, it is baseless. No such intention exists anywhere."

It is reliably asserted that Dr. Leyds will come to Berlin at the end of the present week.

Discussing the latest news from the seat of war, most of the German papers ridicule the British victory. The Vossiche Zeitung says:

"Probably this British success, like all other prior successes, will dwindle with the receipt of further news."

The Foreign Office is still pushing its endeavors to secure the release of the Rev. Mr. Harmes, whom the British arrested in Natal last month on charge of aiding the Boers. The Durban authorities have informed London—so the Foreign Office here understands—that Mr. Harmes rendered himself an object of suspicion and that a thorough investigation is necessary, which will take considerable time.

THE GENERALS UNHAMPERED.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—William St. John Brodrick, Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, speaking last evening at Newark, said:

"The Government has neither controlled the Generals in their operations nor stinted them in the forces they have demanded. We have implicitly followed the guidance of military advice."

Later in the speech he remarked:

"It will be the duty of the Government and the Parliament to see that our military organization is made equal to the needs of the Empire. We have had a great awakening on this subject."

The Pro-Boer Mass Meeting.

At the meeting of the New York committee to aid the United Republics of South Africa, held at the Morton House last night, committees were appointed to make arrangements for the pro-Boer mass meeting to be held at the Grand Central Palace next Monday night. A meeting of the Executive Committee will be held this evening. United States Senator Eugene Hale has written the committee commending its work.

War Furnished a Bargain in Bonds.

Essex County, N. J., in which the City of Newark is located, has just picked up a bond bargain, owing to the war in South Africa and the depression of securities in London. Some Essex Park bonds, which were sold in 1898 at the rate of 116.37, found their way to London. County Collector Keepers, who recently investigated an advertisement, found that the bonds could be bought now at 112, or 4.37 less than the price at which they were sold. The County Sinking Fund Commission considered the investment a good one and purchased $50,000 worth of the bonds at the price named.

Cement Combination Incorporated.

Articles of incorporation of the Great Northern Portland Cement Company were filed yesterday in New Jersey. The new corporation is said to include all the large cement manufacturers of the Middle West. It will have a capitalization of $5,000,000, of which $2,000,000 will be preferred and $3,000,000 common stock. This combination of Western cement manufacturers is said to have been effected after long attempts to induce a combination of both the Western and Eastern men. Whether the combination of the Western manufacturers will result in the harmonious combining of all, which has been hinted to be one purpose of the present move, is a matter of conjecture by the trade in this city.

West Hoboken Silk Weavers Strike.

Three hundred weavers employed in the Rolling, David & Schoen Silk Mills in West Hoboken struck yesterday for higher wages and recognition of their union. On Monday morning the firm received a communication from the weavers demanding the discharge of the non-union weavers and an increase of wages. A committee of the weavers visited Mr. Schoen on Tuesday night and repeated the demands. The result of their visit was not satisfactory, and the strike followed. Mr. Schoen declined last night to discuss the matter.

HOW BULLER MET DEFEAT

Correspondents Describe the Fighting at Colenso.

PRIVATE SOLDIERS PRAISED

Officers Are Accused of Incompetency by a Comrade—Rifle Fire Said to Have Been Terrific.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The following account of the battle of Colenso, written by an infantry officer present, was received by to-day's mail:

"How any one escaped on Friday is a marvel to me. We were nine and a half hours under fire, and it was like a severe hail storm on a tin roof. I couldn't put my glasses up without hearing 'phit, phit, phit.' From the very first I saw it would be no go. Directly we got under fire a Corporal said to me, 'I wonder how many Boers there are hidden in that wood opposite along the Tugela.' I said, 'I expect it is full of them, as Buller has never shelled it at all.'

"I was right. Two companies of the Twenty-third went in and jolly soon came out through us and exposed our four companies to a double fire, and I don't see how we escaped at all. Then I saw about three companies of the Seventh Fusiliers go in on the left of the taken guns, and they soon came out of it. After that we were told to advance a bit, and eventually we were told off as escort to the lost guns, with the result that we retired, (when ordered to, and 'Tommy' did not like that word at all,) and had six officers taken and over a hundred men killed, wounded, missing, or prisoners, out of a total of 13 officers and 172 men, with which we started at 4 A. M.

"I never was in such a veritable fix and hope I never shall be again, and then, to add to it all, they peppered us with shot, shell, and those beastly one-pound Maxim-Nordenfeldt shells and Mausers until we had retired well out of range.

"But poor 'Tommy' was simply grand. On the troops went through it all. They never hesitated one moment, never flinched. On they went with destruction and death and agony all around them. I shall never forget the sight. A man was hit, on the line went; a shell fell between two men at six paces, on they went. A shell blew a poor Captain of the Connaught Rangers to bits; a subaltern of the Inniskillings close by looked back, but could see absolutely no trace of his comrade left, and I see he is reported as missing, as they could not find him, and yet on went the lines. My own company was most lighthearted. The old soldier, who used to be the Quartermaster's storeman at Chatham, was in front of me while we once were ordered to turn in file to the left and wheel to right to double about half a mile to the right flank of the guns, and when a bullet whizzed very close to him he began to play antics and skip about, laughing and cracking jokes the while. The bullets were as thick as bees and I had several mighty close to my head. Directly we halted and lay down showers of bullets came, two pitching about half a yard in front of my head. It was truly a one-sided game, as we could see no one to aim at at all. Just before we lay down a private behind me said, 'Sir, I don't know how we got through all that without one of us getting hit. I think God must be good to us to-day.' I was much impressed by what this man said.

KINDNESS OF SOLDIERS.

"To show what a good fellow 'Tommy' is, when near camp, I felt very ill, my legs were giving way, I had a pain in my back, (the sun, and no food since 3 A. M.,) so one of the company asked leave to fall out and rushed off to the railway, where he had seen a train from Frere with water. There was a great crowd of men there jostling for water, and yet he came back with his own canteen full of water for me to drink. Really, their actions make them all beloved to me. I am fond of them all. And under the most trying circumstances in which our idiotic Generals unnecessarily placed us, I did my best to save all fatigue where I could. I always halted where the grass was longest, where there was any little rise, or where there was a 'nullah if I possibly could. Yet, of course, I was only a subordinate to the Major. He fortunately is a very sound man, full of common sense, and a thorough soldier—so we all had the greatest confidence in him.

"Can we not get the best men for every billet yet? We do get some, but not all. Social qualities still rule the day. It should not be so. Where do social qualities come in on a day like Friday? One instance of jobbery among many I will give you. Now I have made signaling a life study, so I know a bit about it. On the night before the battle I was sitting with three or four other officers of various regiments. A great fat-headed crutch and toothpick style of idiot passed me and said something as to 'he wondered who was signaling.' I saw his rank (subaltern) and mug and took him in at once as a four-letter man. So I determined to watch and listen. They were signaling from Weenen, twenty-seven miles off, with heliograph. He tried to read, but could not. The Boers called them up from Umbulwana and asked who they were, (well they might.)

"This fellow stood with his mouth open looking on and wondering what it was all about, and I asked who he was and was told that he was a signaling officer on the staff, that he came from the Royal Horse Guards, and wanted a medal and a soft job. 'Oh,' said I. 'Then I wasn't far wrong.'

"I can assure you all of us earned our wretched clasp at Colenso; but to make a frontal attack with the whole army, just like an Aldershot field day, was simply silly rot."

WORK OF THE ARTILLERY.

The correspondent of The Times with Buller's army, writing from Chieveley Camp Dec. 21, gives some interesting details of the same battle. After describing the movements of the previous day preliminary to the engagement, he says:

"At dawn on the 15th the troops were filing slowly out of camp to their respective positions. There was no wind, and not a cloud in the sky. By 4:45 o'clock there was sufficient light for the main naval battery to open fire, which it did upon Fort Wylie. The Boers made no response whatever. Shortly before 6 o'clock the Fourteenth and Sixty-sixth Batteries and the naval 12-pounder battery advanced across the plain to the right of the railway. Col. Long, Col. Hunt, and Lieut. Ogilvy, (commanding the naval battery,) were riding in front, and Col. Long selected a position about 800 yards from the river and 1,200 yards from Fort Wylie, more than a mile in advance of the infantry. He had scarcely given the order to unlimber when a single gun was fired from one of the kopjes behind Colenso.

WOUNDING OF COL. LONG.

"This was evidently the signal for the Boers to commence firing, and immediately a tremendous fire began from the intrenchments on the kopjes, from Fort Wylie, and from trenches along the river, all directed upon the two field batteries. Just behind the batteries lay a small donga, and 300 yards behind that a larger one. The naval battery, drawn by oxen, was in the middle of crossing this donga when the fire commenced. Two guns in charge of Lieut. James were already across, and they got into action behind and to the left of the field batteries. Two more were in the middle of the donga, and two more had not yet entered it. When the fire began the native drivers of the last four guns at once ran away, but the sailors manned the oxen and at last with great difficulty got their guns into action behind the donga.

"Meanwhile the other naval battery and Col. Long's two batteries were directing a tremendous fire upon Fort Wylie. The Fourteenth and Sixty-sixth were themselves the object of a most deadly musketry fire from the enemy, who were sheltered under the bank on the near side of the river at a range of about 800 yars, as well as a tremendously heavy but not so effective shell fire. At about a quarter past 6 Col. Long was wounded and was helped back into the donga behind the artillery. Shortly afterward Col. Hunt, commanding the two batteries, was also hit. The rifle fire from the enemy's trenches was terribly effective and our casualties were very heavy, but our men served their guns with the utmost gallantry and coolness.

"At 7 o'clock, the ammunition train not having come up, the ammunition in the limbers was exhausted. Capt Herbert, A. D. C., to Col. Long, and one of the few unwounded officers left, who had already had his horse shot in going to fetch a doctor, was sent off to ask for reinforcements, and while doing so had a second horse shot. The order was then given to retire into the donga behind until fresh ammunition should arrive. This was done, the men carrying their wounded with them. They did not attempt to destroy the guns by carrying away the breech-locks because they expected to return to them as soon as the infantry came up. The naval 12-pound battery, which was about 300 yards in the rear of the field batteries, continued the bombardment alone under very heavy fire. It was extraordinary that their loss of the wounded was not greater, for they remained in action entirely unsupported until 9:30, when they received the order from Gen. Buller to retire. There were several extraordinary escapes. Lieut. Ogilvy, after having his horse shot, had three shells from a Hotchkiss pass between his legs while looking through his field glasses.

RAKED BY THE ARTILLERY.

"Meanwhile on the left Gen. Hart was developing his attack. The Dublin Fusiliers were the leading battalion. The brigade advanced in column, and the Dublins had scarcely taken open order when the enemy opened on the column with shrapnel. They were temporarily unable to deploy owing to the nature of the ground, and in the interval the Connaught Rangers, who were now leading the column, suffered severe loss. At 6:30 the Dublin Fusiliers and the Connaught Rangers advanced across the open ground under fire, and as they came into the curve of the river the Boers opened an enfilading as well as a front fire upon them. The fire was terrific.

"Besides the musketry fire, the enemy shelled them with three guns—one directly ahead at comparatively short range, one on the flank at the foot of Grobler's Kleef, and a 40-pounder on the top of the Red Hill. The Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Batteries on the left seemed unable to silence their fire, and the naval battery, which was the only one capable of doing it, was concentrating its fire on Fort Wylie. The Dublins and Connaughts advanced magnificently against the almost overwhelming fire, men falling at every step. As they approached the river the enemy's fire seemed to redouble. Every time a company rose to its feet to advance there was a perfect crash of musketry, and the plain all around them became a cloud of dust spurts. It seemed wonderful that any man could survive it. And yet there was nothing to tell where the enemy lay concealed. Not a single head even was visible. Nothing but a long line of smoke, scarcely visible, and the incessant, crackling roar. The batteries sent shell after shell wherever they could distinguish the line of trenches, but they failed to silence the terrible fire. At last our men reached the river, but where there should have been a ford there was seven feet of water. The few who tried to cross it, overcome by the weight of rifle and ammunition, were drowned. The rest lined the bank, and poured in a tremendous fire on the still almost invisible enemy. Then came the General's order to retire, and our men fell slowly back. It was during the retirement that the brigade suffered the heaviest loss.

"Meanwhile the central attack began to develop. Gen. Hildyard's Brigade on the left of the railway was advancing in extended order along the flat top of the spur straight on Colenso Bridge, and the Irish Brigade, a little behind them, was crossing the plain on the right of the railway in the rear of the now silent Fourteenth and Sixty-sixth Batteries. The Queen's, were the leading battalion of Hildyard's Brigade, supported by the Devons. From the manner in which they advanced they might have been taking part in a field day at Aldershot. The country over which they advanced was absolutely devoid of cover, and they were subjected to a heavy shell fire from the kopjes behind Colenso, which the naval battery did its best to silence. Nevertheless they advanced in perfect order, maintaining absolutely perfectly their intervals and their alignment. As they approached Colenso the enemy opened a heavy musketry fire upon them from the banks of the river.

"It was now that the want of artillery was most apparent. The naval battery, the only one supporting the advance, was unable to get at the enemy, who were down in the hollow, and there was nothing to check the latter's fire.

"The Boers' position was excellently planned, their trenches and emplacements were well hidden. All day we were fired at by guns whose position we could never find, and through the heat mirage we were never sure exactly where the musketry fire came from. It was one of the conditions of modern warfare. We had to attack an invisible enemy, whose position could not even be fixed by the smoke of his rifle. It was rifle fire that caused our losses. Their shell fire, though accurate enough, was not deadly, and during the advances men did not drop till they had come within effective range of the rifles. This was the case, in spite of the fact that by far the greater number of the Boer shells burst, and burst accurately, too, sometimes right in the middle of our men."

THE OLD GUARD BALL.

Brilliant Throng in the Metropolitan Opera House—Guests of the Veteran Organization.

The Old Guard Ball, held at the Metropolitan Opera House last night, was pronounced by many of the Old Guard members to be the largest in point of attendance ever given by the organization. Fully five thousand persons were crowded on the dancing floor and in the boxes and galleries when the grand march took place at midnight, and new arrivals were constantly appearing.

The military element, as usual, predominated, and the great dancing floor presented a fluttering field of gilt and lace and tinsel. National Guardsmen were present from a half dozen States and there were visitors from distant parts of the country. Clusters of American colors, here and there on the balcony fronts, and a series of garlands in the rear of the hall were the only decorations.

The Old Guard Military Orchestra struck up the music for the grand march promptly at midnight, and Major S. Ellis Briggs and Mrs. Briggs were followed out on the floor by fully 500 couples, including all the military and naval guests. After that hour the dancing was on in earnest, and was kept up during the remainder of the night.

Among those present were Gen. Roe and staff, Col. Franklin Bartlett, Col. F. Morris and staff, Gen. James McLeer and staff, Col. Putnam Bradlee Strong, members of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston, Gen. Russell Frost and staff of the First Connecticut Brigade, Justice Fitzsimons, Justice Gildersleeve, Paymasters Dubois, Littell, Halton, and Jackson of the navy, Lieut. Commander Lawreace, United States Navy; Gen. George W. Wingate, President J. J. Little of the Board of Education, Lieut. Col. John H. Wade of the Connecticut Militia, and members of the Governor's Foot Guard of Hartford, Conn.

HEADQUARTERS FOR DEMOCRATS

Chairman Campbell Hopes to Have a Permanent Party Home.

Frank Campbell, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee and National Committeeman from this State, left for his home at Bath, last night. Just before his departure he said:

"I am strongly impressed with the urgent necessity for a more effective State organization. I purpose, at the earliest moment, to make strenuous efforts to obtain the necessary funds for the establishment and maintenance of permanent headquarters. The Republicans have a well-perfected organization, and disciplined men can always defeat an untrained mob."

DATE FOR GARDINER HEARING.

Commissioner Cox Will Be Ready to Take Testimony Feb. 6.

The Municipal Government Committee of the City Club last night received the report of the special committee which formulated the charges against District Attorney Gardiner. In this report the special committee announced that Ansley Wilcox, the Commissioner appointed by the Governor to take testimony, had set Tuesday, Feb. 6, as the date for the beginning of the hearing. The hearing will be begun in the Criminal Court room at 11 A. M. on that day, and will be continued from time to time to suit the convenience of Major Gardiner.

The Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, Chairman of the special committee, said last night: "So far the delays have been due to Major Gardiner's statement that he was intensely interested in and expected to sum up in the Molineux case, followed by the accident which confined him to his house for some time. The prosecution, represented by the Municipal Government Committee, is ready to go on at any date set by the Commissioner, and earnestly hopes that Major Gardiner will not plead any further delay."

Arthur F. Cosby, who has been specially deputized by Attorney General Davies to represent him in the case, said that the Attorney General is in full accord with the City Club and has always been anxious to bring the case to as speedy a hearing as possible.

"Whatever requests, if any, have been made for delay," Mr. Cosby said, "have emanated from the other side and not from the prosecution. While the Attorney General recognizes the fact that the District Attorney is a public officer, he feels that as matters now stand there is no reason for further delay, and does not suppose that there will be any."

SAYS BOERS ARE BEATEN

Mr. Hammond Sees Utter Failure in Plan of Campaign.

KRUGER ALONE SAW PERIL.

Outlander Committee Member Repeats Conspiracy Charge in Plymouth—Anti-Boer Speech Causes a Row.

John Hays Hammond, who, as a member of the Outlanders' Reform Committee, was imprisoned by the Transvaal Government after the Jameson raid, returned to this city yesterday from a business trip to Mexico, and in the evening was honored by a reception from the Plymouth League, the social organization of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. The reception was held in the lecture room and was largely attended. Dr. R. W. Raymond, one of the Trustees, presided. Mr. Hammond, who was accompanied by his wife, delivered an address in which he declared that the war was the result of a big conspiracy entered into by President Krüger to save South Africa, and showed why, in his opinion, American sympathy should be on the side of the British. The address gave rise to a very lively discussion.

Mr. Hammond said that the assertions that the Boers did not wish to have the Transvaal mines developed was ludicrously untrue. The contrary was the case, yet but for the large investments of European capitalists, on the one hand, and the technical direction of American engineers, on the other hand, the Transvaal mining industry would not have achieved any significance.

"As to the present production of gold," he went on, "I can only say that when the war began the well-managed mines of the Rand had been developed so as to show reserves of ore for two or three years in advance. Since that time, as I understand, some of the mines have been operated by the Boer Government, which is simply using up these reserves without doing any work to prepare new ores. In other words, it is 'gutting' the mines without regard to their permanent value."

THE OUTLANDERS' GRIEVANCES.

Mr. Hammond briefly enumerated the grievances of the Outlanders as follows:

"Two-thirds of the Transvaal population were Outlanders. We went thither by express invitation; our capital and enterprise developed what in Boer hands was a worthless territory into the greatest mining centre of the world; the country, now rich, was bankrupt before our arrival; we owned more than half the land, having purchased it from the Boers; we paid nine-tenths of the taxes, much of which amount was admitted by the Boer commission to be class taxation; and yet we had no submit to unlawful expenditure of the bulk of taxation, as we had no voice in the Government.

"We objected to the subversion of the High Court of Justice, in which rested our only hope of legal redress. In direct contravention of the Boer Constitution the Volksraad empowered the President and Executive Council to dismiss any Judge without trial who disputed the validity of any law passed by the Volksraad.

MURDERS OF NATIVES BY BOERS.

"We objected to the jury system; we were debarred from proper trial, as the law makes only burghers eligible for jury duty. Court records in the Transvaal prove that a small percentage of Boers are found guilty and a very large percentage of Outlanders are convicted. Nor was any Boer jury ever known to convict a Boer who had murdered a native.

"We objected to the Alien Expulsion Act, by which an Outlander can be put over the border at the will of the President without the right of appeal to a court of justice—a court open to the offending burgher.

"We objected to the prohibition of free speech, to the power vested in the President of suppressing any publication which, in his individual opinion, was opposed to good manners or subversive of order.

"We object to the Public Meetings act, which left discretionary power in the hands of Boer policemen to suppress assemblages.

"We object to the Boers being exclusively allowed to carry firearms.

"Finally, we objected to the prevalent official corruption and to the granting of concessions giving monopolies for the sale of supplies indispensable to the Outlanders.

ATTACKS PRO-BOER ATTITUDE.

"In view of these facts it is little short of criminal for American statesmen, through ignorance of such an important subject, to attempt to justify the position of the Boer Government in the controversy."

President Krüger's alleged lack of good faith in his treatment of the Reform Committee members, after the Jameson raid, Mr. Hammond said, was abundantly shown during the negotiations. He endeavored to throw dust in the eyes of the Europeans, Mr. Hammond declared, and gain a sympathy which he did not deserve. For at that time he was actively pursuing the scheme of a conspiracy which should drive England from South Africa altogether and establish Boer supremacy from the Zambesi River to the Cape.

"Long before the Jameson raid," continued Mr. Hammond, "Krüger had imported guns in great quantities. He erected fortifications at Pretoria, adopted plans, and secured an appropriation for a fort to overawe Johannesburg. The Boers had been secretly organized, and foreign officers had been employed to drill them. Provided with unlimited resources extorted from the Outlanders, they had secured arms enough to equip twice over every Boer in all South Africa.

"If the Fashoda incident had brought on a war between France and England it would have furnished the desired opportunity to the Boer conspirators. The same would have been the case if England, by reason of the stand she took during the Spanish war against interference with the United States, had become involved in war with any Continental powers. But no such favorable opening presented itself, and in my judgment the recent ultimatum of the Boer Government, followed by its instant invasion of the British colonies of Natal and the Cape, was forced upon President Krüger by his inability to control any longer the widespread conspiracy he had carefully built up.

SAYS BOERS HAVE LOST.

"Great bodies of ignorant, ardent, and confident people do not want to wait. And the hope of a swift conquest of English territory, before England could prepare for its defense, was too great to be resisted by those who did not rightly estimate either British valor or British resources. President Krüger, I think, knew better, but could not help himself. That hope has been disappointed. Not one place of importance has been captured by the Boers. Their plan was an offensive one, and it has utterly failed."

Mr. Hammond's pro-British utterances were warmly applauded by the majority of those present. At the conclusion of the address he expressed his willingness to answer questions, and in reply to a request for enlightenment concerning the conditions attaching to naturalization as citizen of the Transvaal Republic he said:

"A man cannot be naturalized until he is forty; he must renounce allegiance to all other powers; then, after fourteen years' probation, he must present a petition. He must also be acceptable to Krueger."

Lawyer Frederick W. Hinrichs wanted to know whether there was in this country any Boer speaking English who could give the Boer side of the controversy.

ATTACK ON MR. WHITE.

"Yes," said Mr. Hammond. "There's Montagu White, a renegade Englishman, who is a Boer agent. He's in Washington, I understand. I don't think he would undertake to deny any of the things I have recounted."

A person at the back of the room called out that there were plenty of sympathizers with the Boers both on this and the other side of the ocean.

"I know it," replied Mr. Hammond, "and I should like to tell you that the European press that is lauding them so fulsomely is subsidized by the Boers with money squeezed from the Outlanders."

Mr. Hammond added that he would stake his reputation as a professional man and as an American gentleman that he had not overstated on that or any other occasion the conditions that prevailed in the Transvaal, and that every statement he had made was susceptible of proof.

Dr. R. W. Raymond, who presided over the meeting, made an anti-Boer speech in which he declared that in the matter of the violation of diplomatic usages, as evidenced, he thought, in their refusal to permit the American Consul to act for British subjects during the war, the Boers took advantage of their alleged position of under dog to do things that would not be tolerated from a bigger-sized dog.

He extolled the manner in which Great Britain protected her citizens everywhere, and said he would rather see American citizens protected the world over in the same way than the evangelization and conquest by the United States of a score of archipelagoes like the Philippines.

Deacon White thereupon arose in great excitement and protested vehemently against the question of the policy of the United States in the Philippines being dragged into the discussion. He said it was most improper of Dr. Raymond to have done it, and he for one resented and repudiated the Chairman's action.

Dr. Raymond quietly replied that he hadn't done any such thing as that of which he was accused, "but," said he, "if I had to choose between the protection of an American like Mr. Hammond and the conquest of Mr. Aguinaldo, I would be for the protection of Mr. Hammond most decidedly."

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Fair, cold wave, high northwesterly winds.

The cold wave which occupied the Upper Missouri and Red River of the North Valleys Wednesday night has extended over the Middle and Upper Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and the upper lake region, where the temperature has fallen about 30 degrees. During the next 24 hours this cold wave will cover the Atlantic and Gulf States, attended by a temperature fall of 20 degrees or more, and will probably carry the line of freezing weather to extreme Northern Florida to-night. The storm which was central at Sault Ste. Marie Wednesday night has advanced to the Southeast New England coast, with minimum pressure last evening 29.46 inches at Nantucket and Block Island. Rain has fallen in areas in the Atlantic Coast States, and rain has changed to snow in the Upper Ohio Valley and the lower lake region. In the West and Northwest and on the Pacific Coast the weather has been fair. The weather will continue cold and fair in the Atlantic Coast districts during to-morrow. In the interior of the country the temperature will moderate gradually, and in the Southwestern States rain is likely to occur by to-day. High northwesterly winds will diminish in force along the Middle Atlantic and New England Coast, and fresh northwesterly winds will prevail along the South Atlantic Coast. Notice has been sent of strong north to northwest winds and much lower temperature to points on the West Gulf coast as far south as Tampico, Mexico, and to points in Florida and to Havana. Storm signals are displayed from Sandy Hook to Eastport.

HENDRICKS AGREED UPON?

Will Probably Succeed Payn as Superintendent of Insurance.

A NOMINATION NEXT MONDAY

Ex-Senator from Syracuse, It Is Said, Will Obey the Machine and Accept the Place.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Unless something unexpected happens it is believed that Gov. Roosevelt will send to the Senate next Monday night the name of a successor to Louis F. Payn as Superintendent of Insurance. All signs point to the selection of ex-Senator Francis Hendricks of Syracuse, who has been agreed upon, it is said, by the Governor and the leaders of the Republican organization.

The Governor refused to-night to say whether he had received an answer from Mr. Hendricks, nor in fact would he admit that Mr. Hendricks was his choice for the position, but there is not a Senator here who does not hold the opinion that if he will accept, Mr. Hendricks will take Mr. Payn's place.

Gov. Roosevelt offered the place to Mr. Hendricks last month, but failed to secure his consent to enter the race. Since then, however, the situation has changed, and it is reported here now that Mr. Hendricks has agreed to comply with the wishes of the State machine and re-enter public life.

Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee, who has been expected here for the last two days, telephoned to-day that he would not visit Albany before next week. Mr. Odell's action is regarded here as meaning that the organization has received a promise from

STATEMENT BY AGUINALDO

His Account of Events Which Led Up to the Present War.

ACCUSES DEWEY AND OTHERS

Says the Americans Broke Promises Alleged to Have Been Made on Behalf of Their Government.

A paper purporting to be an authentic review of the Philippine revolution, written by Emilio Aguinaldo, the insurgent leader, appeared yesterday in The Springfield Daily Republican.

The paper was received from Erving Winslow, the Eastern Secretary of the American Anti-Imperialist League and Secretary of the New England League, who describes it as a hasty but faithful translation of an official pamphlet in Spanish which came into his hands accidentally. It is announced that a copy of the translation has been submitted to Admiral Dewey, who is referred to many times in it. The Admiral replied through his secretary, J. W. Crawford, that after examining the article he still adhered to his determination not to talk of Philippine matters until the report of the commission is made public.

The document, which is addressed by its author "to the civilized nations, and particularly to the great North American Republic, which he salutes with all the effusion of his soul," is, in part, as follows:

"Spain ruled the Philippine Islands for more than three centuries and a half, during which time the abuses caused by the rule of the friars and the administration exhausted the patience of the natives, forcing them to throw off the yoke of oppression; this they did between the 26th and 31st of August, 1896, the Provinces of Manila and Cavite being the first to commence the revolution.

TERMS OF TREATY WITH SPAIN.

"After a year's fighting I pitched my camp in the wild and unknown range of Biak-na-bato, where, toward the end of May, 1897, I established the Republican Government of the Philippines, and where on the 14th of December, 1897, I concluded a treaty of peace with Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno on the following basis:

"Firstly—I was to be free to live abroad with the companions who were willing to follow me, and in Hongkong, which I had decided on as a place of residence, the payment of $800,000 indemnification money was to be made in three installments, $400,000 on receipt of all the arms that were in Biak-na-bato, $200,000 when the number of arms delivered up should amount to 800, and the remaining $200,000 on the total number of the same reaching 1,000, when, as a thank offering, the Te Deum should be celebrated in the cathedral of Manila. The last two weeks of the month of February were fixed upon as the final term for the delivering up of the arms.

"Secondly—The money was all to be delivered to me personally, and I was to settle without interference with my companions and the other revolutionists.

"Thirdly—Before the Philippine revolutionists should evacuate Biak-na-bato Capt. Gen. Don Primo de Rivera was to send me two Spanish Generals, who were to remain as hostages till I and my companions reached Honkong and the first installment of the indemnification—that is, $400,000, had been received.

"Fourthly—It was also agreed to suppress the religious societies in the islands, and that political and administrative autonomy should be established, although by request of Gen. Primo de Rivera these latter conditions were not put down in writing, owing to his assertion that otherwise the treaty would be in too humiliating a form for the Spanish Government, while on the other hand he guaranteed on his word as a gentleman and officer the fulfilment of the same.

"Gen. Primo de Rivera paid the first installment of $400,000, while the two Generals were still detained as hostages.

"We, the revolutionists, fulfilled the condition of delivering up the arms, but the Captain General failed to carry out the rest of his conditions. I later received a letter from his secretary forbidding my return to Manila.

URGED TO RENEW THE WAR.

"In March, 1898, I had various interviews with a gentleman who introduced himself as the commander of the American warship Petrel, who said that he spoke at the instigation of Admiral Dewey, and who wished me to renew the war of independence against Spain, and promised the assistance of the United States in case of a war between that Nation and Spain. He told me that the United States was a great and rich Nation and had no need of colonies. I explained the necessity of putting the above agreement in writing, and he replied that he would submit the matter to Admiral Dewey.

"Mr. Pratt, the United States Consul at Singapore, also urged me to renew the hostilities and told me that he had received a communication from Admiral Dewey that the United States would, at least, recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands under a naval protectorate, but that there would be no need of putting this agreement down in writing as his word was sacred. Admiral Dewey," the Consul added, "as chief of the expedition, had ample power from President McKinley. I yielded to the persuasions of Mr. Pratt, and promised to assist in the capture of Manila if provided with guns and ammunition. At the invitation of Admiral Dewey I went to Hongkong to have an interview with him, but found that he had left for Manila.

INTERVIEW WITH ADMIRAL DEWEY.

"On the 15th day of May the gunboat McCulloch conveyed me to Cavite by the Admiral's order. He received me there with all the honors of a General, and said that the messages he had sent to Consul Pratt were authentic. He said that America was rich in land and money, and that there would be no doubt as to its recognition of Philippine independence. He urged me to arouse the people against the Spaniards and to effect a quick campaign, said that the promise of the American people was more binding than a treaty with the Spaniards, and advised me to devise a national flag, which, he said, he would recognize before all the other squadrons in the bay.

"Rifles and other ammunition offered me by the Admiral were distributed among the first volunteers that presented themselves, and I set about promoting the insurrection without delay. After several victories of my army I ordered the national flag displayed on the eight launches and five larger vessels which comprised the Philippine navy. In all, the expeditions our ships, before clearing, saluted the Olympia as flagship, our salutes being replied to with equal demonstrations of friendship. On the 12th of June the independence of the republic was proclaimed at Kawit with due solemnity. Admiral Dewey, who was invited to take part in the celebrations, excused himself, alleging that this was his mail day.

GEN. ANDERSON'S ALLEGED PROMISE.

"Gen. Anderson, the commander of the first military expedition from the United States which arrived on July 4, ratified the Admiral's promises, affirming on his word of honor that America had come to the Philippines not to conquer our territory, but to free it from Spain.

"In the same month of July the Admiral, accompanied by Gen. Anderson, came to Cavite, and after the first exchange of courtesies said to me: 'You have now seen that all I said and promised has been confirmed. How handsome your flag is—it has a triangle similar to one of the Cuban flag. Will you give me one as a souvenir when I return to America?'

"I answered that I was convinced of the sincerity of his word, and that there was no necessity for putting in writing the agreement made with him, and as regarded the flag, he could count on having one at once if he wished it.

"Dewey continued: 'When there is no honor the contents of documents are not carried out, as happened with the one which you drew up with the Spaniards, who failed to fulfill that which was written down and signed. Trust to my word, which I pledge, that the United States will recognize the independence of this country. But I recommend that you maintain the greatest reserve with regard to all that we have said and agreed upon. And besides that, I beg that you will have patience if our soldiers should insult any Filipinos; for being volunteers, they as yet lack discipline.'

"I replied to the Admiral that I should remember all his suggestions for observing secrecy, and that as regarded possible disorder on the part of the soldiers, suitable orders with regard to this point had already been given; I at the same time suggested the same mode of proceeding to the Admiral respecting our own soldiers. I told the Admiral of the mixed commission under Gen. Augustin and Archbishop Nozaleda, which had come to me from Manila, and asked me what the attitude of the United States was toward the Philippine Republic. When I told him that I had answered that I was pledged to secrecy on that point, but that they might note the acts of sovereignty which had been performed by our Government, especially in the waters of the bay, he seemed greatly disturbed.

"'Why did you reveal our secret?' he cried. 'Was that fulfilling your promise of secrecy?'

"He took his departure, after asking me to defer my attack on Manila until I had formed some plan of concerted action with his troops.

THE CAPITULATION OF MANILA.

"More American troops arrived from time to time until the 13th of August, when I observed preparations for an attack on Manila by the Americans. Ordering an attack by my own troops, I captured the suburbs of Pretil, Tondo, Divis Oria, Paseo de Azcarraga, Singalong, and Pako. We learned at nightfall that the city had capitulated to the Americans and that the capitulation had been accepted, contrary to the agreement made with Admiral Dewey in the formation of plans by which the American and Philippine armies were to unite in taking Manila.

"This inexplicable conduct on the part of the American Generals was made more striking by the telegrams which Gen. Anderson directed to me from Maytubig on this 13th day of August, asking me to order our troops not to enter Manila. This demand was refused, inasmuch as the same was contrary to agreement and the important interests of the revolutionary government, which, when taking upon itself the immense burden of besieging Manila during two months and a half, sacrificing thousands of lives and material interests to a tremendous extent, could not surely have any other object than to capture the City of Manila and Spanish garrison, which defended this fortification with energy and tenacity.

WITHDRAWS HIS TROOPS.

"Gen. Merritt requested me, through Major Bell, to withdraw my troops from the suburbs in order to avoid conflict with the American soldiers, offering to negotiate after his wishes had been complied with. To this I acceded.

"I still cherished hopes that the verbal agreement made between our government and the American chiefs would be respected until I learned that Admiral Dewey had worked and was working thus against the revolutionary government by order of his excellency, Mr. McKinley, who, at the instigation of the imperialistic party, had decided to annex the Philippines, yielding perhaps to the ambition of exploiting the immense natural riches hidden in our virgin soil.

"I succeeded, however, in calming my own spirit as well as that of my companions by the reflection that the other American Generals who arrived after the glorious victories of the Admiral, Gens. Merritt, Anderson, and Otis, proclaimed to the Philippine people that 'America had not come to conquer new territories, but to liberate their inhabitants from the oppression of Spanish rule.' This would mean, therefore, to expose also to general ridicule the honor of these Generals, if the United States, disavowing their official and public conduct, should annex the islands by force.

"I was happy when I heard that the American Government at the instigation of Admiral Dewey had decided to send a civil commission to come to an amicable understanding with us. I had a commission nominated to receive them, and I exhorted my companions to bear with the brutality of the American soldiers, which was rapidly becoming unbearable.

OTIS'S "IMPOLITIC ACTIONS."

"In this trying and critical situation, and before the arrival of the longed-for American civil commission, it happened that Gen. Otis, the Military Governor of the American forces, carried into effect two actions, one as impolitic as the other. One was his order to search our telegraph offices in Sagundo Street, seizing the apparatus and detaining the official, Senor Reyna, at the Fortress of Santiago on the pretext that he was conspiring against the Americans.

"The other impolitic action committed by Gen. Otis was the issuing of a proclamation on the 4th of January, establishing in the name of the President, Mr. McKinley, the sovereignty of America in these islands, threatening ruin, death, and desolation to all who failed to recognize it.

"I protested against that proclamation, threatening also to open hostilities at once, as the whole nation was crying 'Treason,' saying with good reason that the civil commission already announced and asked for by Admiral Dewey was a farce, and that the object of Gen. Otis had been to put us off in order to draw more and more reinforcements from the United States so as to annihilate at one stroke our young and badly armed forces.

"But for the first time Gen. Otis resorted to diplomacy, sending me a letter through his secretary, Mr. Carman, in which he invited the Philippine Government to send a commission, which in conjunction with one composed of Americans, was to bring about an amicable settlement between the two parties. Although I did not trust in the sincerity of the amicable propositions of the said General, whose plain intention to prevent that the commission should find the country in peace had already been proved, I acceded all the same to the said invitation, because I saw it officially confirmed in the order of the 9th of January issued by that General, and also because I wanted to demonstrate before the whole world my evident desire to preserve the peace and friendship with the United Stats so solemnly agreed upon with Admiral Dewey.

"The conference of the mixed Americans and Philippine Commission took place in Manila from the 11th to the 31st of January. It ended in a harmonious manner, the American Commissioners promising to report to their Government, while we should await its answer.

FIRST HOSTILITIES.

"And while I, the Government, the Congress, the whole people, were waiting for the longed-for answer, the majority giving themselves up to the most flattering hopes, came the fatal day of the 4th of February, on the night of which the American troops suddenly attacked all our lines, which were practically abandoned, for, it being Saturday evening, our Generals and some of our foremost leaders had asked permission to repair to the bosom of their respective families.

"According to authentic information Gen. Otis telegraphed to Washington that the Filipinos had attacked the American Army. President McKinley laid the telegram before the Senate, where the ratification of the treaty of Paris of the 10th of December, 1898, was under debate, in so far as the same referred to the annexation of the Philippines, obtaining by this criminal means the completion a ratification of the treaty referred to, by a majority of only three votes, which were only given with the protestation that this was done in consideration of the state of war in these islands.

"The facts narrated are of recent date, and the recollection of them must be still fresh in the memory of all.

"Those who, in May, 1898, admired the bravery of the sailors under Admiral Dewey and the humane sentiments of this illustrious leader in lending his assistance to an oppressed people that they should secure their liberty and independence, can surely not reconcile the present inhuman war with those elevated and honorable ideas.

"The truth of these statements is vouched for by my word as President of this republic and by the honor of a whole nation of 8,000,000 souls, which for more than three years has sacrificed the lives and property of its heroic sons to obtain the due recognition of its natural rights to liberty and iddependence.

"And if you do me the honor to receive and to accept this document, and if then you will judge impartially on which side justice and right are standing, I shall always be your thankful and obedient servant.

EMILIO AGUINALDO."

SCHWAN ROUTS INSURGENTS.

Encounters Large Force at San Diego and Breaks It Up—Filipinos Believed to be All Dispersed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Gen. Otis's cabled report under to-day's date received this morning indicates that Gen. Schwan is conducting the campaign in the south of Luzon with the greatest energy. He located what was probably the last considerable force of insurgents remaining in one command, and to-day's report shows that, with small loss to himself and heavy loss to the enemy, he managed to completely dissipate this force, probably beyond the possibility of reconstruction. Gen. Otis's cablegram is as follows:

"Schwan concentrated Thirtieth Battalion, Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth Infantry at and near San Pablo, Laguna Province, on the afternoon of the 20th, Hayes, with cavalry, striking for Tayabas by lower road. The enemy had advanced from Santa Cruz to very strongly fortified positions at San Diego, Majayjay, and adjacent points, in country very broken and mountainous.

"Schwan struck the enemy at San Diego, and in an engagement lasting two hours, killed eighty-two and wounded a large number.

"Our casualties were one enlisted man killed and fourteen wounded, including three native scouts. Captured several rifles, ammunition, Bolos, and stock of uniform clothing.

"On the 22d Schwan pushed on through to Lilio, driving enemy back on Majayjay, where a force, reported by an escaped Spanish prisoner to number between 1,500 and 3,000, well equipped and supplied, had concentrated, waiting approach of troops. This position was impregnable via roads or trails, and the troops were working around on either flank of enemy, when the enemy retreated rapidly with Thirtieth Infantry and cavalry in pursuit.

"It is believed that the insurgents are widely dispersed. The country is now covered by troops, and our force occupies Santa Cruz, a few minor engagements at other points resulting in considerable loss to the enemy.

"MacArthur telegraphs that MacRae struck an insurgent post in the mountains northwest of Porac, capturing the arsenal, barracks, ten cartloads of powder and ammunition, and three insurgents with rifles. The barracks and arsenal were destroyed."

JESUIT SCIENTISTS FROM MANILA.

Fathers Algue and Clos Reach San Francisco En Route to Washington.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25.—Father José Algue, Director of the Manila Observatory, the largest and most notable institution of its kind in the Orient, and his associate, Father José Clos have arrived here en route to Washington with much valuable scientific data which they hope to have published by the Government.

They have come to America upon the urgent invitation of President Schurman of Cornell University, President of the Philippine Commission, and also by the request of Gen. Otis. Both of them are Spaniards and Jesuit priests.

Father Algue is a typhoon expert, and his companion is an authority on earthquakes. They bring with them, besides twelve manuscript volumes on scientific subjects, many valuable maps of the Philippine Islands.

Lawton Fund Still Growing.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Notwithstanding the fact that the persons who undertook the fund for the Lawton home have recently relinquished further efforts in that direction, the fund itself continues to grow through small contributions, and a statement issued to-day by Gen Corbin shows that the total subscriptions amount to $93,364.

Transport Grant Reaches Manila.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Gen. Otis informed the War Department to-day that the transport Grant arrived at Manila this morning, with the Forty-eighth Volunteer Infantry, Col. Duvall commanding.

Gen. Wheeler Starts for Home.

IN THE HOSPITAL AT MANILA.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

MANILA, P. I., Dec. 19, 1899.—There are other hospitals in the City of Manila, but the Santa Mesa Hospital, three miles out from Manila, is the main "field" hospital. It stands on high ground about a quarter of a mile from the Pasig River. The location is superb, as the hospital almost always has the benefit of a slight breeze. The hospital consists of several large bamboo buildings, long and high. Each building has two wards, for instance, Ward 2A and Ward 2B. These wards are large, airy, and commodious.

Each building has its own kitchen, cook, and dining room; each ward has its corps of nurses, which consist of a wardmaster, a woman nurse and three or four male nurses. They are all extremely kind and attentive to the sick soldiers. The doctor makes his rounds twice a day, morning and evening. The patients are mostly fever cases. These cases almost without exception are not fatal. There have been very few deaths in the hospital.

Almost all the soldiers, some time or other during their stay on the island, have a fever of some sort, and it usually comes from intemperance in eating or drinking. This is proved by the fact that the ambulances are worked most and the hospital most fully occupied immediately after "pay day."

The patients are divided into three classes—the very sick, or liquid diets; the medium sick, or special diets, and the convalescents, or heavy diets. A patient usually advances through these grades, and is discharged when completely well once more.

There are Filipino servants in all these wards. They are, as a rule, lazy and pretend to be very dumb. They cannot stand cold at all, and during these chilly nights in December they beg the nurses very earnestly for blankets. The cooks in the different buildings are white men, but each one has a number of Chinese assistants. The cook in our ward was on the Baltimore at the battle of Manila Bay. He wears one of the Dewey medals, which were struck by order of Congress. He is a good cook and gives the "heavy diets" fine meals, and prepares the other diets in a very tasty manner. One of the boys attempted to transfer to his own plate food intended for an absent patient, and the cook caught him in the act, and had him tried for it. He was given a heavy fine.

There is a company of soldiers quartered opposite the hospital in a building like the hospital buildings, and it is a part of these soldiers' duty to guard the approaches and prevent any of the convalescent patients from going out of bounds. There is a canteen about a hundred yards out of bounds where pie, sandwiches, candy, and the like may be bought, and this makes the temptation to break the rules very hard to resist. If caught, the result is a heavy fine, so it makes the boys cautious.

Immediately back of the hospital is a marshy meadow where a herd of caribou (water buffalo) feed. This meadow is the way the boys take who wish to go shopping at the canteen without getting caught. The caribou are tame enough when attached to a cart, but they are not always so mild when at liberty, and one day when three of the boys were going through the meadow on their way to the canteen a caribou charged them. A number of us in the hospital were watching them, and had a great deal of fun estimating the time it took them to cover the distance to the road and safety. We concluded that Aguinaldo's record for running was equaled, if not beaten badly.

They provide us with reading matter, and every morning numbers of Filipino boys come in shouting, "Freedom to-day! Freedom to-day!" so we have the Manila papers to read also; but, for all that, time hangs heavy on our hands. We derive some amusement from the frequent changes they make in the ward. One morning they go through putting a spread top-most on our bed, and the next morning they go through and put our blanket on top, with the spread folded up small under it at the foot. Then another morning they change the positions of the iron bedsteads we sleep on. Finally, they decided that our numbers were not arranged in the most convenient manner for the doctor in making his rounds, so they changed all our numbers. This played havoc in the medicine list, and caused great fun in the ward. Some fellows who were getting quinine had physics offered them, and vice versa. Nobody came to grief, though, and at last accounts all were doing well.

LEMPKE'S HORRIBLE DEATH.

Christian Scientist Found with His Head in a Stove—Probably a Suicide.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., Jan. 25.—Frederick A. Lempke, who conducted "Christian Science parlors" in St. Cloud for some time, met a horrible death at the home of J. K. Orton in East St. Cloud this afternoon.

It is supposed he deliberately placed his head in a heating stove, for when found he was in this position, his head and shoulders burned to a crisp.

A letter was found in which he said he had been unable to concentrate his thoughts for some time.

ANOTHER MOVE IN THE GAS COMPANIES' FIGHT

New Amsterdam Reduces Its Rate from $1.05 to 65 Cents.

RIVALRY COMPELS IT TO ACT

Possible Effect of Opposition to the Consolidated Management on the Situation.

Another notable move in the gas war was made yesterday, when at a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the New Amsterdam Company, held at the office of August Belmont, 23 Nassau Street, it was decided to reduce the price of gas from the legal rate of $1.05 per 1,000 feet to 65 cents, the rate charged by the rival Consolidated and Standard Companies. Two months had sufficed to convince the company that its former step in raising the price from 50 cents to the legal limit, whatever may have been the reason that impelled it, was a false one. This step was taken, as is now avowed, in the belief that the other companies would follow suit, and their failure to do so left the New Amsterdam Company no alternative but to cut its rate again.

The New Amsterdam, which is a merger of the East River and Equitable, had for some time offered its product at 50 cents, and this, with other inducements, obtained for it a big proportion of the custom of its rivals. Suddenly, on Nov. 23 last, it announced that, in view of the fact that the company's output had reached the limit of its capacity, it had been decided to restore the price of gas to the legal rate beginning Dec. 1. The legal rate up to Dec. 31 was $1.10, and is now $1.05.

The announcement caused considerable surprise, and in connection with a Wall Street bulletin of the previous day, which said that the gas companies were weary of the war and dissatisfied with prevailing prices, and that efforts being made to effect a settlement would result in some definite step to that end being taken within a few hours, was believed to be the beginning of the end of the conflict, denials to the contrary by the officers of the other companies notwithstanding.

NO SETTLEMENT IN SIGHT.

The denials of the Standard and Consolidated were seemingly made in good faith, and although many persons in Wall Street professed to see in yesterday's move another indication of an approaching settlement, the idea was scouted by those well posted on gas-war matters, who declared that the company was forced from an untenable position. This, in fact, was admitted by an official of the company. "It's the Spion Kop of the gas war," said the Wall Street wags, "and the Consolidated now holds the Kop."

Meanwhile the war within the Consolidated fold goes merrily on, and it is reported that George A. Lamb, counsel for the stockholders who protested against the election of the Trustees at the annual meeting on Monday, purposes to apply for a mandamus to compel the company to restore the price of its gas to the legal limit. This application, it is said, will be made should Mr. Lamb's efforts to have the vote at the annual meeting set aside by the courts be successful, and the mandamus will be directed against the Board of Trustees chosen on the election ordered by the courts.

There is said to be good precedent for the issuance by a court of a mandamus compelling the raising of the rate charged by a corporation when the Directors of the corporation have been shown to be acting against the interests of the shareholders in reducing its rate to its customers. Mr. Lamb, when questioned on this point yesterday, said:

"I know of cases that might be applicable, but I don't want to say at present what I will do. I am still working on the papers, and when they are completed the public will have a chance to be informed concerning them."

The meeting of the Directors of the New Amsterdam company yesterday was practically a full one, but an important member of the board, Anthony N. Brady, was not present. It was declared after the meeting that the board's action had been unanimously agreed upon, and the following announcement was given out:

"At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the New Amsterdam Gas Company, held to-day, the price of gas was reduced from the legal rate of $1.05 to 65 cents, commencing with Jan. 15. This action was taken for the purpose of holding the large amount of increased business secured by the company during the war."

ANTHONY N. BRADY'S POSITION.

The fact that Anthony N. Brady, who has just been elected to the Consolidated Directorate, did not attend the meeting was the subject of much comment. Though Mr. Brady is still a New Amsterdam Director, there is considerable speculation in financial circles as to whether he has still a dominant influence in the New Amsterdam company. Many think that he may have disposed of his New Amsterdam holdings. Mr. Brady himself could not be seen.

Mr. Brady's interest in the Consolidated company began when, a few weeks ago, it bought out the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company, of which he was President. In disposing of his interests there he acquired his interest in the Consolidated company, and it is believed by many that his holdings in the Consolidated are of respectable proportions.

It was remarked in some quarters that if Mr. Brady, as a Consolidated Director, knew the intention of the Consolidated Gas Company to depress New Amsterdam stock by the process of cut-throat competition with a view to buying its securities in at a low rate, he would be apt to see the wisdom of parting with his holdings in New Amsterdam and waiting to buy them back at a lower figure just before the gas war came to an end. This is just the action Russell Sage took in selling out most of his Standard stock, as he frankly admitted.

After the New Amsterdam meeting down town, President Jourdan and other officers returned to the gas company's general offices at Twenty-fifth Street and Third Avenue. President Jourdan would not be seen personally, but deputed Assistant Secretary Malcolm M. Graham to answer inquiries as to the new move. Mr. Graham said that the decision had been reached to protect the company's customers and because it was found that business could not be carried on successfully at the legal rate.

ATTITUDE OF NEW AMSTERDAM.

The position of the company was further set forth in a statement by Frank S. Hastings, one of the Directors. "Our meeting," he said, "was a full one. By that I mean to say we had a good deal more than a quorum. Mr. Brady was not there. I don't know whether he approved the step we took or not. In fact, though I know Mr. Brady pretty well and see him often, I am unable to understand his position. Of course there is a rational explanation of it somewhere, if we could get at it.

"All of our Directors present were agreed as to the wisdom of making the reduction. The Consolidated shareholders are losing at least $3,500,000 yearly by the gas war. If they are willing to stand it, all right. The Consolidated Trustees thought they would force us to give in by this rate cutting. They have reckoned without their host, I think. Our Directors show absolutely no sign of weakening. They are determined to fight it out.

"All the companies are losing money by this fight, and they will as long as it goes on. I don't know when it will stop or whether it will ever stop. But you may hear of some developments in a few days that will put a new face on matters. The Consolidated shareholders are getting tired of a war which was brought on in order that the few men who control their Board of Trustees might put through a profitable speculation. They want to bear New Amsterdam securities by cutting rates and then buy them in at a cheap figure, and after bringing the war to a close sell out at a profit. They did something like that in the case of the Brooklyn gas companies. They are managing the Consolidated Company for their own ends, and the stockholders don't see where they come in. They are, therefore, taking the matter to court to test their rights."

Mr. Hastings went on to say that the interests behind George A. Lamb were a good deal stronger than the public supposed.

"Mr. Sloan, who sat on Mr. Lamb so forcibly at the Consolidated's annual meeting," said he, "may learn something that will surprise him. Mr. Sloan fairly told Mr. Lamb to shut up at the meeting. The whole affair was the most outrageous and disgraceful proceeding I have ever known in all my corporation practice. But it was just what this Consolidated opposition wanted. It will strengthen their case in the courts. If Mr. Sloan had knocked Mr. Lamb on the head with a club, or thrown him out of the window, or kicked him out of doors, the opposition would have been still better pleased, I dare say. I think Mr. Lamb has a good prospect of winning his entire case in court, setting aside the illegal election and restoring the old rate.

INTERESTS BEHIND MR. LAMB.

"The newspapers have been mistaken in thinking that the New Amsterdam Company is behind Mr. Lamb. It is true that we don't know where a great deal of the New Amsterdam stock is owned, but not one of the persons behind Mr. Lamb, so far as I know, owns a single share of it."

President Harrison E. Gawtry and the other officers of the Consolidated Gas Company declined to comment upon the action of the Amsterdam Company, except to say that the position of their own company was not in any way affected by what the rival concern had done.

John T. Terry, a Director of the Standard Company, said: "This move on the part of the New Amsterdam people brings the fight back to the position in which it was before they raised their rate. First, the New Amsterdam Company dropped its rate to 50 cents, much lower than the rate of its rivals. Then, having reached out and gathered in a host of customers of the Standard and Consolidated, it raised its rate to the legal limit, imagining that the others would follow suit and permit it to reap the benefit of the restored rate from the body of customers it had secured at our expense. The scheme didn't work, of course, and the New Amsterdam, seeing its customers falling away in an alarming manner under the new rate, had to climb down."

Russell Sage refused positively to be interviewed. "Tell 'em," he said to his office man, "that I won't discuss the gas question in any of its phases. I won't talk about it at all."

Both the stocks and bonds of the New Amsterdam Gas Company declined on the outside market yesterday as a result of its new departure.

FEW VETERANS ARE SWINDLERS

Not Many Cases of Pension Frauds Attributable to Them—Pensioners Kept as Prisoners.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—People who are not acquainted with the workings of the Pension Bureau imagine that its fraud-detecting machinery works chiefly against veteran soldiers. Many veterans have this idea themselves, and think of the Pension Office as at work to discover frauds on the part of pensioners.

As a matter of fact, a very small percentage of the frauds detected and punished by the bureau are committed by old soldiers. The Law Department is one of the busiest parts of the Pension Office, and its hands are always full of fraud cases, but the great majority of such attempts to swindle the Government are made by civilians.

The commonest case of fraud is that in which some one who never shouldered a musket attempts to get the pension that rightfully belongs to some old soldier. Cases are common in which old soldiers who have served their country and been wounded or incapacitated by illness in its service are kept in durance by civilians who draw their pensions.

Most frequent of all are cases in which veterans entitled to pensions are kept in insane asylums while their pensions are appropriated by some one posing as a "guardian." So common are these that the very name of guardian is in bad odor at the Pension Bureau. It is a kind of fraud hard to detect, for the soldier, who is generally imbecile, is unable to speak for himself. The pension was obtained for him by the criminal, who afterward had himself appointed guardian, and who is drawing the soldier's pay.

In some cases robberies of helpless and destitute soldiers have been carried on for years before they were discovered. A shocking case recently came to the knowledge of the bureau in Indian Territory, in which some bad characters formed a conspiracy to get a pension for a veteran. There was no doubt that he was entitled to it; he was a soldier with a fine record who had been wounded in the wor and was paralyzed. The conspirators enlisted the services of a disreputable woman. They got the soldier drunk, married him to the woman, obtained a pension for him, and drew it for him regularly, using the woman to dominate the man, keep him still, and prevent him from knowing what was going on.

A revolting case came up recently in Washington, in which an old soldier was found to be kept as a prisoner in a stable by some ruffians who were regularly drawing his pension. He was feeble, helpless, and practically an imbecile. He lived in the stable, being too feeble to walk for any distance. He had no clothes except such rags as they chose to give him; he had no bed, and was fed on refuse. When he complained, he was dosed with bad whisky, which was his principal article of diet.

A case came up in Pennsylvania some years ago in which a veteran soldier was kept a prisoner in a hut in a country district for a long time before his condition was discovered and he was rescued.

Another common form of fraud is that in which women represent themselves as widows of veterans and succeed in drawing widows pensions.

When a soldier is accused of fraud it is generally in connection with a request on his part for an increase of pension. But such cases form a small percentage of the total number, and one of the principal functions of the detective end of the Pension Bureau is the protection of helpless or infirm veterans from swindlers who try to despoil them of their pensions.

CASTELLANE'S ANGER RISING.

He Now Threatens to Blow Off the Head of the Editor of the Figaro, Instead of Caning Him.

Count Boni de Castellane, who since his arrival in this country has been annoyed exceedingly by stories printed in the Paris Figaro concerning his alleged reckless extravagance, may not cane M de Rodays, the editor of the journal, upon his return to Paris, as he has announced that he would. The Count, after thinking the matter over, said yesterday that he might blow M. de Rodays's head off instead. The Count has decided that his original plan of merely slapping the Paris editor's face is too mild.

The Count when seen yesterday at the Waldorf-Astoria declared that he was bored beyond measure by this Figaro matter. "I shall make no further replies by cable to this wretch Rodays," he added. "My next reply will be given when I see him again. He will remember our meeting. M. de Rodays is now trying to make a farce out of his malicious attacks upon me in his newspaper, but it is a serious matter, as he will discover upon my return to Paris.

"I have not decided how to punish this unspeakable wretch, but will wait until I return to France, when I will probably blow his head off. I have received about 250 telegrams and cablegrams applauding my action in this matter, and expressing hope that I will blow the scoundrel to atoms."

The Count held in his hand a large bunch of unopened letters which he had received. He was busy in the forenoon attending to his mail, and after luncheon both he and the Countess were almost overrun by callers.

THE FIGARO TO SUE THE COUNT.

Will Claim 200,000 Francs Damages on Account of His Dispatch.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The Figaro publishes this morning the following statement by the manager of the paper:

"Count Boni de Castellane having had inserted in several newspapers his dispatch of yesterday, which our chief editor personally could afford to disdain, but whose evident intention was to injure the commercial prosperity of the Figaro Company, we have decided to reply to the Count's claim of 100,000 francs by a cross action for 200,000 francs as damages."

Do You Really Know the Store

PLEASE do not think of it as merely a place of sale—a last chance as a place to get something you need.

Think of it—know it—as the first-chance place to see more of what all lands have produced for personal use and home adornment—more than any other store in America has shown at any time. We speak of the store as a unit—and so it is, though existing in two cities, and the better for the longer reach this consolidation gives.

It is a fashion show, and more.

Yesterday's showing of Oriental Goods was a revelation of the store's grasp on this line of business—we've no patience with "departments," with mere counters for this, that and the other.

Have you seen the

Will you take a run down into the sunshine? Going to Florida? Or, ahead of the pilgrims of the year, off for Europe—to the Riviera, where fashions bloom earliest?

Show days for the new hats we have ready. The millinery chief has been in Europe for a month—we have the cue.

Picture hats and French leather sailor hats (which are trimmed). How much? The finest of this early blooming is $38. There are charming ones for less than $10. New, in every detail.

Winter Hats—and some are really fine—shall be sold to-day and to-morrow. $3 to $5—no matter how many times those prices they were. Not all that we have, but many.

Fashion's school takes no vacation and holds no "finals"—the best scholars we have are studying constantly, here and in Europe.

The Foulards at Half

"Foulard" is a French word meaning "silk handkerchief," but like many words it has outgrown its meaning. To you it means a fabric silk or partly silk, but chiefly noted by the designs or patterns printed on it, or formed by extracting the body color of the fabric.

Foulards that we tell of this week are cotton-and-silk—classed as a cotton dress stuff, because the silk, fine as it is, was put into it simply for beauty's sake.

It is a 50c fabric—its value decided on by last year's selling and by this year's demand. But the maker calls the fabric by another name — which we dare not use. That's his protection—not your concern.

There are over two hundred designs or patterns. Cut into 12-yd. lengths this purchase would make only nine thousand and eighty dress lengths. In three days we have sold three thousand four hundred dress lengths.

You can count on your fingers the days it will take to end the lot—and in a jiffy the choice of designs will be less.

Dress Goods Bargains

One hears almost everything discussed on the in-coming commuters' trains. Sometimes Wanamaker's is the theme—heard it this very week: the wonder how this store could afford to lose money—as recently on gloves and hosiery; as right now on dress goods. For the talkers were solid, prosperous business men who watch the store and who know that Wanamaker bargains are very real. Do you wonder, as well?

It's all simple enough—and the best way out of it, so far as the manufacturers are concerned.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE COMMITTEE FOR BRYAN

Democrats Meet and Indorse His Candidacy.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 25.—The State Democratic Committee set the pace for the Democracy of other States to-day by making Col. William J. Bryan its choice for the Presidency in 1900. This action was taken by the committee while Col. Bryan was on his way to Harrisburg from New York to attend the meeting and confer with the party leaders. This is said to be the first time in the party's history that the Democrats of Pennsylvania have indicated their choice for President in advance of the State Convention.

There was a large attendance of Democrats from over the State to meet Col. Bryan and hear him discuss the issues on which the coming campaign will be waged. The State Convention will be held in this city on April 5, and will adopt a platform along the lines laid down by the Nebraska orator in his speech to-night before 5,000 people at the Kelker Street Hall. The platform will indorse the Chicago declaration of principles, denounce the trusts and imperialism, advocate ballot reform and pure elections, and condemn machine politics. The convention will also nominate candidates for Auditor General, Congressman at large, and Presidential Electors, and elect eight delegates at large to the National Convention.

Col. Bryan reached here at 3 o'clock, and was escorted to the Board of Trade rooms, where the State Committee was in session, by a committee representing the State and local Democratic Committee. He was introduced to the assemblage by State Chairman Rilling, and made a short speech, which was received with much enthusiasm. At the close of the meeting he held an informal reception at the Commonwealth Hotel, and later he was the guest of Mayor Fritchey at a dinner party, at which Col. Guffey, Chairman Rilling, and other party leaders were present.

After to-night's meeting he attended a session of the local lodge of Modern Woodmen, of which he is an active member in his home in Lincoln. Col. Bryan will go from here to Smyrna and Wilmington, Del., and from there to Washington to meet the National leaders. Congressman Hall of Elk, Polk of Columbia, and Green of Berks, who came here last night with the expectation of meeting Bryan, were called to Washington before he reached here to vote on the Roberts expulsion resolution.

Mr. Bryan, in his speech to the State Committee to-day, said, among other things:

"When I come to talk to Eastern Democrats I feel it is my duty to give them every assistance I can, and to tell them that we appreciate the odds they have to contend against. It is easy to be a Democrat in the South, and it is easier to be a Democrat in the West than it used to be. I believe the time will come when Chicago Platform Democracy will be as popular in Pennsylvania as it is out in Nebraska. While no Republican can remember what was in the Republican platform of 1896, and while no gold Democrat can repeat the Indianapolis platform, every Democrat and Republican can remember the Chicago platform. The Democrats ought to make progress in this State, because the Republican Party is more corrupt in this State than in any other State in the Union. Unless the people have forgotten to think and act for themselves, they ought to rise up and wipe the Republican Party out of existence.

"If the voters of the Democratic Party speak now as they did in 1896, they will send men to the National convention who will write a platform like that of the Chicago declaration of principles. I believe we are going to win in the campaign of 1900. The young men who are coming to vote this year for the first time are beginning to believe that the Republican Party is a good thing for the monopoly and a poor thing for the young man, who, as things are going now, can only hope to be a poor clerk for some monopoly."

BRYAN'S SNUB AT ANNAPOLIS.

Assembly Committee Reports—Majority Now Squarely on Record Against the Silver Leader.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 25.—In accordance with Mr. Gorman's anti-Bryan programme Mr. Willis's resolution that Bryan be invited to deliver an address before the General Assembly was reported to-day unfavorably by the House Committee on Federal Relations, to which it had been referred facetiously by Speaker Wilkinson, who also is Secretary of the Democratic State Committee. It was generally supposed that the party organization leaders would be satisfied with snubbing Bryan by referring the resolution to a committee and would let it sleep and die, but this was not enough. Gorman and the party organizations determined to place the Democratic majority in the Legislature on record as deliberately "turning down" the free-silver leader. The report of the committee was promptly adopted.

Speaker Wilkinson, in explanation of his action toward the Bryan invitation, says he always has been opposed to dragging national questions into the State Legislature.

"I am satisfied," he continues, "that the passage of the resolution could serve no good purpose as we were elected on State issues only. We must not suffer national questions to obtrude and disrupt and divide the party."

The action of the House to-day will widen the breach already apparent between the silver and the gold elements in the party in Maryland. It is considered another bit of evidence that Gorman has his eye on the Presidential nomination.

To Celebrate Bryan's Birthday.

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 25.—The Bryan Birthday Anniversary Club met here to make preliminary arrangements for the club's annual banquet on March 19, Mr. Bryan's birthday. Covers are to be laid for 400. F. H. Hood, President of the club, has assurances that Mr. Bryan will be here. George Fred Williams of Massachusetts has sent a note to say he will be here if business engagements allow. Senator Tillman, Mayor Carter H. Harrison of Chicago, ex-Gov. Hogg, and John R. McLean are expected to be among the invited guests.

FATAL FIRE AT FREDONIA.

Two Lives Lost and $200,000 in Property Destroyed by the Flames.

DUNKIRK, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Fire this morning did $200,000 damage at Fredonia, a village three miles south of Dunkirk. Besides the loss to buildings, the power house of the Dunkirk and Fredonia Street Car Company was totally destroyed, together with all the cars, and as a result traffic between the two places by cars has been suspended.

Two lives were lost in the flames: Miss Alice Huntington and Warren Leopold Bretzckgl, a Swiss printer.

No insurance was carried on the power house, the loss being $60,000. The total insurance is only $62,150, while the total loss is estimated at $200,000.

PONY BEAT EXPRESS TRAIN.

VINELAND, N. J., Jan. 25.—Mrs. Ernest Fisher had a narrow escape from being killed to-day. She and her husband were out driving in a cart drawn by a pony. One of the reins broke, and the pony started to run. Mr. Fisher tried to leap upon the pony's back, but lost his footing and fell into the road. He was not badly hurt.

The pony dashed for the Central Railroad crossing at the depot. A fast express was approaching. To those who witnessed the race it looked as if the express would reach the crossing before, or at least the same time as the pony. Mrs. Fisher was clinging to the seat. The pony won the race and dashed across the tracks ahead of the engine, but by such a narrow margin that the engine just grazed one of the rear wheels and bent it. The pony ran to a livery stable and stopped against the door. Mrs. Fisher was lifted from the cart unconscious, having fainted. She has a slight cut on her head, but was otherwise unhurt.

PHILADELPHIA'S FUND SHORT.

Committee Unable to Raise the $100,000 for the Republican National Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—Appeal has been made to Mayor Ashbridge to reorganize the plans for the work preliminary to the Republican National Convention, which work was undertaken by the citizens' association. Confession of their inability to raise the guarantee fund of $100,000 which was pledged to the National Committee was made by the members of the association's Executive Committee, and the Mayor has been urged to name a general committee to take charge of the movement.

Intimations of dissatisfaction among members of the Citizens' Association were given several days ago. Arrangements, including the selection of the Auditorium of the exposition for the meeting place of the convention and the raising of the $100,000 were made by the Executive Committee, but the finances were increased slowly and it was concluded to confer with the Mayor with a view of reorganization.

There were present at the conference Henry Burk, President of the Citizens' Association; W. S. P. Shields, Chairman of the Sub-Executive Committee, and Richard G. Oellers, Chairman of the Finance Committee recently appointed. To Mayor Ashbridge was made known the work which had been undertaken by the Citizens' Association and the difficulty encountered in efforts to make good the $100,000 pledge.

Mayor Ashbridge declared his desire to see Philadelphia make the convention a credit to the city's reputation, and said that he hoped the money would be raised. He will consider the matter, and in a few days it is expected that he will invite prominent citizens of the city to co-operate in injecting new life into the movement.

LONG ISLAND CONGRESSMEN.

Working Together, They Make Their Influence Felt in the House—Look Out for Home Interests.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Considerable interest has been aroused by the unusual influence of the Long Island delegation in this Congress. While this delegation does not number any men of National fame in its ranks, it has made itself felt and now has a weight and is received with a respect that have not always fallen to the lot of Long Island delegations. As a general thing Long Island Representatives make no mark, vanish after a term or two, and are forgotten.

One reason is, of course, that Long Island, or at least the Brooklyn part of it, is one of the communities which limit their Representatives to one or two terms. It is one of the communities which, instead of seeking to make themselves felt in Congress, make elections to the House rewards for party service, and therefore seek to bestow them on as many persons as possible.

The workings of the opposite theory are most strikingly illustrated in Maine—a small State, with only four Representatives, yet which has exercised an influence in National affairs utterly out of proportion to its size. The chief reason is that to be a Representative from Maine is practically to hold "a life job." The Maine Representatives go on from year to year acquiring experience, knowledge, and influence, until they become leaders of the House. The influence of Maine is such an accepted fact that the cause of it was hardly considered until, within two or three years, Reed, Dingley, and Milliken all disappeared from the House, and their places were taken by new men. Maine was at once shorn of most of her influence. If Mr. Boutelle's illness should prove fatal, her entire delegation will be made up of new men. But if she follows her old policy, she will keep them in Congress until she has regained all her old influence. The extent to which the custom is observed in Maine is shown by the fact that although Mr. Reed was in 1898 in flat opposition to the sentiment of his district, there was no opposition to his renomination and re-election. His influence in Congress was a capital for the State of Maine which it could not afford to throw away.

In the minority, Missouri has exercised a great influence in Congress through keeping her servants in the House year after year. The same is true of other States. But there are States and parts of States where the other rule holds away, and where the people prefer to carry the principle of rotation in office into the Congressional delegation. The rule in Congress is that a man must serve his time before he can acquire influence, and these States therefore fail to make the impression on National affairs which is made by smaller communities.

Long Island's delegation is entirely new, with the exception of Edmund H. Driggs, who is serving his second term. Its influence is due to the fact that its members work together intelligently. They early appreciated the fact that, owing to the short-service custom prevailing in their community, Brooklyn, with a delegation of new men, would have no influence in legislation unless they joined their efforts and worked together for a common end. The delegation acts as a unit in everything it wants to accomplish. This is made easier by the fact that they are all members of the same party.

The result is that the delegation is usually successful in protecting and advancing the interests of Brooklyn and Long Island, and that that locality's wishes are heard with respect. Mr. Driggs, the leader of the delegation, fared well in Speaker Henderson's committee appointments, and his fellow-members, Messrs. Scudder, May, Fitzgerald, Clayton, and Wiley fared better than many other new members. This indicates how early in the session the delegation had begun to make itself felt.

FOR AN ALASKAN-PACIFIC CABLE.

Plan to Lay One on That Route—Its Advantages and Disadvantages.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Copies of a circular advocating the laying of a cable to Asia by the Alaska route have been received here and have led to inquiries as to whether the suggestion has taken any more substantial form, but no bill has been introduced yet. The proposition embodied in the circular is that an American company will construct a cable to Asia by the Alaska route at its own expense, without asking for a Government subsidy, thus relieving the Government of the cost of laying a much longer cable by the route across the Pacific Ocean advocated in the bills introduced for the Navy Department.

Those who have inquired into the merits of the proposition admit at once that there is some saving to be made by laying a cable to Asia by way of the upper circle, but they assert that the saving in cost would be at the sacrifice of the chief objects sought to be secured by laying the longer cable at greater depths. While the route to Japan and the Philippines by way of Alaska is shorter than that directly across the Pacific, the cable suggested by the Navy Department will connect the Government with Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippines, and will touch only at American ports.

As a Government route, that by way of Alaska would lack several things. Very few ships go to Japan and the Philippines by way of the northern route, and there are no coaling stations, except a small one at Unalaska. There are some 30,000 Americans in Alaska who would be assisted by a cable, and commercially it is admitted that one would undoubtedly come nearer to being commercially self-supporting if laid on that route than by way of Hawaii. But the contention of the Navy Department is that a cable that does not touch at Hawaii will be a mistake, and that for many reasons a cable that touches anywhere at a foreign port will be weak in a military and governmental sense.

If the question of economy in laying the cable were the only one to be considered, it is admitted that the Alaska route would commend itself to the attention of Congress. It is believed, moreover, that the proposition to lay a cable to Alaska would not be very seriously resisted.

That the thief was in possession of the combination is evidenced by the absence of marks on the safe.

MR. BISPHAM'S REQUEST RECITAL

The Popular Baritone Sings the Songs Asked For by Friends.

Mr. David Bispham, the popular baritone, gave last night what he called a "request" song recital at Mendelssohn Hall. He had prepared a programme of songs asked for by his admirers. His plan had at least one merit. It insured favor for the music offered. It was hardly to be expected that it would produce a programme of a symmetrical kind. But the dear public must be pleased or else we must go out of the business. Nevertheless, the result of Mr. Bispham's experiment, if experiment it can be called, was one that calls for nothing but complimentary remarks on the public. The list of songs sung last night was one to suggest that the comment of to-day be on the high taste of a musical community which could make such a series of requests.

The list was as follows: Beethoven's "Adelaide" and "Die Himmel Rühmen," Brahms's "Wie Bist du Meine Konigin" and "Meine Liebe ist Grün," Schumann's "Widmung," "Die Lotosblume," and "Frühlingsnacht," Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh" and "Erl-König," Franz's "Im Herbst," Carnelius's "Ein Ton," Tschaikowsky's "Nun wer die Sehnsucht kennt," Grieg's "Ich liebe dich," Schubert's "Who Is Sylvia?" Liza Lehmann's "Myself When Young," (from "In a Persian Garden,") the old English song, "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," and Walter Damrasch's "Danny Deever."

Mr. Bispham evidently enjoyed his self-appointed task and sang with a plenitude of tone and with feeling throughout the evening. It is hardly necessary to describe the manner of his treatment of any of these well-known songs. He has sung them often for us, and we all enjoy hearing him. It may be noted, however, that he was at his best last night in the second song of the Beethoven selections, in the first of the Brahms numbers, and in Schumann's "Widmung." But he sang all the evening in an interesting manner, and deserved the applause which he received in abundance. The audience, it should be added, was one of uncommon size, and its enthusiasm was such as might have been expected in the circumstances.

MR. HAMBOURG'S RECITAL.

No sooner had the echoes of Paderewski's piano playing died away than young Mark Hambourg returned to town, and yesterday afternoon he gave the first of two recitals at Mendelssohn Hall. It is hardly possible to say anything of the performances of this young bundle of nerves that has not already been said. Mr. Hambourg is not likely to change his style of playing in a single season, and his characteristics are the same as they were when he set out to amaze other communities with the strength of his hands and wrists and the rapidity of his octaves. His best work yesterday was done in the C major fantasia of Schumann. He showed an intelligent appreciation of the music, and his performance was marred only by a want of balance and repose.

He played the B flat minor sonata of Chopin in a manner calling for nothing but the severest condemnation. Sledgehammer tactics will not do in this sort of music, and the reading of the funeral march was almost exasperating. An Intermezzo in Octaves" by Leschitizky gave the pianist an opportunity to show his wonderful command of this species of technic. He also played a dreadful distortion of the prize song from "Die Meistersinger," by Schütt. It is bad enough to have men write such stuff, but there is absolutely no excuse for playing it. It seems a pity that a player with such a temperament as that of Mr. Hambourg and such a technic should not devote more consideration to the pure beauty of his art; but perhaps he will come to that in time. It would be a cause for sincere regret if he should develop into a rival of the piano playing machines which are now so common.

MANAGER STEWART RESIGNS.

William G. Stewart, one of the leading baritones of the Castle Square Opera Company, and managing director of the organization, has tendered his resignation to Henry W. Savage, proprietor of the company, to take effect Feb. 3. It was known for a week prior to the production of the new lyric drama "At the Lower Harbor" in this city, that Mr. Stewart was very desirous of singing the rôle of Cicilio, which was created in St. Louis, where the opera was first presented more than two weeks ago by William Pruette.

It is said that Mr. Savage partially promised to grant Mr. Stewart's request, but that subsequently he came to the conclusion that with Mr. Pruette's experience and reputation the latter would be the more desirable man for the rôle. This did not meet with Mr. Stewart's approval, particularly as he has heretofore had the whole of the management of the company in his own hands. In consequence his notice of resignation was handed to Mr. Savage last Monday.

Many members of the company are of the opinion that Mr. Stewart's friends will prevail upon him to withdraw his resignation and that a satisfactory arrangement with Mr. Savage will be effected. It is known, however, that if the reconciliation is not effected Mr. Stewart will organize a company in some other city and conduct it on the same lines as those on which the Castle Square Opera Company is conducted in this city, Chicago, and St. Louis. Mr. Stewart says he has ample financial backing for his scheme.

Weber and Fields in Chicago.

Weber and Field have entered into a contract by which a theatre in Chicago, probably the Columbia, will be opened under the management of Dunn and Ryley, and will be called Weber & Fields's Music Hall. All the burlesques produced at the New York house will be repeated in Chicago by a stock company organized by Dunn and Ryley. The new house will be opened Oct. 1 with "Whirl-i-Gig" and "Barbara Fidgety."

Long Island Theatrical Circuit.

SAG HARBOR, L. I., Jan. 25.—Ivan G. Byram of this place is working upon a scheme to establish six theatres on Long Island. Mr. Byram's idea is to have a circuit of six towns, engage companies for a week, and have them play one night at each of his theatres.

CAR STARTER FATALLY CRUSHED

John Cannon, twenty-two years old, of 22 Sixteenth Street, Brooklyn, a starter in the employ of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, was so badly crushed between two trolley cars last evening in front of the Hall of Records that he died soon afterward in the Brooklyn Hospital.

Cannon was stationed between the tracks at the junction of Willoughby, Adams, and Fulton Streets, the most dangerous railroad crossing in Brooklyn. While directing the movement of the cars of the different lines, he signaled Fulton Street Car No. 2,137 to proceed. The car jumped the track and crushed Cannon. The unfortunate man was caught between it and a De Kalb Avenue car. His back and several ribs were broken.

CROWDS AT THE BICYCLE SHOW.

Mrs. Langtry Attends and Inspects the Automobile Exhibit.

As the Bicycle and Automobile Show draws to a close the interest in it seems to increase, and yesterday, despite the rain, more than 15,000 persons visited Madison Square Garden. The average visitor is more interested in the automobile than anything else. This is well shown by the large crowds which gather wherever the vehicles are on exhibition. Mrs. Langtry inspected this part of the exhibition yesterday and spent considerable time examining one of the high-priced Victorias.

Charles Murphy, of mile-a-minute fame, gave another exhibition of the nerve-shaking order last evening on his home trainer, and this time succeeded in reducing the record to 55 seconds. When the time was announced the crowd, which had stopped promenading to watch him accomplish his feat, applauded.

The bicycle exhibits this year are more numerous than ever, and have many new features. The bicycles are arranged in order from the oldest to the latest models and form in themselves a history of the art of cycle making. A gasoline motor weighing only forty-five pounds was placed on exhibition yesterday. It is of one-horse power, and can be attached to any bicycle, which it can drive, it is said, at a speed of from thirty to thirty-five miles an hour.

GOV. ROOSEVELT DISCUSSES CANALS

Special Message Transmitting Canal Commission's Report.

RECOMMENDS GREAT CHANGES

Sixty Million Dollars Estimated as the Sum Required—Believed Necessary to Keep Control of Commerce.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Gov. Roosevelt to day transmitted to the Legislature a special message accompanied by the report of the Canal Commission. The Governor concurs with the recommendations made. The report was referred to the Finance Committee on motion of Senator Raines. The text of the message is as follows:

To the Legislature: I herewith submit the report of the Canal Committee appointed by me March 8, 1899, to carefully investigate the whole question of the proper policy which the State of New York should pursue in canal matters. The committee consisted not only of the State engineers and surveyors and Superintendent of Public Works, but of five of the best-known and most responsible citizens of the State, who have taken over ten months to make their investigation. One of their number has carefully gone over, on the ground, some of the most important European canal systems. The whole committee visited the Canadian canals, besides going thoroughly over our own. They have collected an immense mass of testimony, and have had most careful surveys made. They went into the matter absolutely without prejudice, and have felt their way step by step, coming to no conclusion until the evidence in its favor seemed overwhelming. The report they now make is unanimous, and too much stress can hardly be laid upon it.

I am well aware of the gravity of the matter that they report. They deal with the most important single State interest which is cared for directly by the State Government. They propose a policy which will entail very heavy expenditures, which should only be justified by success, and which there would be no warrant in adopting save for the weightiest and most unanswerable reasons. Yet I am convinced that their reasoning is unanswerable; that the policy they propose is not merely wise and proper, but indispensable, if the future development of the State is to in any way correspond with its past.

THE EUROPEAN CANALS.

The committee pointed out that the first question to consider is whether the canals should be kept or abandoned. I call your attention on this point particularly to the report of Mr. Witherbee on the European canals. It appears from this that in the most highly developed portions of Europe there has been an immense positive and relative increase in the canal systems and in the traffic upon them, so that the experience of Germany, Russia, France, Belgium, or, in short, of all the great industrial communities where canal work is possible, is that it is desirable and profitable to keep up the development of the canals as fast as the railways are developed. It is alleged, however, that owing to America's advanced position in the equipment and management of her railways, as compared with Europe, the problem here is different, the canals being hopelessly at a disadvantage, it being alleged specifically that the railroads competing with the canals can now carry freight so cheaply that under no circumstances would it pay to transport it along an artificial waterway through this State. This subject the committee discusses at length. It comes to the conclusion, and fortifies it by arguments which are seemingly irrefutable, that if the canals are modified to meet the requirements of the business of to-day, freight can be transported upon them for about one-third of the cost by rail, and that so far as human foresight can look into the future this result can be guaranteed for at least a generation. If the facts thus set forth are true, and seemingly they cannot be successfully controverted, it is a matter of vital interest to New York State, and especially to New York City, Buffalo, and the great cities between them, that the canals should be put upon a really satisfactory working basis.

NEW YORK'S COMMERCIAL DECLINE.

New York has seen of recent years a steady relative decline of her commerce compared to that of other ports. This has largely been brought about by railroad discrimination; but there have been other factors at work. Among them the decadence of the canal commerce has been the most prominent. A new danger is now added by the upbuilding of the Canadian canal system, which was completed last Fall. I call your especial attention to the committee's reference to what this means in the way of the establishment of business plants at the sea to do the work that would otherwise be done in Buffalo and New York. Another fact upon which special emphasis should be laid is the rapid development of Buffalo as the centre of the iron industry and the probability that this development will go on in accentuated form during the next few years. The canals are of course specially fitted for transportation of bulky articles. Grain and lumber fulfill these requirements and so does iron. The growth of Buffalo as an iron centre would be enormously stimulated by, and in turn would of itself fully compensate for the proposed enlargement of the canals. And, on the other hand, if the canals are made large enough, they can successfully compete in the transportation of high-class freight, which is now exclusively carried by the railroads at high prices.

CHANGES IN BUSINESS METHODS.

The giant revolution in industrial conditions which the last generation has seen has worked as momentous changes in the conditions that affect the business prosperity of communities as in those affecting the business prosperity of individuals. The private corporation which refuses to adapt itself to the new conditions goes down, and it is not possible that a community which follows a similar course should continue to stand on its former plane. Neither New York State nor New York City can afford to rest supine while their eager business rivals strain every nerve to snatch away the commerce which has been so large a part of their life blood. New York is the only State through which, because of its topography, it is possible to transport freight by water from the great basin of the Mississippi to the Atlantic.

The Dominion of Canada on the north has similiar advantages, and how well the Canadians have availed themselves of them the final opening of their great canal system last Fall conclusively proves. If we do not improve our own canals we shall have nothing wherewith to meet the advantages conferred upon Canadian commerce by her canals on the north, while we deprive ourselves of a great aid in the struggle which our business rivals in our own country, leaving ourselves at the mercy of the combinations made by railroads for the benefit of other localities. The considerations affecting our commercial welfare are too vital for us to neglect them. It may, I think, therefore be assumed that we cannot abandon the canals. It remains to consider in what form we can make use of them. Obviously there is no sufficient object to be gained by keeping them as they are. They do not do enough at present to warrant our continuing them in their present shape. If we are not to abandon them they must be so improved as to make them a real benefit.

THREE PLANS PROPOSED.

Three plans are proposed:

1. To complete the canals much on the line of what was intended in 1895.
2. To make them ship canals.
3. To adopt an intermediate course.

As regards the ship canal, it suffices to say that at present the subject is not practicable as a State undertaking. The expense would be enormous, and it is by no means certain that it would be economical in the end to try to substitute for the three present types of cargo craft—that is, the lake steamer, the canalboat, and the ocean steamer—one ship which should go from an interior port across the ocean with unbroken cargo. Under any conceivable change the types of vessels best fitted for navigation, respectively upon the lakes, the canal, and the ocean, would be so great that it is doubtful whether it would be possible to make one type that would do for replacing all three.

There is a large and influential body of public opinion which favors completing the work begun in 1895, or making what are practically not very essential changes in it. The commission, however, gives excellent reasons why this should not be done. The work would be far more expensive than it was originally supposed would be the case. One great trouble with the present canal improvement is that it was undertaken without a thorough estimate of the total cost of completing it. No further enlargement should be undertaken without such an estimate, and this has been made by the committee with the utmost care. After careful investigation, the committee estimate that the nearest modification of the 1895 plan, which would be in any way satisfactory would cost $21,000,000. The State of New York is rich and can afford to pay heavily for a great and real improvement in its transportation facilities. But it can not afford an inadequate improvement. The committee give good reason for their belief that no adequate purposes would be served by changing the canals as they would be changed through the appropriation of $21,000,000 or less.

BARGE CANAL DISCUSSED.

There remains the committee's plan for a barge canal capable of carrying boats of a thousand tons' capacity to build which would involve an expenditure of $60,000,000. At the outset this seems a very large expenditure of money, but the more I have looked into this question the more I believe that, considering the interests of the State as if they were those of a mere business corporation, this expenditure will seem right and proper. With an expenditure of $21,000,000, the increase in the freight capacity of the canals and the diminution in the rate on freight might not be sufficient to enable the canals to compete with the railroads as an important factor in our transportation system, and there would be then no adequate return for the money. But $62,000,000 is not too large a sum for the great State of New York to expend, if it will secure for at least a generation the same canal advantages which were secured to this State in the early decades of the century by the original diminutive canals. There is every reason after the most patient investigation to believe that the large canals will result in a transportation cost across the State of New York as low as that on the St. Lawrence canals, and far less than any rate that is possible by railroads at any time within the immediate future, if ever, the difference in favor of the canals over the railroads being more than three-fold; that is, the freight rate on the canals being less than a third that by the railroads. The State of New York would thus receive the full advantages which its topography offers it in low rates of transportation, advantages possessed by no other State on the Atlantic Coast. It must be remembered that the Erie Canal has far more than paid its expenses and over and above this was the incalculable advantage to the State's commerce If the proposed barge canal is paid for as the committee purposes; that is, by taxing the people of the canal counties which would be almost immediately interested and which possessed 80 per cent. of the population and 90 per cent. of the assessed valuation of property of the State; by issuing bonds on this basis, the sum would represent less than one-half per cent. of the assessed valuation of the canal counties; whereas the original Erie Canal represented more than 3 per cent. of the valuation of the State, we shall assume a burden less than one-half so great relatively to our resources as was assumed by New York when she was a comparatively poor and weak community. We would assume a burden only about as great as the burden of the Brooklyn Bridge when it was assumed by New York and Brooklyn.

QUESTION OF MONEY.

If three-quarters of a century ago New York State could build the original Erie canal, if a quarter of a century ago the present City of Greater New York could start to build the Brooklyn Bridge, in each case to the enormous advantage of the community which incurred the burden of the expenditures, there is no reason why the Empire State should now shrink from such an undertaking, when it promises similar results. The eighteen-year bonds which will be negotiated would result in an increase of about ten cents on every hundred dollars of the present assessed valuation, and this would decrease year by year as the valuation increased. The aggregate tax of the canal counties is now about two dollars per hundred of valuation, and this would be an increase of but ten cents on each hundred dollars. As a matter of fact, this ten cents increase is much less than the fluctuations from year to year in taxation. It is the City of New York which will pay over two-thirds of the cost, or in other words, over forty millions of the amount. She is now considering the propriety of spending very nearly double that amount for railroads, bridges, and tunnels to facilitate the movement of her citizens within her own limits. It is surely worth while, when this is the case, to consider the propriety of a much smaller expenditure upon the success of which may depend the fact whether there will be enough passengers to make these enterprises successful.

I call your attention especially to that portion of the committee's report in which it sets forth that the efficiency of the canals depends upon their management quite as much as upon their physical size, and that there should be no further money spent upon them unless accompanied by measures which will secure their management upon an absolutely business basis.

PLAN IS PROPOSED.

The measures are these:

First: To improve all restrictions as to the amount of capital of companies engaged in transportation, so as to encourage instead of hampering the development of these modern business methods, which are largely the foundation of our present prosperity.

Second: To provide for mechanical means for traction and the use of mechanical power in the place of hand power in the locks.

Third: The regulation of the force on a permanent basis so as to afford a guarantee to applicants that their tenure of office and promotion will depend solely upon their fitness. This I consider a recommendation of vital importance. We must make it possible for young engineers to enter into work on the canals as they would into any other career, and the ordinary laborers and the like should be employed only when they show themselves presumably fit for the work, and should be kept so long, and only so long, as they render efficient service, being promoted, reduced, or dismissed strictly in accordance with the capacity, industry, and good conduct of which they give proof. There must be legislation to secure the permanence of any such system.

Fourth: A revision of the laws in regard to the letting of public contracts and of advertising, so as to prevent the repetition of the matters animadverted upon in the portion of my annual message on the subject of the canals, recently laid before your body.

I again earnestly ask your attention to this subject, than which no other can be more vital to the welfare of the State.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

Recommendations Concerning the Needs of the State's Artificial Waterways.

The Committee on Canals, appointed by the Governor in March, 1899, to consider the canal policy of the State, consists of Gen. Francis V. Greene Chairman; ex-Mayor George E. Green of Binghamton, John N. Scatcherd of Buffalo, Frank S. Witherbee of Port Henry, Major Thomas W. Symons, United States Engineers, with the State Engineer and Surveyor, Edward A. Bond, and the Superintendent of Public Works John N. Partridge The report of the committee is signed by all the members, and it is understood that while there was much discussion at some of its meetings, yet at the end all the members were unanimously and heartily in favor of the report as finally adopted.

Following are the specific recommendations of the committee.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

First—That the canals connecting the Hudson River with Lakes Erie, Ontario, and Champlain should not be abandoned, but should be maintained and enlarged; and that the Black River and the Cayuga and Seneca Canals should be maintained as navigable feeders, but that they should not be enlarged at the present time.

Second—That the project of a ship canal to enable vessels to pass from the upper lakes to New York City (or beyond) without breaking bulk is a proper subject for consideration by the Federal Government, but not by the State of New York.

Third—That the project of 1895 for the enlargement of the Oswego and Champlain Canals should be completed at a cost of $2,642,120. That there are two projects for the enlargement of the Erie Canal which should be considered by the State of New York. The first is to complete the project undertaken in 1895, with certain modifications, to wit: The deepening of the prism to 9 feet throughout, and the lengthening of the locks on one tier so as to pass two boats, each 125 feet in length 17½ feet in width, and 8 feet in draught, with a cargo capacity of about 450 tons each, and the lengthening of the locks on the other tier so as to pass a single boat of the same size; the use of pneumatic locks, or other mechanical lifts, at Cohoes and Lockport, and new locks at Newark and Little Falls, by which twenty-one locks will be eliminated; the construction of a new canal from near Clyde to near New London—about eighty-one miles in length—giving a wide waterway throughout the Seneca and Oneida Rivers and Oneida Lake, and avoiding the Montezuma marshes; the abolition of the two aqueducts across the Mohawk River, and the substitution of the river for the canal from Cohoes to Rexford Flats near Schenectady, and possibly as far as Little Falls; the construction of a new canal from the foot of the falls of the Mohawk, near Cohoes, to the Hudson River near the West Troy side cut. The estimated cost of this project is $21,161,645.

The second project is to construct a canal along the same route as above named, but of sufficient size to carry boats 150 feet in length, 25 feet in width, and 10 feet draught, with a cargo capacity of approximately 1,000 tons each. The prism of such canal to be not less than 12 feet deep throughout, with not less than 11 feet of water in the locks and over all structures, and the locks to be about 310 feet long and 28 feet wide, so as to pass two boats at one lockage. Such a canal will be capable of carrying a tonnage equal to the capacity of the St. Lawrence canals. The estimated cost of this project is $58,894,668.

In our judgment, arrived at after long consideration, and with some reluctance, the State should undertake the larger project on the ground that the smaller one is at best a temporary makeshift, and that the larger project will permanently secure the commercial supremacy of New York, and that this can be assured by no other means. We believe our estimates of cost to be adequate for submitting this proposition to the voters at the election in November next, and in the meantime we advise that the Legislature make an appropriation of $200,000 to be immediately available for surveys, so that the detailed surveys, which are indispensable to the proper making of contracts, could be completed during the present year. If the proposition is approved by the people in 1900 the work can be completed, if properly managed, so as to be available for the season of 1905.

Fourth—That the money to pay for these improvements should be raised by the issue of eighteen-year bonds in the manner prescribed by the State Constitution, and that the interest and principal of these bonds should be paid out of taxes specifically levied, for benefits received, in the counties bordering in whole or in part on the canals, the Hudson River and Lake Champlain; such taxes to be levied in proportion to the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate in such counties. These taxes will amount to about 10 cents per $100 of assessed valuation annually during the period of eighteen years.

Fifth—That the efficiency of the canals depends upon their management quite as much as upon their physical size, and that no money should be spent for further enlargement unless accompanied by measures which will accomplish the following results:

(a) The removal of all restrictions as to the amount of capital of companies engaged in transportation on the canals, and the encouragement of large transportation lines for handling canal business, in place of hampering them, as has hitherto been the case.

(b) The use of mechanical means of traction, either steam or electricity, in place of draught animals; and the use of mechanical power in place of hand power for operating the gates and valves, and moving boats in locks.

(c) The organization of the force engaged on the public works of the State on a more permanent basis, so as to afford an attractive career to graduates of scientific institutions, with the assurance that their entry into the service, their tenure of office, and their promotion will depend solely on their fitness, as determined by proper and practical tests.

(d) A revision of the laws in regard to the letting of public contracts by the State, so as to make impossible a repetition of the unfortunate results of the $9,000,000 appropriation.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

After alluding to the "inestimable benefits which have been derived from the Erie Canal in the past," the committee says that the question which now confronts us is whether the railroads, with their large capital and scientific management, their durable roadbeds, powerful locomotives, larger cars, greater train loads, greater speed, and more certainty of delivery, will be able now or in the early future to reduce the cost of transportation below what is possible on the canals. "If that is possible, it is of no use to spend more money on the canals. The committee does not believe it is possible. It cites the rate of 2½ mills per ton mile on grain from Buffalo to New York in 1899; 2¼ mills on coal on the Chesapeake and Ohio, and the possible rate of 1 mill per ton mile for lake freight on the New York Central Railroad. It quotes the opinion of railroad officers that no such freight charge as 1 mill per ton mile is likely in the near future, and points to the advance now being made. It says:

In our judgment, water transportation is inherently cheaper than rail transportation. It varies slightly with the size of the vessel and the restriction of the waterway. On the ocean, where the waterway is entirely unrestricted and the size of the vessel is the maximum, it averages about half a mill per ton mile; on the lakes, where the vessels are not so large, and occasional restrictions are encountered on the waterway, it is about six-tenths of a mill per ton mile; on the canals of New York, where the boats are very small, the waterway greatly restricted, and obsolete methods are employed for handling the business, it is about two mills per ton mile. By the enlargement of the canal which we fecommend, and the introduction of improved methods of management, we believe that the canal rate can be reduced to two-thirds of one mill per ton mile, or very nearly as low as the lake rates. All of these rates have varied in the past and will vary in the future to correspond with prosperity or depression in general business. But there is every reason to believe that they will maintain a corresponding ratio, the ocean, lake, and canal rates being from one-third to one-fourth of those by rail. The reductions which may be made hereafter in the railroad rate can be met by similar reductions in all three classes of the water rates, provided the same methods of skilled management are applied to all.

Moreover, the canals have been largely limited in the past to the lower grades of freight, and this is equally true of the transportation on the lakes. The canal has thus been in competition with the classes of freight which pay only between two and three mills per ton mile, and which the railroads will carry at a loss rather than lose the business, whereas, the railroads carry other classes of freight, some of which brings as high as fifteen to twenty mills per ton mile, and the average freight, including the low grades, as we have seen, being about six mills. There is no reason why the canals, if enlarged and properly managed, should not compete for the higher grades of freight, which, at prices far below those charged by the railroad, would bring very profitable returns on the lakes and canal.

POSSIBILITIES OF TRAFFIC.

The committee refers to the great extension of canals and canal traffic in recent years in Germany, France, and Russia, as sustaining the greater cheapness of water carriage. It points to the natural advantages of New York in having the only available route for water carriage from the great lakes to the Atlantic, with only the St. Lawrence route as a competitor, and it declares that only by the use of this advantage can New York get its full share in the trade of the country. This is true not only of the grain trade, but of the vast trade in iron and steel.

The changes which are now taking place in the iron trade give reason to believe that if an adequate waterway can be secured between Lake Erie and the Hudson River the centre of the iron industry can be brought within the State of New York. This has hitherto been within the State of Pennsylvania on account of its own resources in ores, coal, and limestone. But the discovery within a comparatively recent period of almost inexhaustible beds of iron ore in the upper lake region, combined with cheap water transportation on the lakes, has led to the abandonment of its own ore and the substitution of those from the lakes. These ores can be laid down at any point on a water route between Buffalo and New York at less cost than they can be laid down in Pittsburg; there is also a great abundance of suitable limestone within the State of New York and adjacent to the water route; and the improvements which we recommend will make available the Lake Champlain iron ores, as well as those of Cuba, for a very economical mixture. The only advantage which Pittsburg would have over Buffalo or New York in the manufacture of iron and steel is in its greater proximity to the coking coals. It is believed that this advantage can be overcome by the saving in the cost of ore and limestone and the great saving in the cost of transportation of the finished product. Between Pittsburg and tidewater the finished product must be transported a distance of 350 miles over a range of mountains, whereas from either Buffalo or New York, or any intermediate point on the water route, the enormous market for steel and iron in New York and New England, as well as abroad, can be supplied at greatly reduced charges for transportation. We believe that a suitable enlargement of the Erie Canal at the present time is justified by the prospect of its use in connection with manufacture of steel and iron and shipbuilding, fully as much as its original construction was justified by the prospect of transporting breadstuffs. Indeed it is not too much to expect that with a canal which can carry manufactured steel from Conneaut to New York for fifty cents a ton, and distribute this from New York to points on the New England coast without breaking bulk, the vast steel and allied industries centring at Pittsburg, which supports a population greater than that of Chicago, will seek an outlet for their products by rail to Conneaut and thence by the Erie Canal, rather than across the Alleghanies to Philadelphia.

The committee explains at length the facts and considerations that induce it to reject the various smaller plans submitted, and to recommend the larger above referred to, at a cost, including the subordinate canals, of $62,000,000. It says:

We have hesitated to recommend the expenditure of a sum of money which, although small in proportion to the resources of the State, is still a very great sum; but after much deliberation we are unwilling to recommend any temporary or partial settlement of the canal question. We do not believe that the adoption of the smaller plan will result in permanent benefit to the State of New York, and as the money expended on the smaller project would be almost entirely wasted in case a larger project should be determined upon later on, we do not feel justified in recommending the expenditure of so large a sum as $21,000,000 for a temporary purpose. We feel confident that the larger project will result in a transportation across the State of New York as low as that by the St. Lawrence canals, which constitute their chief rival at present, far less than any rate which is possible by railroad at any time within the immediate future, equal substantially to the results which could be obtained by a large barge canal or a ship canal, and, in short, would be a complete and permanent solution of the canal problem. It would give New York advantages in the low cost of transportation, and the commerce resulting therefrom which would be possessed by no other State on the Atlantic coast.

THE COST AND ITS PAYMENT.

Up to 1882, when tolls were abolished, the Erie Canal had paid into the Treasury, over all expenditures, over $42,000,000. The total expenditures since for maintenance and improvement, still leave a balance to the credit of the canal of more than $20,000,000. If the State were now to spend the same percentage as formerly on the canal it would appropriate for maintenance $10,000,000, and for construction as much as $50,000,000. No such expenditure is proposed. The proposition is to spend $62,000,000, assessed on the canal counties, and payable in eighteen years, as required by the Constitution. This is but 1¼ per cent. of their assessed valuation, and the annual tax would be at first only 10 cents per $100, decreasing as the assessed valuation increased. About 80 per cent. of the amount would be paid by the City of New York.

TERMINAL CHARGES.

The committee says:

The improvements which we recommend are designed to produce a freight rate not to exceed one cent per bushel from Buffalo to New York. The prevailing rate on the lakes from Chicago to Buffalo during the last few years has been 1½ cents, making a total of 2½ cents for transportation alone for a distance of 1,500 miles. The cost of handling at Buffalo and New York is 2 1-10 cents.

We think that the cost of rehandling is out of proportion to the cost of transportation. It is equivalent to 78 cents per ton. Ore and coal are handled at terminal points on the lakes in large quantities, at a cost of 8 to 10 cents per ton. We believe that the grain can be handled at a cost per ton little, if any, in excess of ore and coal.

Within the limits of the present City of New York and within the new harbor of Buffalo, there are miles of unoccupied and cheap waterfront where suitable structures and appliances for handling the grain out of the lake steamer into the canalboat at Buffalo and out of the canalboat into the seagoing vessel at New York can be erected, the result of which will produce a reduction in the grain rate fully equal to that which can be produced by an enlargement of the canal. If the elevator charges are not voluntarily reduced, then, with a waterway enlarged and made free as we recommend, the grain will sent through from Chicago to New York in a fleet of four or six barges (133,000 or 200,000 bushels) without breaking bulk. This, combined with the Montreal competition, will soon force the adoption of improved and cheaper methods of rehandling.

We do not believe that it is necessary to attempt to bring about these results by legislation. If the use of the canal is made free, without restriction as to amount of capital employed, these results will be brought about in the natural course of trade and competition.

OPENING THE CANALS TO ENTERPRISE.

The committee strongly recommends the repeal of the law limiting the capital of transportation companies on the canal to $50,000. It says:

We believe that, if the canal is enlarged and made free, methods will be introduced in the grain trade under which responsible companies with adequate capital will take charge of the grain at Chicago or Duluth and deliver it in the hold of the seagoing vessel at New York, making use at all points of the line of their own property in lake steamers, elevators, (both movable and floating,) canalboats, and towboats, and giving one through bill of lading. Such companies, it is hardly necessary to say, would not tolerate the antiquated method of hauling canalboats by horses or mules; self-interest would prompt and compel them in a very short time to find the best means of mechanical traction, whether by steam or electricity, whether to have the motive power in each boat, or to have a self-propelled boat which carries freight as well as tows other boats, or to have the motive power in a boat which carries no freight, but is used only for towing. The cost and methods of traction would be studied by such a transportation line with the same care that railroads now study improvements in locomotives, and the result would be constant improvements in the method of traction similar to those which have been in progress on the railroads for the last thirty years, and have resulted in the low rates which have practically driven the old-fashioned canalboat and methods out of the contest. Such a transportation line with such appliances would be able to run boats through the canals on schedule time, and with a more certain adherence to their schedule than the railroads make with their freight trains. It is well known that the schedule time of the lake steamers is far more certain than that of the freight trains on the railroads paralleling the lakes. The canalboats ought to be able to make at least four miles an hour, including lockage, night and day, which would bring the time from Buffalo to New York down in 126 hours, or 5¼ days, in place of about 12 days, as at present.

THE MERIT SYSTEM.

If the Erie Canal is enlarged in the manner we recommend, and becomes again a large factor in the transportation question in this State, the work in its two departments of engineering and management, as well as the minor public works of the State, will afford a life career to the graduates of scientific institutions which they would gladly enter if they could feel sure that their tenure of office depended on good behavior, their promotion upon merit, and that they were not liable to be turned out at any moment for some political reason. While the Constitution places in the hands of the Superintendent of Public Works the power of appointment and removal in his department, yet the law has already restricted his absolute power in the matter of appointments by prescribing examinations and tests of fitness which must be passed before he can make the appointment; and similarly, the Legislature can restrict his power of removal so as to limit it to removal for cause. It is also competent for the Legislature to classify and grade the permanent employes in both the public works and the engineering departments; to prescribe that appointments shall be made only in the lowest grade, and that promotion from one grade to the next higher shall be made after a suitable examination. We recommend that such legislation be passed; and we consider this essential in order to secure permanently an efficient, honest, and economical administration of the canals and public works of the State. If the State creates a service in which men will take pride in serving, and removal from which will constitute a stigma of disgrace, it will be able to secure for this class of work men of a higher order of ability, integrity, and character for a comparatively small compensation. We believe that a unique opportunity now exists for establishing the service of the public works in this State on this basis, to have such legislation firmly planted in the statutes of this State, and to get the system fairly inaugurated and put into practical operation. Your own experience in these matters so far exceeds that of any member of the committee that it seems to us unnecessary that we should attempt to point out in detail the character of this legislation. We have only to call your attention to the matter, and to state that in our judgment the proper administration of the canals and other public works requires legislation which shall prescribe tenure of office during good behavior, appointment only to the lowest grade, promotion from one grade to the next by selection, both appointment and promotion to be determined by suitable tests, and no removals to be made except for cause.

COMMITTEE REPORT PRAISED.

Chairman Hill of the Assembly Canal Committee Says the Recommendations Are Excellent.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Henry W. Hill, Chairman of the Assembly Canal Committee, said to-night that the recommendation of the Canal Advisory Commission for a barge canal is one of the most elaborate schemes ever proposed in this State.

"Such a canal is designed not only to handle local tonnage, but to compete successfully with the great trunk line railroads," he said. "If put through, it will hold the commerce of the State for a century. The recommendation provides for 1,000-ton barges, four times the capacity of the canalboat of to-day.

"One question which will give rise to serious consideration is the recommendation for the imposition of the tax for the improvement upon those counties only that are in touch with canal transportation. Heretofore it has been the policy of the State to carry forward all improvements by general taxation, as it is believed that all parts of the State are benefited by great public improvements. There may be a constitutional question as to the right to impose a tax on only part of the State. Then there is the broader question of public policy, which would seem to warrant the assumption of the burden of all great public improvements by general taxation. This is the theory upon which common schools and other public institutions are maintained."

Mr. Hill said he thought there would be legislation on the canal report this year. Whatever plan was adopted would undoubtedly be submitted to a vote of the people at the polls. Mr. Hill thought the matter would be voted on at the elecion next Fall. His committee will begin work on the two reports just as soon as they are printed.

The Governor Says He Will Abide by Whatever Action Is Taken.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—In speaking of the propositions relative to the improvement of the canals submitted to the Legislature today Gov. Roosevelt said:

"I will abide with the Legislature in anything it proposes to do."

POWERS OF STREET RAILWAYS.

It provides that if any street railroad corporation shall have made and filed a statement of proposed extensions or branches embracing a line from the boundary of a city or village to the boundary of another city or village, generally parallel with the route specified in its certificate of incorporation, and distant not more than one-half mile therefrom, and shall have made and filed an agreement of consolidation with some other street surface railroad corporation formed to build a street railway upon a route continuous or connecting with one or more of the routes described in the statement of proposed extensions, and thereafter there shall have been constructed and operated for a period of four years a street surface railroad from such city or village to such other city or village upon a line embraced in the proposed extension, such consolidated corporation may relinquish and abandon the unconstructed route or portions of route specified in the certificate of incorporation, or in any statement of proposed extensions, by filing in the office of the Secretary of State a copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors of the consolidated corporation declaring its unconstructed route abandoned.

Thereupon the corporate rights, power, and franchises of the corporations shall continue the same as if the certificate of the incorporation of the constituent corporation had specified the constructed and not the unconstructed portions of such route and proposed extensions.

LABOR LAW PENALTY.

Senate Bill Makes Presidents of Street Railways Responsible.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Senator Wagner has introduced a bill designed to fix upon an individual of a corporation the penalty for compelling street surface or elevated railway employes to work more than ten hours per day.

The bill provides that the President or executive head, by whatever title designated, of any such street surface or elevated railroad corporation that shall require its employes to work contrary to the requirements of this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment in a penitentiary or county jail for not less than ten days, nor more than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

PRESSLER'S UNCLE DOUBTS.

Heard Nothing of Railway Accidents When He Visited Nebraska—Missing Man's Papers.

Oscar Pfeiffer of 222 Keap Street, Brooklyn, an uncle of Emil Pressler, whose body is said to have been discovered in a cemetery in Sidney, Neb., he having been killed, as believed, in a railway accident while on his way to San Francisco, said last night that he had not received any intelligence concerning the discovery of the body. Pressler has been missing for a year, and every effort has been made by Mr. Pfeiffer to learn something of his nephew. Mr. Pfeiffer has had circulars distributed throughout the country, offering a liberal reward for any information regarding the missing man, whether dead or alive.

Mr. Pfeiffer stated that his nephew had in his possession at the time he was last seen alive letters of credit, as stated, as well as letters of introduction and identification. At San Francisco Pressler was to take a steamer for Honolulu to meet another uncle and engage in business with him. Had he been killed in a railway accident, Mr. Pfeiffer said, there were certainly enough documents in his pockets to show who he was. Mr. Pfeiffer said he went to Nebraska last October, searching for his nephew, but heard nothing of a railway accident.

Mr. Pfeiffer said he had not communicated with the Sidney authorities, but was awaiting developments.

A RIVAL IN LOVE SUSPECTED.

Young Man Assaulted with a Sandbag at Dobbs Ferry After Escorting His Sweetheart Home.

DOBBS FERRY, Jan. 25.—August Kallmeyer of Irvington was assaulted by an unknown man with a sandbag early this morning on Main Street, in this village. He is badly hurt, and it is feared there is a slight fracture of the skull. Robbery was not the motive and it is generally believed that the young man was a victim of some one jealous of him on account of the success of his love affair.

Kallmeyer is a son of Henry Kallmeyer, landscape gardener in charge of the H. C. Parrish grounds at Irvington. He is employed at the Seabury Launch and Motor Works, at Morris Heights. For some time he has been attentive to Miss Marie Gore, daughter of Detective Gore of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad. Miss Gore is one of the prettiest young women in Dobbs Ferry, and has many admirers, but has appeared to prefer Kallmeyer.

Last night they went to a theatre in New York and reached Dobbs Ferry, on their return, a little after midnight. After escorting the young woman home, Kallmeyer started for the station to take the 1 o'clock train for Irvington. Just after he passed the Dobbs Ferry Bank Building he was felled by a blow from behind. The man who struck the blow must have been standing in a shadow near the building and stepped out as Kallmeyer passed and delivered the blow. The young man fell senseless and lay there almost an hour. A little before 2 o'clock he revived and made his way to the station. He was in a dazed condition, but managed to explain what had occurred. A doctor was called and attended to his injuries.

It was at first supposed the motive for the assault was robbery, but although the young man lay unconscious an hour, his valuables were untouched. This leads to the belief that some rejected suitor for Miss Gore's hand did the sandbagging.

California's "Cattle King" Injured.

GILROY, Cal., Jan. 25.—Henry Miller, the California cattle king, was thrown from his buggy to-day and sustained a concussion of the brain. It is feared that the injury is serious, owing to the severe shock coupled with the advanced age of the millionaire. Henry Miller is one of the richest men in California, and conducted the enormous cattle business of Miller & Lux.

Prisoner with Lockjaw Pardoned.

TRENTON, Jan. 25.—Frank Haley, who had about seven years to serve of a term of ten years, to which he was sentenced from Warren County in May, 1897, was liberated by the Court of Pardons this afternoon. He was convicted of breaking and entering. Haley has lockjaw, and his pardon was recommended by the prison physician and the Judge and Prosecutor of Warren County.

Dynamite Explosions in Leadville.

LEADVILLE, Col., Jan. 25.—The third of a series of dynamite explosions within the city limits occurred early this morning, wrecking the handsome residence of A. V. Hunter, the wealthy mine owner, and the home of J. C. Ritchey, adjoining. No one was injured in the explosions. Several suspicious characters have been arrested.

Cottage at Seabright Burned.

SEABRIGHT, Jan. 25.—The Summer cottage owned by John P. Duncan, on Ocean Avenue, was destroyed by fire early to-day. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin. The cottage was formerly owned by Senator John P. McPherson of New Jersey, and cost $20,000.

Archie Mull Guilty of Murder.

TROY, Jan. 25.—The jury in the case of Archie Mull, accused of the murder of Melville Lord of Nassau, to-day brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree. On a former trial the jury disagreed.

Benefits of a Business Training for Women

Is the title of an article written by Mrs. Hetty Green for the February number of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

Mrs. Hetty Green is the wealthiest woman in the world. Her remarkable business ability has been demonstrated in the accumulation and management of a vast fortune. She writes with the authority of the successful man of business and with the intimate knowledge of her sex that a woman only can have.

A Woman's Way Is the title of a complete story by Octave Thanet, the favorite American writer of short stories. In this tale the author pictures a peculiar phase of woman-nature, and does it in a most delightful manner. Her men and women have hearts; they are not shadowy outlines, but real people, and therefore they appeal to a large class of readers.

The February number of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION contains also the second installment of Mrs. Burton Harrison's splendid serial, "Chateaugay;" "What Might Have Been An American Colony;" "Florence Nightingale, the Soldier's Friend;" "Women and the Automobile;" "The Revival of Art and Beauty," by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, and "The Idiot at Home," by John Kendrick Bangs.

The illustrations in this number are numerous and of a superior quality, embracing the work of B. West Clinedinst, C. M. Relyea, Irving R. Wiles, F. T. Richards, and several expert photographers. An exquisite cover page by Henry S. Hubbell is not the least pleasing of the many artistic features of the February WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

Interesting short stories, games and entertainments, gossip for clubwomen, helps for housekeepers, hints to dressmakers, talks with mothers, pages of fashions, fill out an unusually attractive number.

CONFIDENCE GAME A FAILURE.

Instead of being $400 poorer, as "Kid" Miller, the confidence man, intended he should be, Owen McGivney, proprietor of a Raines law hotel at 220 West Eighteenth Street, says he is richer by a $100 bill. Last Tuesday, he says, a stranger came into his place and told him that he was "all right."

"Well, I presume I am, but what of it?" Mr. McGivney asked.

The stranger, who said his name was Kennedy, hinted that owing to certain river-front friends he could furnish Havana cigars at a 66 2-3 per cent. discount. A member of the gang, one Murphy, he said, who could be found at the Grand Union Hotel, would sell the cigars in lots of 10,000.

"I've had a falling out with Murphy," the stranger said, "so that I can't deal personally with him. I have a commission from a friend for $100 worth of cigars. Now, if

THE CANAL AND THE FUTURE.

The question of the canals is a question of the share of the State of New York, and particularly of the City of New York, in the commerce of the continent and of the world. The movement of trade is necessarily along the line of least resistance, and on the route that offers the least resistance of every kind the movement will proceed. The report of the committee appointed last March by Gov. ROOSEVELT, with Gen. FRANCIS V. GREENE at its head, proposes the development of the Erie Canal at a total expense of $62,000,000, in a way to make the best channel for commerce from the head of the great lakes to the Atlantic seaboard, with cost of transport as low at least as on the line of the St. Lawrence, and lower than the railroads can hope to offer within any time that it is worth while to plan for. It is a proposition parallel with that of CLINTON eighty years ago, with possibilities far exceeding those that he contemplated, with influence on the future of the State more momentous and at a cost involving but a fraction of the proportion of the State's resources required for his scheme.

The fundamental fact in the problem is that water transportation, under modern conditions and with all the improvements made practicable by modern methods and machinery, is cheaper and for the great mass of traffic more desirable than transport by land, even in the most favorable circumstances. A second fact which is decisive of the problem for the State of New York is that in this State lies the only passage through the Appalachian Mountain barrier reared on the eastern edge of the continent from Maine to Alabama to the Atlantic seaboard and the ocean highway for the commerce of the entire world. These were the facts, broadly speaking, that determined the building of the Erie Canal in the first instance, and the wisdom of heeding them is abundantly justified. The canal made New York the city that it is by turning in this direction the current of the rapidly growing trade of the West, and that current caused the building of the great lines of railroads that now pour into and through this port the vast volume of the trade of the country. Conditions have changed, but the fundamental facts remain the same.

Relatively nothing has been done to keep the canals up to the steadily advancing standard of efficiency for instruments of trade, while all that energy, ingenuity, and vast capital, acting under the stimulus of large possible gains and active competition, could do has been done by the managers of the railways to increase capacity and reduce cost of operation. Not merely has the State done nothing worth doing in the direction of improvement, but by the fatuous prohibition of the employment of capital in canal transportation it has prevented private enterprise from doing what could have been done in this way. The proposition of the Canal Committee is that the canals from Lake Erie to the Hudson shall be reconstructed to admit of the passage of boats of 1,000 tons cargo, with steam or electricity as motive power; that the limit of capital for canal transportation shall be abolished; that the service of the canals shall be put upon a strictly business basis, with appointment and promotion for merit only, and adequate security of tenure, and that the cost of this work shall be assessed upon the counties directly benefited, being those along the line of the canals and the Hudson River.

All three features of the plan are equally essential.

The enlargement and improvement of the waterway and the locks will permit the use of vessels that can be loaded at any port on the great lakes and can deliver freight without breaking bulk at any point on the Atlantic Coast from Boston to Philadelphia. This possibility will leave to the elevator companies at Buffalo the choice of lowering the present heavy charges or of losing the business that can be transacted without them. The opening of the canals to sufficient capital invites the employment of the same forces for the development of trade and for progress in methods that have so greatly developed the railways. This is expected not merely to reduce cost, which is only one element in the transport of goods, but to secure care, safety, regularity, responsibility. The one tremendous advantage that the railroads now have in regard to all sorts of freight is that their bill of lading is a negotiable security, and the goods they carry can be bought and sold on the markets of the world through this bit of paper. This must be made possible for canal traffic also if it is to be able to enjoy the advantages that its lower cost should give it. The efficient and businesslike management of the State service of the canals is equally essential.

With these conditions fulfilled there is sound reason for thinking that the development of traffic on the canals will be all that the committee estimates. With a cost of only fifty-two-hundredths of a mill per ton per mile and a freight charge of two-thirds of a mill per ton per mile, yielding nearly 25 per cent. profit on the cost, the canals should be beyond the danger of immediate competition. The committee has studied this part of the question with the greatest care and thoroughness, and the authority of its conclusions is as great as could possibly be obtained from any source in the country. The lowest actual cost of transport by rail is for coal, and this is at least three times the freight charge and five times the actual cost of carriage on the improved canal, while the latter charge is estimated, not on such freight as coal, but on all kinds of freight. This difference in freight charge, when the canal shall have been fitted for modern freight traffic, is the net expression of the benefit to be obtained from the work recommended by the committee.

That benefit is great, varied, and enduring. It is not claimed by any reasonable person that the full relative share in the trade of the country possessed by New York thirty years ago can be restored and retained. The total is too vast and its increase is too certain. But what the modernization of the canal will enable New York to do is to secure a far greater share of this increase than it possibly could otherwise. Already the canal has built up along its line, independent of the effect on the trade of this city, a series of prosperous and active towns from Buffalo to Albany, such as nowhere else in the land exists. The development in the same line in the future will be far greater. The committee shows very clearly what may be counted on in the development of the iron trade with such advantages as can be steadily and surely attained by the canal improvement. That, however, is but one concrete example of the working of the principle on which the statesmanlike plan is firmly based, the principle with which we started out, that the trade of the country will move along the line of the least resistance. We entirely agree with the Governor that this principle abundantly justifies the plan of the committee.

It would be unfair to omit cordial recognition of the high value of the service of the members of the committee, rendered at great cost of time and labor, and wholly without other compensation than the consciousness of a public benefit conferred.

SOUND PREMISES, WRONG CONCLUSION.

New York business men who are abreast of the times will make short work of the report of the Schieren Commission on the decline of the commerce of the Port of New York. They will read with assenting minds these three paragraphs:

> The loss to New York is due in great measure to a discrimination against New York in railroad rates imposed by an agreement, known as the differential agreement, between the trunk line railroads of the American Atlantic seaports, including the New York railroads.
>
> This railroad discrimination against New York would be impossible without the participation of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, and the demand that it withdraw irrevocably from the differential agreement is now made understandingly.
>
> The State has it within its power, through an adequate improvement of the Erie Canal, not only to apply the remedy that will secure it against further loss of its commerce, but that will secure to it as well the restoration of that which has already been diverted.

But when they reach the paragraph containing the recommendation of the commission that the Legislature immediately pass "a bill providing for the earliest possible completion of the improvement of the State canals contemplated by Chapter 79 of the Laws of 1895, and providing for bonding the State in the sum of $15,000,000," and so forth and so forth, they will drop the report in utter disgust at such a policy of futile tinkering and turn with satisfaction to the report of the Special Committee on Canals, in which the canal problem is treated in a solid, constructive, and eminently convincing fashion.

The commercial pre-eminence of New York cannot be maintained by scraping the bottom of the Erie Canal. New York can make her position secure only by spending money enough to construct a waterway deep enough and wide enough to transport commodities in large masses at low cost. Then the railroad differentials, elevator extortions, and lighterage charges will take care of themselves.

"THOUGHTLESS REPUBLICANS."

Who could have expected to see the day when The New York Tribune, of all newspapers in these United States, should class the present President of the same with "some thoughtless Republicans"? Yet that is, in effect, what our esteemed contemporary had been doing. The characterization is made out of a survival of zeal for the once sacred tariff. It is a characterization of the Republicans who desire to extend the blessings of McKinleyism plus Dingleyism to the inhabitants of Puerto Rico. Now the President has not only found it feasible to write an entire message without reference to the blessings of protection, but he has also specifically recommended to Congress to extend our tariff so as to include Puerto Rico. Therefore does the calamity befall him in the house of his friends of being classed among the "thoughtless Republicans."

Of course, nothing but the survival of protectionism could move our esteemed contemporary to this strange and painful license of speech. It fiercely demands that we "keep the laws of the United States of America for the people of the United States of America," and that we bestow such special laws as we may find to be good enough for the likes of them upon the populations which we have found it or may find it convenient or desirable to annex. Anything else, it argues in a chain of reasoning which, doubtless through our own misfortune, we find it impracticable to follow, is somehow connected with the spirit of the late JEFFERSON DAVIS.

What we fail to find, in all the reason and eloquence which The Tribune bestows upon the subject, is a practical proposition for the relief of the people of Puerto Rico. Although we dislike to use the phrase, so ill-omened in a discussion of the tariff, yet it is in fact "a condition which confronts us, and not a theory." The Puerto Ricans are very badly off, much worse off, materially and industrially, than if they had remained under Spanish rule. Then they had a preference for their products in Spanish markets, in return for a preference of Spanish products in their markets, and a trade grew up whereby they lived. This trade we have destroyed without giving them, or pretending to give them, anything in return. And these people do not deserve ill of us. They deserve particularly well of us. They welcomed us as deliverers. They have shown us nothing but the utmost tractability in assisting our administrators. There is not a political question between us and them. There is only the question, for them, of getting a living. We are preventing them from doing that. And the prevention is a National reproach to us, which ought to be borne by every patriotic American with impatience and to be got rid of at the very earliest moment.

How it is to be got rid of is a fair question. Representative Puerto Ricans and representative Americans who have studied the question seem to be agreed that the readiest and most efficacious way of getting rid of it is to extend our tariff to the island. The arguments and the evidence of these people prevailed upon the President. He accordingly made the representation to Congress which has induced the leading journal of his own party in New York to describe him as a thoughtless Republican.

No substantial objections have been stated to this plan, not even from the protectionist point of view. The products of the island, of which coffee is the most important, do not really threaten any American industry. That bringing the island under our tariff will relieve its distress is the opinion of the experts. And the distress is real, is extensive, is urgent. It has been inflicted by us. Whoever objects to the President's plan for relieving it is bound to produce another. Otherwise he convicts himself of want of patriotism as well as of want of humanity. We readily acquit our neighbor of intentionally committing either offense. But its course seems to indicate that it is not the Republicans who have, but the Republicans who have not, any plan for relieving the distress of Puerto Rico who are properly to be described as "thoughtless."

A DEMOCRAT COMES OUT OF THE WOODS.

A person signing himself "Democrat" takes more than a column of the space of The Evening Post to say a lot of undisputed things in a most solemn way. In his artless, prattling fashion he warns the Gold Democrats of New York that they can do W. J. BRYAN no harm by snubbing him. It is only by leaving their cards on him, taking him for drives in the Park, and inviting him to dinner that they can discredit him with the Democratic masses of the Bryanite parts of this country. But let the good, simple man talk for himself:

> How curiously out of touch with the general currents of popular sentiment the New York newspapers are is strikingly exemplified by the parade they have been making these last few days over the "snubs" administered to Mr. BRYAN by the Democratic Club, by the "Tammany leaders," and by so-called "Gold Democrats" generally. The alleged Democratic newspapers, as well as the others, are quite obviously magnifying the "snubs," under the impression that they are damaging Mr. BRYAN and weakening his hold upon his party. Not one of them seems in the least aware that the most effective way to discredit Mr. BRYAN in the eyes of his party would be to pose him as the recipient of ostentatious courtesies at the hands of the "Gold Democrats" of New York, and especially of the Democratic Club.
> There is no newspaper in New York that has the least power to harm Mr. BRYAN. There is no newspaper here that supposes it has that power. There is none that thinks it can check the downward rush of Nebraska and Arkansas Populists into the deep sea. But there are Gold Democrats and sound-money newspapers in New York that still take pleasure in pointing out that Mr. BRYAN is not a Democrat, and that the leaders of his organization are as ignorant of Democratic principles as they are of the art of campaign management.
>
> To begin with, it is human nature for those who were right to twit those who were wrong. The Gold Democrats were right in 1896 when they told BRYAN and his managers that the Chicago ticket could not win. They know that he will be whipped this time worse than he was before. But there their interest in BRYAN and the plans of his managers ceases altogether. They are not trying to defeat his nomination, as they vainly tried to do in 1896. Then they made a strenuous effort to save the party. They know that they cannot save it now. It listens to the new and witless leaders and heeds not the old. It must go to smash once more before any salvage operations can begin—even if then.
>
> The newspapers refer to the snubs administered to BRYAN merely as evidence of the attitude of men of standing and influence here. These dislike and distrust him as much as ever. They will all vote against him, and any money his friends may spend on a campaign in New York will be wasted utterly. It is some comfort to feel that New York stands where she did.

So when this "Democrat" says that "if the so-called Democrats who deserted in 1896 return to the militant Democracy they must come back not as leaders, but as followers," he exhibits one of the familiar consequences of a prolonged sojourn in the deep woods away from all human society. Marooned sailors also show this infantile unawareness of the state of the world.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—"Anti-medicine faith healers" are treated with entirely commendable severity, and no less commendable sense, in the current number of The New York Christian Advocate, and it is a notable fact that quite as much of The Advocate's contemptuous denunciation falls upon those whom it calls "The Simpsonites" as upon the followers of more notorious perverters of reason and religion, like "Dr." DOWIE and Mrs. EDDY. The article begins with a well-founded declaration that these combinations of fraud and fanaticism are rolling up a most extraordinary list of agonizing and unnecessary deaths, and then explains why it is that argument and experience have so little effect upon victims of this form of superstition. "There is little use," it says, "in trying to open their eyes. For in science, religion, or finance, when a person adopts a principle which contradicts reason, philosophy, and the laws of nature, and then, if it happens to touch the subject of religion, distorts every passage of Scripture to make it agree with his irrational theory, he can believe anything. There are in this city well-known men who have all the signs of disease and look as though they had come out of their graves to transact some unfinished business, and could not find the way back, who yet declare that they are cured." In the occasional cures of the "healers" The Advocate sees only results of the strength of nature, concentrated by faith and encouragement, and the article concludes: "Religion, common sense, and experience are all united in one sentence, the author of which is unknown to us: The strongest confidence in the protection and favor of God does not preclude the use of any of the means of self-preservation and defense which His providence has put in our power."

—Reformers of the kind that would reject half a loaf for fear its acceptance might decrease their chances of getting all the bread there is, and who oppose any advance short of the attainment of perfection, continue to argue against the substitution of voting machines for the form of ballots now in use. They all admit everything that anybody claims in favor of the machines—namely, that they expedite voting, furnish complete returns the moment the polls close, and make both frauds and errors in counting practically impossible. These are obvious advantages over the present system, but, say the critics, the machines, like the so-called Australian ballots, make "straight" voting so much easier for the unintelligent that they are a severe handicap on the independent candidate and consequently of direct service to the organization politicians in restricting to their own nominees the choice of the voter. One correspondent, in deprecating our advocacy of voting machines, writes: "The effect of the 'party column' is that many of the offices which are of great importance have ceased to be elective offices in the real sense, and are filled by the 'machine.' This has been shown in New York to be the case with regard to the judiciary ticket. The normal Democratic majority is so large, and the voters really interested in deciding between judicial candidates so comparatively few, that the party column vote carries with it a sufficient number of meaningless votes to elect the candidates of Mr. CROKER'S selection for these important offices." There is logic in this, but it tells against the present form of the voting machines, rather than against machines as such. Those now offered for sale were undoubtedly constructed to meet the requirements of the existing ballot law. Had the law been different, presumably the inventors would have avoided the party column method, and so have pleased the radical independents better. Be the law what it may, the machines will probably adapt themselves to it.

—Patrons of the Topeka street cars have been variously impressed of late by a framed placard conspicuously placed in every one of the vehicles and reading as follows: "Passengers must not leave or enter the car while in motion." Of course, the average Topekan instantly understands what the inventor of this legend meant to convey, obeys or disobeys the command as caution or convenience dictates, and thinks no more of the matter. In Kansas, as elsewhere, however, there are people who think of the how as well as the what of language, and naturally these critical ones are having a good deal of fun over this latest specimen of English as she is wrote by some corporation officials. It's undoubtedly a gem of serenest ray.

—Down in Springfield, Mo., there has recently been organized a woman's society, every member of which has to sign the following decidedly queer agreement: "I do hereby solemnly pledge my word to speak no evil of any woman, whether such report be true or not. Any violation of this pledge, however, does not release me from its subsequent obligations, which are to continue for all time to come." The form of this promise is peculiar, in that it so frankly assumes the improbability of continuous observance of its provisions on the part of its signers, and obliges them to try, try again if at first they don't succeed. To recognize the weakness of human nature at the outset of an undertaking is as rare as it is admirable, and the originator of the society, if she also drew up its pledge, is to be congratulated not less on her practicality than on the excellence of her intentions. Her idea might well be copied by other organizations, the basis of which is a vow to do or not to do some act the commission or omission of which is considered desirable. As to the need of societies like this one in Springfield we would not care to express an opinion, but we do venture to assert that wherever the suppression of gossip would be advantageous, men as well as women should be included in the reform. Were they excluded in Missouri because there they never speak evil, or because of the hope that they will ever cease to do so?

—One whole page and nearly half of another is devoted by The Springfield (Mass.) Republican to the publication of "an appeal to the civilized nations," made by one EMILIO AGUINALDO, as President of a hitherto unidentified republic in the Philippine Islands. Introducing the document is a letter from Mr. ERVING WINSLOW, Eastern Secretary of the American Anti-Imperialist League, vouching for the authenticity of the appeal, and declaring that it came into his hands "accidentally." The same issue of The Republican contains two long editorial articles on Mr. WINSLOW'S accidental acquisition, from which we conclude that it regards him as a very fortunate person. Much to our regret, The Republican does not enter into a computation as to how many chances there were that this treasure from the Orient would drift over the indifferent seas to Mr. WINSLOW instead of to some other of the millions of Americans—of the millions in America, we mean. That problem will be extremely interesting to both amateur and professional mathematicians, and it was only in order that they might set to work on it that we mentioned the matter at all. It apparently has no other importance or significance.

—There seems to be considerable uncertainty, even in England, as to the proper pronunciation of the name of Lord METHUEN, and while its bearer is trying to win back a reputation as a military commander, the papers at home are struggling with the peculiarities of a patronymic in regard to which even he himself may have a little doubt. There is local authority for calling him Meth-u-en, Meth-uen, Methyoon, and Meth-oon, while it is a mere matter of choice whether the spelling is Methuen or Methven. The latter is the older form, but whether the "v" was or was not a substitute for "u" is a matter of opinion. His title is not the old Scots one, which, created in 1528, lapsed in 1580, but was recreated in 1675 along with the Dukedom of Lennox, the present Duke of RICHMOND, LENNOX, and GORDON being Baron METHVEN. Lord METHUEN is Baron METHUEN of Corsham, creation of 1838. The original METHVEN peerage (1528) was the only one created by King JAMES V. of Scotland, who conferred it on HENRY STEWART, his stepfather. STEWART, who was Lord Chancellor of the Kingdom, in that year had married the Queen Dowager, daughter of HENRY VII. of England, and the divorced wife of the Earl of ANGUS. The ground of this divorce was that ANGUS had plighted his troth to another woman, (JANE DOUGLAS of Traquair,) and, therefore, that the marriage was invalid, though the issue legitimate. This somewhat contradictory sentence from Rome was dated March 11, 1527, and, as proving the Queen a worthy sister of HENRY VIII., she was married to STEWART in the same month. The founder in Scotland of this distinguished house came over from Hungary with EDGAR ATHELING. Fearing that WILLIAM the Conqueror was conspiring against him, the visitor fled to Scotland, and was hospitably received by King MALCOLM CANMORE, ATHELING'S brother-in-law. The Scottish King gave the refugee the barony of Methuen, (now spelled Methven,) which stands in the centre of Strathmore.

ORIGIN OF THE ANGLO-BOER WAR

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When one man uses the letter of another as a peg on which to hang an argument, the least he can do is to quote with reasonable accuracy. Your correspondent of this morning, Mr. H. R. Ostrom, says Capt. Mahan "confesses he does not know the facts of the Boer war as a lawyer." I said nothing of the kind; nothing in the least like it. I made the statement that when the Boer Government encouraged the Uitlanders to enter the country and to institute improvements, which raised its revenue from less than $1,000,000 to $20,000,000, the term for attaining full franchise stood at five years; and that, before the new-comers as a class could avail themselves of this privilege, the term was extended to fourteen years, accompanied with other conditions, which made the franchise still more illusory. Concerning this particular action, which is but one incident, and not in the least directly connected with the war, I said I was not lawyer enough to know if it was strictly—i. e., technically—ex post facto; but that it was evidently unjust, and, in my opinion, illustrative of the general characteristics of the Boer Government.

In view of the failure in so many quarters to appreciate the real origin of this war, it may be desirable to emphasize the fact that Great Britain did not demand the franchise for the Uitlanders. Sir Alfred Milner, her representative at the Bloemfontein conference, last June, admitted implicitly that the franchise was a matter of the internal affairs of the Transvaal, control of which Great Britain had formally renounced. He said only that, in view of the many complaints of injustice made by British subjects there resident, and concerning which Great Britain had to make representations—as she would in like conditions to the United States—it was suggested that an extension of the franchise would of itself constitute a remedy, which would silence most complaints, and so remove causes of friction between the two countries. Krüger objected that, as the Uitlanders much exceeded the Boers in number—a significant fact little regarded by American sympathizers with so-called republics—the granting of suffrage to all would swamp the older inhabitants. This Milner at once admitted was too much to be expected; he said only that some representation, a possibility of returning one-fourth of the principal house—the first Volksraad, which practically controls legislation—would enable them to make their voices heard on the floor of the representation of the State, and to influence legislation, which it is needless to say they could not have controlled with such a proportion. Under the pressure of the situation, the Transvaal Government proposed eventually to submit to the Legislature terms of franchise similar to those indicated by Milner, but with the offer they coupled conditions irrelevant to franchise, which the British Government refused to accept; whereupon the offer was withdrawn. It appears, therefore, that the willingness to allow a reasonable representation to the population which produced nineteen-twentieths of the revenue did not exist, independent of external urgency, such as that exorcised by Great Britain on behalf of the Uitlanders, most of whom were her subjects, but among them many citizens of other nationalities, none of whom, of course, were willing to renounce their native citizenship so long as they could not, simultaneously with its relinquishment, obtain the privileges of Transvaal citizens, which under the law they could not.

Persons who will look carefully into this matter will find that the Boers doubtless are in their own opinion fighting to preserve their own liberty, but they have been brought into this dilemma because national liberty was in Mr. Krüger's mind inseparably associated with the right of a dominant minority, sole possessors of political power—in other words, an oligarchy—to oppress a majority, to tax it heavily, and to refuse it representation. The cause of the Uitlanders is in principle identical with that of the American Revolutionists; and when Mr. Ostrom says "the war is one of gold" he may be correct as regards Krüger's motives, but as regards the rights of the Uitlanders he takes the position of those—and there are some—who say our forefathers of 1776 fought, not for the principle, but to save their pockets.

AN ANSWER TO MR. ROOSEVELT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Robert B. Roosevelt, who has shown a remarkably fair and candid spirit throughout this discussion, although he is not willing to answer any of my questions, puts one to THE TIMES, which, with your leave, I will answer in your place. He says: "You denounce Oom Paul, calling him an 'uncommonly adroit and sordid old reprobate.' What is your authority for this statement?

"July, 1889.—His Honor, Oom Paul, accepts a loan of $35,000 from the State funds at 2½ per cent. interest." The current rate was then about 6 per cent.

"May 24, 1892.—Resolved, that a dam be constructed on the President's farm, at a cost of $22,500, at the expense of the treasury.

"The Public Works Department reports that the road across the President's farm, estimated to cost $7,500, had actually cost $25,000. Mr. Meyer stated that this road was of absolutely no use to any one but the owner of the farm.'

"June 15.—Complaint made that of twelve tracts of land given by the Government to a certain church, it had been deprived of four, which had been handed over to the President's church; and that two of these had been transferred by that church to the President himself." The Raad resolved that the President was all right.

"Aug. 2.—Two years previously an official report of a Raad committee had stated that of $700,000 spent on the streets of Pretoria, vouchers for $110,000 were missing." The President stated that nothing was wrong; the Raad was entirely satisfied, and refused to make any investigation.

"Aug. 3.—Government land near Johannesburg, having been sold to certain private individuals, at a nominal figure, many thousands of pounds below the market value; the President offered no other explanation than that "speculation, when fairly conducted, was justifiable."

Oom Paul is reported, by his own advocates, to be worth $25,000,000. Where did he get it? His son-in-law and secretary, Eloff, is worth millions. He lives in a $230,000 house. How did he get it? He was proved in a Boer court to have taken bribes; as were twenty more of Oom Paul's close henchmen.

What was the authority, in 1870, for believing that William M. Tweed was a "sordid old reprobate"? Not half as good as there is to-day about Oom Paul.

THE ESSENTIALS OF REFORM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dr. Parkhurst, as reported in THE TIMES of Monday, takes a very pessimistic view of matters Christian and political in the great metropolis. His plaint has a hopeless tone about it, which is truly melancholy. Hear him:

"Christians are Christians on Sundays, Christians at prayer meetings, Christians at the communion table; work like slaves six days out of the week making money, and leave the city to be ruled by a race of thieves and vagabonds. And the consequence is that more children are being started on the direct road to hell every week than all the churches, missions, and Sunday schools are saving in a year."

If this statement is true, or anywhere near true, it certainly behooves the Christian people of New York to enter on a period of fasting and prayer and self-examination. The latter will prove much the most effective, if it is done conscientiously, if each layman and each minister, too, will lift himself above the Phariseeism which is more or less a part of human nature, and judge his own character with the same unbiased criticism that he passes judgment on a neighbor. If this is done, I think the average Christian citizenship would be found defective in two particulars, which of themselves would be sufficient to account for the very sad condition of things which Dr. Parkhurst deplores. The first is the disposition to make success the criterion of effort. Better have righteous rulers by questionable alliance or methods, is the theory, than corrupt rulers by corrupt methods. But the questionable methods degrade Christian character, and necessarily lower the influence of the Church as the conservator of morality among the people.

The Church cannot afford to lower her standard, even to save the city from the rule of thieves and vagabonds. Let the thieves and vagabonds do their worst; they will the sooner reach a stage of corruption from which the common sense of the people from sheer self-protection will seek alliance with the moral forces of the community. But if these moral forces are already discredited in their estimation by unholy alliance with thieves and vagabonds, who differ from the other thieves and vagabonds only by the color of their political stripes, they naturally drift into the company of that growing class of despondent citizens who have about renounced all political duties because of the apparent hopelessness of the task of securing honest political service. In the second place, the self-examining churchman, if he be conscientious in his self-examination, will find himself very remiss in his Christian duty as respects his personal influence. Christianity, morality, and common sense all agree that the truest measure of moral power is personal example. A man's preaching will be in vain if his life does not bear out the words which he utters. To illustrate this observation, I will take a chapter from Dr. Parkhurst's own life.

Dr. Parkhurst came prominently before the public a few years ago as the President of the Society for the Prevention of Crime. He led the hosts of law and order against the forces of corruption most valiantly, and it really seemed as if the better element of the community had corrupt officialdom on the run. But throughout the whole contest and the political campaigns which followed Dr. Parkhurst and his henchmen were discreetly silent concerning a social institution which is the very propagating hotbed of corrupt officials and the real cause of "more children being started on the direct road to hell every week than all the churches, missions, and Sunday schools combined are saving in a year."

In defending the right of the poor man to his beer, as he did at this time, Dr. Parkhurst became the advocate of moderate drinking, and in advocating moderate drinking, his personal influence was thrown on the side of the whole saloon system; for the saloon is the natural product of the drinking habits of the people. No man is free from the terrible evils which flow from the liquor traffic if he gives the sanction of his personal influence to moderate drinking. There is no clearly defined line between moderate and immoderate drinking; the legislation of 400 years has failed to discover a law which permits the use and effectively prevents the abuse of intoxicants. What folly, then, for a minister of the Gospel to rail at the shortcomings of his followers when he himself falls in the first elements of moral leadership!

Let the Church of Christ elevate its ideals. Let it be true to the teachings of its great exemplar. Let it make no compromise with evil, however great the ensuing advantage, and let it stand true to truth, however great the seeming disaster. And in its fidelity to the higher law of conscience it may restore its waning power by winning to its standard the thousands who now wag their heads at it because of its failure to measure up to the common standards of every-day morality.

THE FIRST TELEGRAPH MESSAGE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your obituary notice of the late Mrs. Roswell Smith, née Anne Goodrich Ellsworth, you allude to her as the author of the improperly called "historic telegraph message," "What hath God wrought?" and it as being the first telegram ever sent from Baltimore to Washington. Permit me, as the son of Alfred Vail, the partner and co-inventor with S. F. B. Morse, in the device and development, as well as introduction to public use, of the electric telegraph, to call to your attention a few errors in your statements.

On May 23, 1844, the wires of the line, which had been in process of construction since the previous Autumn, (under the authority of the Government, which had by act of Congress, passed March 3, 1843, appropriated $30,000,) reached the Mount Clare station of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Baltimore, the instruments were set up, and the line operated with gratifying success, through forty miles of wire, many messages passing to and from Morse at Washington and Alfred Vail at Baltimore. It was not until the next day, May 24, that the message "What hath God wrought?" was transmitted from Washington by Morse and received by my father at Baltimore, your statement that the message was sent from Baltimore being an error.

Furthermore, the real "historic message" was sent some weeks earlier, on the 1st of May, (the same month,) by my father at Annapolis Junction (a station of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Washington and Baltimore) to Morse at the Capitol in Washington, and under the following circumstances, which may prove interesting to some at least of the readers of THE TIMES. On May 1, 1844, Prof. Morse wrote to Mr. Vail at Annapolis Junction:

"Get from passengers in the cars all the news you can and transmit. A good way of exciting wonder will be to tell the passengers to give you some short sentence to send me, and let them note the time, and call at the Capitol to verify the time I received it. Before transmitting notify me (48.) Your message to-day that the passengers in the cars gave three cheers for Henry Clay excited the highest wonder in the passenger who gave it to you to send when he found it verified at the Capitol."

On May 2 Mr. Vail wrote to Mrs. Vail:

"I yesterday announced the nomination of Henry Clay and Frelinghuysen at Washington one hour and a quarter before the cars arrived there, distance twenty-two miles! Prof. Morse is so unstable and full of notions. He changes oftener than the wind, and seems to be exceedingly childish sometimes. Now he is elated up to the skies, and then he is down in the mud. It requires the utmost patience to get along with him. So far the telegraph succeeds perfectly, and perhaps in two weeks we shall be in Baltimore. The telegraph produces a great deal of excitement, and we are overrun with visitors. When we get to Baltimore it will be more astonishing. Persons at the Capitol ask Prof. Morse to ask me to write their names, that they may say that they were written in Washington by a person at the Junction. I was obliged to write Mr. Frelinghuysen's name a dozen times last night for as many persons who wanted the intelligence. I hope the thing will come to something by and by."

The announcement received by Mr. Vail from passengers on the afternoon train when it arrived at Annapolis Junction on May 1, 1844, (many of whom were delegates to the Whig Convention which had assembled that morning in Baltimore, nominated Henry Clay and Frelinghuysen as candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, and had adjourned,) was at once transmitted to Morse at the Capitol in Washington, and by him given immediately to the Washington newspapers. It is not difficult, then, to imagine the consternation (as one delegate years after expressed it to the writer hereof) of those passengers as they alighted from their train at the Washington station to find an immense and enthusiastic crowd awaiting their arrival, and, too, crying their hurrahs for the candidates, of the news of whose nominations they presumed they had the monopoly. And when they heard the newsboys shouting their extras, and saw, in cold print, their supposed exclusive information, their astonishment knew no bounds, for they had no belief in the ability of that little instrument they saw at Annapolis Junction to beat them in carrying the news to Washington.

This is the actual fact respecting the first news message, and as such it has always seemed to me should be considered "historic." The message sent at the dictation of Mrs. Ellsworth was purely a private one, and, moreover, was not the first message sent from Washington to Baltimore, for, as before mentioned, messages had been in transmission between my father and Morse very freely the day before hers was sent.

Sentiment may have a much larger representation in "What hath God wrought?" than the extremely practical one informing the public that candidates for the highest offices in the gift of that public had been nominated, but actual facts, I think, bear me out in my contention that the first message, which can only be the historic one, in this connection, at least, is that which really antedates all others in the date at which it was transmitted.

A COMMERCIAL TRAVELER'S VIEW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in to-day's issue, "The Commercial Travelers and the Trusts," is in line with your usual clear perception of affairs. Your correspondent, William Hoye, to whom you refer, represents himself only—possibly, of course, some others. He by no means represents the so-called Eastern traveling man. I say this with the utmost courtesy. The writer most decidedly believes trusts are here to stay. They succeed the old way of doing business, as railways succeeded stage coaches, when the cry of despair was heard that horses would be of no more value. Legislation regarding the organization of trusts should be and doubtless will be National. They should be compelled to issue periodical statements of their condition; the watering of their stock should be prohibited. I am not prepared to say that they are not a benefit to the country at large. Like the department store, which has also come to stay, they benefit the many at the expense of the few. The anti-trust sentiment among most travelers is based upon the selfish motive that trusts will and do perhaps discharge salesmen. That may be true to some extent. Illegitimate profits would quickly breed new trusts, which would be compelled to employ salesmen to introduce their wares. The more prosperous the country is, the more commercial travelers are needful. Undoubtedly their influence is far-reaching. Without question they played an important part in the election of McKinley. The issue is precisely the same this year if Bryan remains the candidate, plus trusts and imperialism. William Hoye's reference to a good story teller will not carry weight with any thinking traveler. It gives a false, superficial idea of traveling men's capacity to judge men and affairs. Traveling men, per se, must first be gentlemen in all that the term implies; but, in addition, they must be, and are, if successful, good business men, genial men, tactful men, more than an ordinary degree, keen judges of human nature—in short, good, all-around men. Not enough yet; they must be absolutely "diligent in business." In hotel lobbies, on railway trains, in country stores, unquestionably they are influential; especially if the issue is vital. And the party is fortunate, indeed, that can claim the support of the traveling men, but they are not a unit, any more than any other class of men. If they were, they would be a tremendous power. Their number is variously estimated from 300,000 to 500,000. It would be a sad day for railroads and hotels if their number should materially decrease. To the writer's mind, the gravity of a recent incident in New York is as important in the shaping of the character of this Nation as the fighting of trusts. I refer to the evasion of paying its just taxes of a monstrously strong bank in the greatest city in this country. Moses Taylor would not have done this. And yet a poor man must pay his taxes. Many poor men will have to be taxed to some extent to make up for this sharp financial transaction. What seems to be lacking these latter days is the high sense of commercial honor which prevailed in our fathers' days.

The Establishment of Government.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent, Mr. Theodore McGarrah, in his defense of anti-imperialism in to-day's issue, reminds me of the folks who insist that the new century began on the 1st of January last.

Mr. McGarrah and his fellow antis are not alone in their notion that to secure life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, governments were instituted among men. The President of the United States believes that, and so do George Dewey, Mr. Schurman, Seth Low, Chauncey M. Depew, Theodore Roosevelt, Elihu Root, Gens. Wood, Wheeler, and Lawton, and others, and these gentlemen insist, besides, that that is just what the United States Government was instituted at Manila for.

They may be wrong, but they are just as likely to be right as Senator Hoar or Mr. Carnegie, who, surprising as it may seem to Mr. McGarrah, have not a monopoly of virtues and brains.

The longest night has its morning,
Its evening the weariest day;

And merge into clouds of gray;
The hot, burning drought will be broken
By showers of gentle rain,
And the mists that the showers engender
Be dispersed by the sun again.

The warm winds that drift from the southland
Will follow the icy blast

When the snowflakes fall thick and fast.
On the meadows, now brown and barren,
The daisies again will nod;
And the ripe, golden wheat will be gleaming
Where the snowdrifts lie deep on the sod.

The weariest lane has its turning,
The dawn on the darkness waits.

EMPEROR OF CHINA KILLS HIMSELF?

It Is Reported in Shanghai that He Has Done So.

HIS SUCCESSOR IS NAMED

He Is Pu-Chun, the Fourteen-Year Old Son of Prince Tuan.

A Revolution in China May Follow—Tuan Is Head of Two Great Anti-Foreign Secret Societies.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—According to a special dispatch from Shanghai it is reported there that Emperor Kwang-Su has committed suicide.

Yesterday a dispatch was received from Shanghai stating that The North China Daily News had published an edict, signed by the Emperor on Wednesday night. In the edict he appointed as Emperor in his place Pu-Chun, the young son of Prince Tuan.

The new Emperor, it was said, would ascend the throne on Jan. 31.

The imperial edict says that, owing to the Emperor's poor health, he is unable to conduct the business of state.

The Emperor has, it was said, been compelled by the Dowager Empress to abdicate, though the action would meet with considerable opposition in certain Court circles. The Dowager, however, intended to carry out the programme which she had been planning for years.

Another special dispatch from Shanghai says:

"The father of the new Emperor is the head of the great secret societies known as 'The Great Sword' and 'The Boxers,' extending over the Provinces of Chi-li, Shantung, and Ho-nan, which were responsible for the murder of Mr. Brookes, the missionary.

"Various edicts have been issued with a view to assuaging public anxiety, and the ominous rumors respecting the fate of the ex-Emperor are spreading widely. It is alleged that his dethronement was decided upon at a council convened by the Empress Dowager on Tuesday. The Manchu clan favors the change, but the Chinese proper oppose it and predict a tremendous upheaval.

"It is believed that the Russian and French Legations were notified of the impending change, and that they will support the new regime. It is also reported that a French naval force has already reached Peking.

"The British and United States Legations, which have been favorable to Kwangsu, were kept in ignorance of the new departure, but it is asserted that Li Hung Chang was sent as Viceroy to Kwang-tung to support the Dowager's policy and to repress any hostilities on the part of the Cantonese."

The Shanghai correspondent of The Times says:

"The edict is obviously a half-measure, intended to test the effect on public opinion of the restoration of the Regency and the selection of a new Emperor whose claims, according to the established succession laws, are open to question."

The Chinese Minister here was evidently expecting news of some important events at Peking, for when the story of the Emperor's abdication was communicated to him he said:

"I have no official news on the subject. I knew something was going on in Peking, but nothing has yet been officially communicated to me."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Secretary Hay was to-day advised by the United States Minister at Peking of the result of the convocation of Chinese notables there yesterday, his statement being that Pu-Chun, fourteen years of age, had been appointed heir apparent. It will be noticed that Mr. Conger does not indicate that the heir apparent has been named as Emperor, nor that he is to ascend the throne immediately.

Definite news is awaited with the greatest interest by the diplomatic body here, for by the character of the selection made as successor to the present Emperor can it is said, be determined the question whether Russian or Japanese influence is predominant in China.

The Chinese Minister, Wu Ting Fang, was at first inclined to discredit the news entirely, but on examining the circumstantial details of the reported edict, he said:

"I am unable to say whether it is true or not. Thus far I have received nothing, official or unofficial, to indicate that such a change has been made or was contemplated. A short time ago a report was current that the son of Prince Tuan would be named as heir apparent, but I have not been informed that this would be done. It would not be surprising if an heir apparent were designated, as this occurs at times, usually in order to provide a succession when an Emperor is sickly or otherwise incapacitated."

After consulting references on the genealogy of the imperial family, Mr. Wu said that as near as he could tell Prince Tuan is a son of the former Emperor, Hien-Fung. The latter was followed by Tung-Che, a son of the present Empress Dowager. He, dying without issue, was succeeded by the present Emperor, Kwang-Su, nephew of the Empress Dowager, and designated though her influence. In case the reported change has been made it will be a continuance of the same imperial family at the head of affairs, with the Empress Dowager remaining as the strong power behind the throne. Prince Tuan has been little known in public affairs, which, however, is not surprising, as members of the imperial household do not mingle with the outside world and are practically unknown.

When asked if such a change would entail any change of Chinese policy, Minister Wu said: "Not in the slightest. It does not indicate any change of policy on international or foreign affairs, nor on our domestic affairs. Our people are a quiet, peaceful people, and have little regard for personal changes which may occur in the Government."

Toward the end of 1898 various reports were current to the effect that the Emperor of China had been poisoned or otherwise made away with by the Dowager Empress. These reports were proved to have been unfounded, although it has been stated on good authority that he was cruelly used, and even imprisoned and half-starved.

Kwang-Su, formerly known as Tsai-Tien, is the ninth Emperor of China of the Manchu dynasty of Tsing, which overthrew the native dynasty of Ming in 1644. He was born in 1871, and at that time nobody supposed that there was the slightest chance of his succeeding to the throne. His predecessor, Tung-Che, died in 1875, and the Empress Dowager and Manchurian Princes held a meeting and selected Tsai-Tien, son of Prince Chung, as successor to the throne. Prince Chung was the seventh brother of the Emperor Hien-Fung. There exists in China no law of hereditary succession to the throne, each Emperor being supposed to nominate his own successor from among the members of the family of a younger generation. Of course this means that the real heads of affairs are able to nominate whom they choose.

It is probable that Tsai-Tien was made Emperor because of his extreme youth, and the consequent fact that there would be a long majority during which the Dowager Empress would be nominal as well as actual ruler. At any rate, he was chosen, and the name Kwang-Su, or "Glorious Successor," given to him. His education was conducted by the supposedly wisest men of the Empire, and when he was fifteen years old he was married to a bride chosen by the Dowager Empress.

Immediately after his marriage Kwang-Su formally ascended the throne with much ceremony, but he has been an utter cipher in the affairs of the nation ever since, and on only very rare occasions has even been allowed to receive the foreign Ministers. It was stated about eighteen months ago that he had at last dared to assert himself to the extent of supporting some reform measures, and it is supposed to be on account of this that he was confined and virtually, if not nominally, deposed.

KAISERIN'S MOTHER DEAD.

Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein Succumbs to Pleurisy—Court Festivities Abandoned.

DRESDEN, Jan. 25.—The Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein, who had been suffering from pleurisy, died here this morning.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—In consequence of the death of the mother of the Empress at Dresden this morning, to-day's Court reception and all ceremonies in connection with the Emperor's birthday were abandoned.

Immediately on the receipt of the news of the death of the Dowager Duchess, the imperial banner on the royal castle was placed at half-mast, and the music on the parade ground was countermanded. Throughout the city flags were half-masted, including those over the United States Embassy and Consulate.

The papers publish sympathetic obituaries, and express feeling for the sorrowing Empress. The Emperor quickly dispatched messengers countermanding several important appointments he had made, and then hastened with the Empress for the train that would carry them to Dresden. Their Majesties, however, intend to return here and again to start from Berlin for the funeral, which will probably take place on Sunday.

Prince and Princess Frederick Leopold, with the other daughters of the Dowager Duchess, and Duke Ernst Guenther, are now assembled at Dresden.

The Princess Adelaide Victoria Amelia Louise Marie Constance, Duchess Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein, was born at Langenburg on July 20, 1835. She was the only daughter of Prince Ernest of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, who died in 1860. Her mother was the Princess Feodora of Leiningen.

On Sept. 11, 1856, the Princess Adelaide was married at Langenberg to Frederick, the reigning Duke of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg. He died in 1880, and was succeeded by the present Duke, Ernest Gunther, his only son. The Princess Augusta Victoria, the eldest daughter, was married to Prince William of Prussia, now the German Emperor, in February, 1881. The second daughter, the Princess Victoria, is the wife of the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg. Another daughter is married to Prince Frederick Leopold of Prussia, while the fourth is unmarried.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The body of John Ruskin, which was removed from Brantwood yesterday, was buried at Coniston this afternoon amid universal signs of sadness, and with a ceremonial typically rural. The coffin was hidden beneath a mass of flowers, including a tribute from the Queen.

The body was laid in a grave lined with white tiles, and close, according to Mr. Ruskin's desire, to the last resting place of the three Misses Beever, to whom he addressed his famous Brantwood letters. All parts of Great Britain were represented at the graveside.

A memorial service in honor of Mr. Ruskin was held in Westminster Abbey this morning, and was largely attended.

The measure provides for the doubling of the present number of battleships and the construction of six large and seven small additional cruisers. The expenditure will be annually provided for in the estimates.

The preamble anticipates that the scheme will be completed by 1916 at an annual expenditure of eleven millions of marks, which sum is to be raised by loans without fresh taxation.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S PLAY.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—To-morrow night Emperor William's play, "The Iron Tooth," will have its first performance at the Royal Theatre here.

His Majesty has taken much pains about the preparation, especially in drilling the soldiers, who have been detailed from the Alexander Regiment. Yesterday they were shown by the Emperor how to move about in the performance.

Herr Vorhuolson, the Emperor's favorite stage manager, is here from Wiesbaden and has been assisting the Emperor. His Majesty expresses the hope that the people of Berlin will appreciate the play.

VISITS THE ASSUMPTIONISTS.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—An incident which is certain to provoke vigorous protests is the visit of Cardinal Richard, the Archbishop of Paris, to the headquarters of the Assumptionist Fathers, (whose order was dissolved yesterday by the Correctional Tribunal,) to present his condolences on yesterday's conviction.

The Cardinal arrived unexpectedly while the fathers were praying in the chapel. Two fathers met him at the door. The Cardinal then proceeded to the editorial room of La Croix, which is the organ of the Assumptionists, and strongly anti-Ministerial. The prelate blessed the editors and said:

"I urge you to persevere in your work with simplicity and firmness."

TROUBLE IN PULLAR SUIT.

Gen. Burnett, Counsel for ex-Gov. Waller and Page, Sharply Rebukes Opposing Counsel.

Trial of the suit brought by Joseph W. Pullar against ex-Gov. Waller of Connecticut, Alfred R. Page, a lawyer of this city, and others to set aside a conveyance to them of a fifty-thousand-dollar interest in the will of Pullar's second wife, Johanna, was continued before Justice Bischoff in the Supreme Court yesterday. Pullar alleges that ex-Gov. Waller and others obtained the conveyance from him by means of fraud, conspiracy, and duress.

Dr. Theodore Von Reitz, executor of the will of Johanna Pullar, resumed the witness stand yesterday and continued his testimony as to Pullar's alleged addiction to stimulants. He said that in October, 1897, Pullar was mentally incompetent, that he was an inebriate. An inebriate he defined as a person addicted to the use of alcoholic liquors to such an extent that they disturbed his centres of nutrition and reason. He also testified as to his attendance upon Mrs. Pullar during her last illness.

At the afternoon session the witness admitted that he was interested in the outcome of the suit, and that he had secured counsel for Pullar.

The day's session closed amid excitement when Mr. Benjamin, counsel for the plaintiff, attempted to introduce as evidence the petitions and schedules in the late bankruptcy proceedings of Mr. Page. Gen. Burnett, counsel for the defense, objected, and demanded explanation of their relevancy. Mr. Benjamin replied that among the schedules was one which included certain sums of money collected for clients which had not been turned over to them by Mr. Page.

Gen. Burnett was shaking with excitement when he again arose.

"I have known Mr. Page for twenty years," he said. "He studied law in the same office with me, and I can truthfully say that I know not a man of sounder mind and cleaner heart than he." Turning to Mr. Benjamin, he added: "It will be a sorry day for you, Mr. Benjamin, that you should have come into court in this city and attack reputable men, men of character and standing."

At this point Justice Bischoff adjourned court.

"I do not want to hear any more of this," he said. "I will reserve decision upon the relevancy of the papers until to-morrow morning."

ART AT THE DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

A small but well selected exhibition of pictures comprising thirty-six numbers is now open in the parlors of the Democratic Club, which have been arranged so that the paintings are well displayed. These pictures are all owned by members of the club and will remain on view to-day and to-morrow.

The high quality of this club exhibition will be a surprise to those members of the organization who have any art knowledge, and to those of their guests who are art lovers and connoisseurs, for although the club has a large membership it was not known that it had on its list the owners of so many valuable and fine paintings. The chief contributors to the exhibition are William C. Whitney, Judge Truax, Samuel Untermyer, Senator W. A. Clark, John H. Flagler, and Perry and August Belmont. Senator Clark sends among other canvases a Fortuny, "The Chase," and Fromentin's celebrated "The Falconer," from the Stewart sale. From the collection of Perry Belmont there are: The Village Dance," an early but characteristic and strong example of Knaus; the important example of Meissonier, "Les Grand Manoeuvres"; the rich and notable Troyon, "The Water Cart"; a rarely attractive Bouguereau, two children sleeping, "The Babies"; one of the largest and best Clays ("Dutch Canal") ever imported, and exceptionally good examples of Diaz, Daubigny, Jacque, and Michel.

The "star" picture of the display is the splendid full-length female portrait by John Hoppner, which has the deserved place of honor at the east end of the room. This fine virile portrait, with its graceful lines and movement, for the figure is depicted as if about to step out from the canvas, and its color schemes of rich browns and reds, shows Hoppner at his best, and has almost the qualities of a Lawrence, which, indeed, it recalls. Other rarely fine canvases shown are "The Sower," by Millet, always seen with renewed pleasure and stronger at every new view; a large and luminous landscape by Anton Mauve, a splendid example of Rosa Bonheur, "Deer Feeding"; L'Hermitte's "Midday Repose," a large and important Cazin, "Weary Wayfarers," richer and stronger in color than usual with Cazin; an excellent Grolleron, "A French Prisoner"; Corot's "Dance of the Nymphs," a reproduction of his large Napetto canvas with the same motif, and unusually good examples of Van Marcke, Rousseau, Daubigny, Schreyer, Diaz, and of the figure painters, Worms and Vautier. There is also a good and characteristic example of Fritz Thaulow, the painter of "the night, the snow, and the stream."

American artists have not been neglected in this important and interesting little display. There are two examples of Inness, both, if recollection serves aright, from the Clarke sale, one, "Spring," notable for its tender greens and soft tone and sentiment, and the second, "The Storm," for its depth, rich color quality and fine composition. By Winslow Homer there is shown the well-known "West Wind," also from the Clarke collection—that famous canvas with the solitary female figure standing in a Winter's day on the ironbound Maine cliffs, watching the bull-mouthed breakers as they toss their manes to fall in thunder on the cliffs, her hair and clothes blown out by the cold blast from under the leaden sky, which one feels as if present at the actual scene. It is again a tribute to the strength of both these great American painters that their work holds well with that of the able foreign brushes that surrounds them.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The mist and fog of yesterday made the going rather uncomfortable for the many people rushing hither and thither up town to this or that entertainment or affair. The day had more of incidents and events than any of its predecessors of late. There were a number of receptions and "at homes," most of which were announced yesterday in this column; a large musicale given by Mrs. H. H. Cook and her daughter, Mme. de Heredia; the first of ten talks on French literature by M. L. Boisse, while the evening brought a number of dinners, including those given by Mrs. Alexander T. Van Nest and Mrs. T. E. Eddy of eighteen covers each; the third meeting of the Thursday Evening Club, the second of the Knickerbocker dances at Delmonico's, and the second and last Assembly ball at the Astoria.

***

To-day will bring the usual number of "at homes," among them those of Mrs. Charles H. Stebbins and the Misses Stebbins at 33 West Ninth Street; Mrs. Jules S. Bache, 8 East Sixty-seventh Street; Mrs. James A. Benedict and the Misses Benedict, 325 Fifth Avenue; Mrs. Peter Augustus Jay and Miss Mary Rutherford Jay, 29 Waverley Place; Mrs. Adolphus Smedburg, 51 West Eleventh Street; Mrs. J. Langdon Ward and Miss Ethel Ward, 125 West Seventy-fourth Street; a luncheon given by Mrs. Edwin Parsons of Riverside Drive, and the eighth meeting of Mrs. Pratt's afternoon class, at Sherry's. The evening will bring a dinner of about sixteen covers at Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs's residence, 1 East Fifty-seventh Street; the third meeting of Mrs. O'Connor's dancing class at Delmonico's, the third meeting of Mrs. Snedeker's dancing class in the small ballroom at Sherry's, and the third meeting of Mrs. Benjamin S. Church's class in Sherry's large ballroom. Mrs. Eugene Schieffelin will give this evening at her residence, 865 Madison Avenue, a dinner in honor of Miss Katherine Hall.

The Teutonic, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool, brought, among other passengers, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Smith, Dr. Edward S. Niles, and the Hon. Sydney French. The Teutonic will remain in port for ten days, and will not sail until Saturday week. She is to be held so as to carry the Saturday mail, as well as that listed for next Wednesday, as there will be no Cunarder to sail on Saturday, Feb. 3.

The Auguste Victoria sailed yesterday on the annual excursion to the Orient under the auspices of the Hamburg-American Line, and her passenger list was even longer than that of a favorite liner in June or early July. This list is interesting to study, as it shows that those Americans who travel for the sake of traveling come, as a rule, more from the interior cities and towns than from the metropolis. The proportion of New York names on the list is very small, and the owners of some of these happened to book on the Auguste Victoria simply for the trip across, and will not remain on her throughout the cruise, which will include the ports of Alexandria, Smyrna, and Constantinople. Among those New Yorkers who were booked on the liner were Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Bronson, Miss Elsa Bronson, Col. William Jay, Mrs. Jay, and Miss Eleanor Jay; Mr. and Mrs. Howland Davis, Dr. B. H. Birney and Mrs. Birney, Mr. Oscar E. Bailin, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Furman, Mr. Charles W. Gould, Miss Gertrude Howell, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Harkness, Mr. Edward S. Harkness, Miss Louise Harkness, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Knox, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Milliken, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. O'Connor, Mr. Cornelius D. Robbins, Mr. George C. Taylor, Mr. Charles Vischer, Mr. P. B. Worrall, and Miss F. Wells. Col. R. H. I. Goddard and Miss Madeline Ives Goddard of Providence, Col. Lawrence S. Babbitt, United States Army, and Mrs. Babbitt of Dover, N. J.; Capt. Edwin B. Babbitt, United States Army, and Mrs. Babbitt of Governors Island; David Q. Ewing of Pittsburg, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Draper of Hopedale, Mass.; Miss M. Louise Gregory of Wickford, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. James H. Park of Pittsburg, Mr. C. H. Townsend and Miss Pauline Townsend of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Julia H. York of Cleveland, Ohio, also sailed on this steamer.

There are few well-known golfers' names on the list of entries. The Florida season is still in the future, although the vestibule trains now running daily are beginning to take more visitors to the Land of Flowers.

The second and last Assembly ball of the season took place last evening at the Astoria. The ball opened late. The new private entrance to the Waldorf on Thirty-third Street was the one used. Supper was served in the Astor Gallery, in which no effort at decorations was made, about 12:15 A. M. Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 25.—At the residence of Commander and Mrs. John K. Winn, United States Navy, retired, in Chelsea this afternoon their niece, Miss Dorothy Huntress Watts, was wedded to Edwin Waddell of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Waddell left for Miami, Fla., where they will reside. Mrs. Waddell is well and favorably known in naval circles. At the time of the blowing up of the Maine she was at Key West with Commander and Mrs. Winn, and Capt. Sigsbee presented her with his pet dog, Peggy, which was with him when the ship was destroyed. Peggy afterward became famous and was the object of many newspaper articles. The animal died last Summer.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Lieut. Col. G. M. Dewey.

Lieut. Col. George M. Dewey, a charter member of the New York Cotton Exchange, and a veteran of the civil war, died Wednesday of consumption at St. Gabriel's Sanitarium, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, at Gabriels, Franklin County, N. Y. The news of his death was conveyed in a dispatch from the Sisters of Mercy to President Thomas M. Robinson of the Cotton Exchange yesterday. The flag on the Cotton Exchange building was lowered to half-mast and a bulletin posted in a black-bordered frame on the Exchange floor announcing the news.

Col. Dewey, who, it is said, was related to Admiral Dewey's family, was a well-known figure on the Exchange. He was a man of striking appearance, being well over 6 feet in height, splendidly built, and of exceptional physical strength. He was a cotton broker before the war, and left business to go to the front, serving as Lieutenant Colonel of the famous Duryee Zouaves, the Tenth New York. He went through a large number of battles and was severely wounded.

When the Cotton Exchange was founded, in 1870, Col. Dewey was a charter member of it. He was always an active broker, and was a member of the former large cotton importing firm of Dibble, Worth & Co., 174 Pearl Street, which did considerable business in North Carolina. Col. Dewey retired from business about three years ago because of ill-health. He went to the sanitarium early last Fall. Col. Dewey was a widower. Two children survive him.

William Q. Ewart.

News has been received in this city of the death of William Quintus Ewart, eldest son and heir of Sir William Quartus Ewart, Bart.,

ROBERTS EXCLUDED: VOTE 268 TO 50

Yeas, 168 Republicans, 96 Democrats, and 4 Populists.

MINORITY REPORT VOTED DOWN

Politics Did Not Enter Into the Contest in Any Way.

The Polygamist Declares, When He Hears the Result, that He Is a "Martyr to a Spasm of Prejudice."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The case of Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon Representative-elect from Utah, which has occupied so much of the attention of the House since the assembling of Congress, was decided to-day by the adoption of a resolution to exclude him, by a vote of 268 to 50.

The exact language of the resolution was as follows:

"That, under the facts and circumstances of the case, Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, ought not to have or hold a seat in the House of Representatives, and that the seat to which he was elected is hereby declared vacant."

The amendment to expel Mr. Roberts without seating him, offered by Mr. Lacey, was ruled out on a point of order, and the House only voted upon the resolutions of the majority and minority of the committee. The latter—to seat and then expel Mr. Roberts—was defeated, 81 to 244.

An analysis of this vote shows that 170 Republicans, 72 Democrats, and 2 Populists voted against it, and 71 Democrats, 7 Republicans, 2 Populists, and 2 Silver Republicans for it. The majority resolutions—to exclude Mr. Roberts and declare the seat vacant—were adopted by 268 to 50. The affirmative vote was divided as follows:

Republicans, 168; Democrats, 96; Populists, 4, and the negative vote: Democrats, 47; Silver Republicans, 2; Populists, 1.

There were over a score of speakers today, and the closing speeches on each side were particularly able. Mr. Lanham (Dem., Texas,) closed for the majority, and Mr. De Armond (Dem., Mo.,) for the minority.

ROBERTS GIVES IT UP.

Mr. Roberts was present throughout the day, and only left the hall after the result of the last vote had been announced. As he did so he gave out a statement justifying his retention of his plural wives on the ground that his moral obligation was more binding upon his conscience than technical obedience to statutory law, and saying that there was little excuse for the extraordinary efforts to crush a system already abandoned and practically dead. He said he was a "martyr to a spasm of prejudice." He would not, he said, attempt to run for Congress again, although he would go back home with a light heart, confident of the future.

The others who spoke for the majority report were Mr. Bosius, (Rep., Penn.,) Mr. Grant, (Rep., Vt.,) Mr. Talbert, (Dem., S. C.,) Mr. Adamson, (Dem., Ga.,) Mr. Freer, (Rep., West Va.,) Mr. Ray, (Rep., N. Y.,) Mr. Grosvenor, (Rep., Ohio,) and Mr. Morris, (Rep., Minn.)

Mr. De Armond in closing the debate said that it mattered little whether he spoke long or briefly. The argument for the minority resolutions had been made beyond the power of any gentleman in or out of the House to answer when the gentleman from Maine (Mr. Littlefield) concluded his masterly effort on Tuesday. Anything he might say would be, in effect, a repetition. The argument of the majority that the method of turning Mr. Roberts out mattered not was the argument of Judge Lynch. When he decided that man should be hanged, he also said it was immaterial how he was hanged.

The real question at issue was not of consequence and interest only to-day, but through the centuries. It was, "Shall the Constitution be observed?" Roberts was entitled to be sworn in. Some gentlemen feared that if Roberts were declared entitled to be sworn in, he might hie himself off to Utah without taking the oath and leave the House powerless to expel him. In such a remote and improbable contingency, Mr. De Armond said, there would be no difficulty. If Mr. Roberts declined to be sworn in, he vacated his seat instanter.

PERSONAL ABUSE DEPRECATED.

Mr. De Armond devoted much of his time to a legal argument against the proposition that the House could add to the Constitutional qualifications of members. He scored those who had unnecessarily abused Mr. Roberts. Mr. Roberts, he said, had not a solitary champion or defender upon the floor, and he could scorn as beneath him and beneath contempt an effort to evoke applause by denunciation. But let it be not understood by some carping critic that he favored polygamy.

"I oppose it; I scorn it," said he; "but I do not feel it necessary in order to show how good I am, how I love motherhood and chastity, to lend myself to cheap abuse which requires neither ability nor courage."

This utterance drew forth applause. Mr. Roberts, who sat within twenty feet of Mr. De Armond, his head resting on his hand, did not move a muscle.

MR. LANHAM IN REPLY.

Mr. Lanham, who closed the debate in behalf of the majority resolutions, was listened to attentively and frequently evoked applause.

He said that if there ever had been a necessity for the rational assertion and vindication of the supreme prerogative of the House the occasion was now upon us. He loved the Constitution of his country and the institutions of his Government, but neither the Constitution requires nor do the people expect the House of Representatives to do anything ridiculous. The framers of the Constitution never contemplated that their work or any part of it should lead to any absurdity.

"We can never convince the American people," said he, "that to admit Roberts and instantly expel him is logical and consistent procedure. The motive that will prompt the vote either to expel or exclude will be precisely the same—and this is because he is a polygamist; if a disqualification not mentioned in the Constitution is imposed in the one case, it will be equally superadded in the other."

POWER OF THE HOUSE.

He maintained that the House possessed the inherent power, aside from its express and implied Constitutional warrant, to protect and uphold itself in its dignity, integrity, and reputation. The Constitution gives the right to make its rules, and the greatest rule of the House is that which declares that "questions of privilege shall be first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its dignity, safety, and the integrity of its proceedings." Aside from this express authority the House had the inherent power to do any act and make any rule "which might be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the power" belonging to it by virtue of its creation and existence.

He cited instances which would warrant the House in standing aside a person bearing a certificate of election.

"Suppose," he said, "there had been an election for territorial delegate, held in our alleged antipodal possessions, the Philippine Islands, and coming with a certificate of election issued by the Pro-Consul, or whoever might have been authorized to sign the commission, the Sultan of Jolo, fresh from his seraglio should appear and demand to have the oath administered to him, as a delegate to this Congress; if the facts which have been alleged against him were ascertained to be true, should he not be excluded? Under the theory of the minority of the committee we might say, 'Will your royal Highness be sworn?' and then kick him out instantly; under the theory of the majority, we would say to him at the threshold, 'Avaunt, and quit our sight!'"

He said there was no danger of the Roberts case ever being invoked as a precedent—that it was unique and solitary in its originality, and the case and the President would expire with each other.

THE CITIZENSHIP QUALIFICATION.

He said that the citizenship qualification in the Constitution was to prevent the election of foreigners and preclude extraneous influence on the legislative action of the new Republic. The disqualification mentioned in the Constitution were negatively stated, and hence not exclusive. There was a reason for each rule of disqualification, and each was constructed and designed for a specific purpose pertinent to particular conditions and surroundings. He urged the claims of Christian civilization, and quoted from Franklin and George Washington to show that the members of the Constitutional Convention respected morality and religion.

He said we are not here to impose moral or religious tests. We cheerfully accord to the people of Utah all the privileges and immunities of citizens of sovereign States. They may elect whomsoever they will, Mormon or Gentile, but we will not recognize his credentials, nor welcome their Representative-elect, if he be a polygamist in fact, and have more than one living wife. The people of Utah must keep their covenants with the American people and respect the laws and civilization of the age.

He said in conclusion: "In behalf of the altars and firesides of our common land—the roof-trees of American homes—the holy estate of matrimony, and the sacred and inviolable associations of the family circle, with a solemn regard for the Constitution of my country and the dignity of the popular branch of its legislature—with a decent respect to the opinions of mankind, and the fear of God before my eyes, I declare my belief that Brigham H. Roberts ought not, for one instant of time, to be admitted to membership in this House of Representatives."

COMPROMISE IS BEATEN.

When Mr. Lanham concluded, Mr. Lacey (Rep., Iowa,) offered an amendment to the majority resolutions providing for the expulsion of Mr. Roberts. To this Mr. Tayler made the point of order that the amendment was not germane. The Speaker sustained the point of order on the ground that the original proposition only required a majority vote, while, if the amendment were added, it would require a two-thirds vote. The Republicans applauded the Speaker's ruling. Mr. Lacey appealed from the decision of the Chair. Mr. Tayler moved to lay that motion upon the table. While the vote on the latter motion was being taken, it being apparent that it would carry by a large majority, Mr. Lacey withdrew the appeal. The first vote was then taken upon the adoption of the minority resolutions to seat and then expel Mr. Roberts. At the conclusion of the roll call Mr. Tawney, (Rep., Minn.,) the Republican whip, announced that on account of the non-partisan character of this motion he had made no offer to pair the absent Republicans.

Mr. Underwood (Dem., Ala.,) made a similar announcement concerning the Democratic absentees. The minority resolutions—to seat and expel Mr. Roberts—were defeated, 81 to 244.

ROBERTS IS STILL DEFIANT.

Issues a Statement Declaring Himself the Victim of Misrepresentation and Prejudice.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Brigham H. Roberts gave out the following statement to-night in relation to his exclusion:

Our griefs are past when remedies are ended,
By seeing the worst which late on hope depended.

"I was elected by the people of Utah as their Representative by the substantial plurality of 5,665 votes. An effort was made by what I believe to be an unconstitutional and unprecedented process to exclude me from the House of Representatives. In behalf of myself and my constituents, comprising the entire population of the State of Utah, I did all I could to maintain the position to which they had elected me; but the House of Representatives, under the whip and spur of popular sentiment, have decided to exclude me from the House. I have contended for my rights and the rights of my constituents, single-handed and alone, to the best of my ability, but have been overwhelmed by force of numbers.

"Notwithstanding all that has been said, the people of Utah are not a lawless people. Those of them who have been involved in the past in the plural marriage system, once taught and sanctioned by the Church of Jesus of Latter Day Saints, are not wanton violators of the law; but finding themselves in the position where the law commonds them to do one thing and moral obligations sacredly entered into under the sanction of the Mormon Church commands them to do another, they are placed in a very trying situation; and some few of them, including the member from Utah, may have found it necessary to regard their moral obligations as more binding upon their consciences than their technical obedience to statutory law. Such a position, however, is but transitory in Utah, and comes down to the Mormon people from conditions growing out of the plural marriage system of the past. The condition here referred to, however, is rapidly passing away. From authoritative figures officially collected recently by the Mormon Church, it has been ascertained that at the time of the discontinuance of plural marriages under the authority of the late President Woodruff's manifesto, in September, 1890, there were 2,451 polygamous families throughout the whole Mormon Church. Since then it has been ascertained that 908 of these families have ceased to exist through death, divorce, or abandonment, leaving at the present time but 1,543 polygamous families in the Church throughout the world; and as most of these are well advanced in years and all beyond middle life, the system will soon be obliterated from the earth; and under these circumstances there has been little excuse for the extraordinary efforts put forth throughout the country to crush a system of marriage already practically abandoned and dead.

"The election of the member from Utah to the House of Representatives was no effort on the part of the Mormon Church to revive polygamy, or stuff it down the throat of the American Congress or people.

"Nothing of the kind was contemplated in either his nomination or election, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The alleged statement often quoted to the effect that Brigham Young, on July 22, 1875, or at any other time, declared that he 'would make the American people swallow Mormonism, polygamy and all,' and that the election of the present member-elect from Utah was an effort to fulfill that prediction, is absolutely untrue. He made no such utterance, and the recent agitation respecting Mormonism and its being a menace to the purity of the American home is utterly unwarranted by the facts in the case.

"Congress has been made to believe, however, that such was the intention of Mormonism, or at least has been awed into acquiescence that such were its intentions, and hence has been led to vote to exclude the member from Utah. There is not virtue enough in it appears in the American House of Representatives to stand for its convictions as to what is right in this matter. Only this morning the Representative from Utah received a communication from a person who is evidently a member of the House of Representatives, since the letter is written upon House official stationery, and sent to him in an official envelope of the House of Representatives, although the signature is 'A Republican Friend.' After citing the member from Utah to a speech delivered by James G. Blaine in 1872, with reference to polygamy, he says:

"'I regret that I am not at liberty to vote as my conscience dictates on this question (the Roberts case) for reasons which you fully understand. President McKinley and Speaker Henderson have made the support of the Tayler resolution the test of Republican orthodoxy, and I am obliged to 'wear the yoke.'

"So far as this matter is a personal affair, I may say that whatever happens, the member from Utah can congratulate himself that from obscure birth and the conditions of from fortune, and in spite of having espoused an unpopular faith, he has fought his way upward until he has a sufficient prominence to be the decided champion of the people of a sovereign State to represent them in the American House of Representatives. From that summit he was hurled down by the House under a spasm of prejudice arising from misrepresentation. That will not ruin him. Conscious of the rectitude of his own intentions, he will face the future undiscouraged by this incident in his career, and will weave again his fortunes; he will face the future with a light heart and a determination to succeed.

"No, he will not stand for re-election as a vindication of himself even should his people desire it; he will ask that his exclusion shall be permitted to close, for the present, this incident in Utah's history."

OLD WAR ISSUE IS REVIVED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Money (Dem., Miss.,) replied to the speech of Mr. Pritchard (Rep., N. C.,) relating to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of North Carolina.

At the conclusion of the speech of Mr. Money, Mr. Chandler (Rep., N. H.,) said he desired to call the Senate's attention to the utterance of Mr. Morgan, (Dem., Ala.,) which had called forth his criticism. He read that paragraph of Mr. Morgan's speech in which the Alabama Senator had charged that the civil war had been precipitated by designing politicians of the North with the idea of thrusting upon the people of the South the negro in social and political equality.

"I denounce that," shouted Mr. Chandler, "as a slander upon the North, and—"

Mr. Pettus (Alabama)—If the Senator will permit me—would it not be better—would it not be more decent for him to wait until the Senator [Mr. Morgan] returns before criticising him?

Mr. Chandler—I intend to wait, but I want the senior Senator from Alabama, who is absent; I want the junior Senator from Alabama, who is now here, and I want the Senators from the Southern States who have reopened this question which I supposed was forever dead in the Senate—to tell me whether the North is to be expected to allow a charge made upon this floor to go unanswered that the war for the Union, which was a war growing out of a Northern wish to prevent the extension of slavery into free territory, was a war of ambitious politicians, with a design to put negro slaves on a political and social footing of equality with the Southern whites. Now, if the Southern Senators wish to discuss that question, they will have plenty of time before this session ends.

That ended the incident.

FOR A SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The question of establishing a department of the Government to be known as the Department of Commerce, with a Cabinet officer at its head, was discussed at considerable length by the Senate Committee on Commerce to-day. The discussion was based upon a very complete report prepared by Senator Nelson, (Rep., Minn.) The committee adjourned without taking action.

Senator Nelson, after showing the gradual growth of the departmental business of the Government, dwelt upon the necessity for especial recognition of the manufacturing interests, with a view to the extension of our foreign trade. It is proposed to include in the department a Bureau of Manufactures, transfers from the Treasury Department, the Life Saving Service, the Lighthouse Service, the Marine Hospital Service, the Steamboat Inspection Service, the Bureaus of Navigation, Immigration, Statistics, and the Coast and Geodetic Survey; from the Interior Department, the Commission of Railroads, the Census Office, and the Geological Survey; from the State Department, the Bureau of Foreign Commerce. The Department of Labor and the Fish Commission are also placed under this supervision.

TILT OVER THE CURRENCY BILL.

Democrats Seek to Draw the Republicans Into Debate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The opposition in the Senate to-day attempted to draw the fire of the Republicans on the financial bill by asking if no Republican Senators were going to debate it. In response to a statement by Mr. Teller (Silver, Col.,) to the effect that the pending bill was the product of a caucus and represented the views only of those who constituted the caucus and that it was most remarkable the Republicans should not defend the measure, Mr. Allison (Rep., Iowa,) replied that he believed there would be full and free debate on the bill by members on both sides of the chamber.

Referring to Mr. Teller's speech in the bill, Mr. Allison said he understood the Colorado Senator to say that the result of the bill's passage would be the withdrawal of the greenbacks, the silver certificates, and the silver dollars.

"I deny this statement," said Mr. Allison.

Mr. Allison—The House bill does that.

Mr. Allison—I am referring now to the Senate substitute. That may be true of the House bill. I shall undertake later to show that these Senate amendments are so made that it will not be possible for any Secretary of the Treasury to impound the greenbacks, silver certificates, or silver dollars."

Presidential Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The President to-day sent to the Senate the following nominations:

New York—Charles G. Bacon, Northville; C. H. Willard, Randolph.

Caffery of Louisiana, John C. Beaumont of Maryland, Charles S. Taylor of Virginia, John W. Wadleigh of New Hampshire, William Radford Coyle of the District of Columbia, and Henry D. F. Railways Must Allow "Party Rates."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Robert J. Tracewell, the Controller of the Treasury, has rendered a decision to the effect that common carriers which do an inter-State business and give "party rates" to theatrical and other organizations must give the same rates to the general public under similar conditions, and also to the Government in the transportation of troops.

NEW YORK IMPORTERS WIN.

Protest Against Ruling on Cotton Cloths Is Upheld.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Gen. Spaulding, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, has sustained the decision of the Board of General Appraisers at New York against the ruling of the Appraiser increasing by two cents a yard the duty on certain cotton cloths, known as Madras shirtings, fancy vestings, &c., under the authority of Section 313 of the Tariff act.

A large number of heavy importers in New York protested against the Appraiser's ruling, and the matter was taken to the Board of General Appraisers, which sustained the protest. This position has been affirmed by the Treasury Department and no appeal from the board's decision will be taken.

WILL OF A WEALTHY NEGRO.

Many Charitable Bequests Made by Dempsey Butler of Camden.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 25.—The will of Dempsey Butler, a negro who died two weeks ago, was admitted to probate to-day. It contains forty-two bequests, many of which are charitable.

The will directs that the executors provide free interment and the services of the sexton of Butler Cemetery for all Camden negro children who die in indigent circumstances in the next five years. A building to cost $3,000 is to be erected for Rising Sun Lodge of Colored Masons, and bequests ranging from $200 to $500 are made to Cooper Hospital, Pennsylvania Hospital, colored homes in Camden and Philadelphia, and other charitable institutions.

Mr. Butler is believed to have been the richest man of his race in this State and one of the richest in the country. The appraisement of the estate has not yet been made.

ORGANISTS' GUILD SERVICE.

Combined Choirs of South Church and St. Bartholomew's Take Part.

The tenth public service of the American Guild of Organists, an association formed for the advancement of church music, attracted a congregation that filled every pew in St. Bartholomew's Church last evening. The singers were the combined choirs of the South Church, forty-four men and women, in charge of Dr. Gerrit Smith, as musical director and organist, and Frank R. Gilbert, assistant organist, and St. Bartholomew's Church, sixty men and women, of which Richard Henry Warren is organist and musical director and Frank W. Robinson assistant. The soloists of the combined choir were Mrs. Gerrit Smith, soprano; Miss Marguerite Hall, contralto; Frederick W. Jameson, tenor, and Heinrich Meyn, baritone, of South Church, and Mrs. Theodore Toedt, soprano; Mrs. Katherine Fisk, contralto; Makenzie Gordon, tenor, and Leland H. Langley of St. Bartholomew's, baritone.

The various numbers of the programme were sung with exquisite taste and a quality of tone that is seldom heard. The solos, especially the recitative contralto solo from Handel's "Messiah," "O Thou that Tellest," by Mrs. Fisk, were up to the high standard of the various choruses. Among the principal numbers were a grand chorus from "The Golden Legend," by Sir Arthur Sullivan; the soprano solo, "Gallia," by Gounod, sung by Mrs. Smith; the majestic chorus, "As Bright the Star of Morning Gleams," from Mendelssohn's "Christus."

The eleventh public service will be held at the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, on Thursday evening, March 29, under the direction of John Hyatt Brewer, organist and choirmaster.

SCOTS REMEMBER BURNS

The Poet's Birthday Celebrated at the Hotel Marlborough.

JUSTICE McADAM'S SPEECH

He Defends Imperialism, and Says Schley Should Have the Credit for Santiago Battle.

The Marlborough Hotel dining room reverberated last night with the music of the bagpipe, and was gay with the colors of the plaid. The strollers in Broadway outside caught echoes of the pipes droning the air of "Cock of the North," and heard 150 strong voices join in the chorus of "Auld Lang Syne." It was the dinner of the Order of Scottish Clans, who were celebrating the anniversary of the birthday of Robert Burns.

The Clan MacKenzie, the Clan MacDuff, the Clan MacDonald of Brooklyn, the Clan Graham of Tremont, the Clan MacGregor of Yonkers, and a number of New Jersey clans had sent delegates to the feast. Scottish plaids hung upon the walls, which were also adorned with the Stars and Stripes, and many of the diners wore Glengarry and Balmoral bonnets, the sporran, and the kilt. Seven pipers were there in their plaids, and after the soup, the haggis, that famous Caledonian mixture, was brought in by waiters, who held it aloft, while a piper in kilts and bonnet marched proudly before it, playing "The Cock of the North."

James Kennedy, Royal Deputy for the State of New York, presided, and the Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie said grace. Songs of Burns were rendered by various members throughout the evening, and the Rev. Alexander CacColl made an address on Burns, in the course of which he said:

"We may differ as to policies, but we are all agreed on one matter, and as we think of those who are fighting across the seas, our brother Scots, defending their native land, we cannot but feel glad that in many a conflict they will hear in their souls the inspiring words of Burns: 'Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled.'"

Justice McAdam referred to his Scotch ancestry as something of which he was very proud and went on to say that he never knew a good Scot who didn't make the best sort of an American. He continued:

"Our imperialism, of which we hear so much, began away back in 1814, when we made the Louisiana purchase. Our next imperialistic step was taking Florida, an excellent purchase. Then we took in Texas, also a good purchase. After that came our little difficulty with Mexico, which resulted in further acquisition. Later we purchased Alaska, way up next to Russia, another act of imperialism.

"Our late civil war took place, and resulted in the right way, and now down there in the South they love the old flag, which was theirs in the days of Washington as much as we love it here. [Applause.] Then we got into our difficulty with the Spanish. What was the result? All Europe, with one single exception, was frowning down what they regarded as American interference. In all Europe there was but one ray of sunshine. That spoke out so clearly that foreign interference became impossible. We had the aid, comfort, and sympathy of that nation, which openly announced that a war on us by any European power would be a war on it. Its aid was of a more substantial character than some of you gentlemen suppose. I know that many British steamers brought us munitions of war in their holds, and I know that so much was done that it almost amounted to a violation of the neutrality law.

"Now we all know what Dewey did at Manila Bay. [Applause.] We all know what Schley did! [Applause.]

STATE COMMISSION'S REPORT ON COMMERCE

Gov. Roosevelt Approves Some of its Recommendations.

NEW YORK CENTRAL SCORED

Said to be Exceptionally Culpable in Maintaining Differentials Against New York.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Gov. Roosevelt to-day sent the following communication to the Legislature:

To the Legislature:

I herewith transmit the report of the New York Commerce Commission, which was appointed by my predecessor in pursuance of Chapter 644 of the Laws of 1898. This report represents an immense amount of wholly disinterested labor, undertaken solely with a view of accomplishing something effectual to stop the decline in the commerce of New York. The thanks of the State are due the members of the commission for the marked ability and untiring industry they have shown throughout their labors.

In the first place, I call your especial attention to what the commission reports as to the main cause of the damage to New York commerce; that is, to the way in which the railroads, and especially the railroads of our own State, discriminate against her in the interest of competing ports. The commission presents a summary of its conclusions and recommendations, and the first ten sub-divisions of this summary relate to this railroad discrimination composed of what is known as the differential agreement between the trunk line railroads to the American Atlantic seaports. The commission shows that this discrimination is made so as to overcome the advantage which New York would have under natural condition as the cheapest route to foreign markets for the products of the West, and comments with especial severity upon the New York railroads which have received benefits from the State and yet participate in the discrimination, to the serious injury of New York. It does not appear, however, that any legislative action is at present recommended, and the commission, through its report, seeks to give widespread publicity to the facts, holding that the evil can be remedied by improving the canals, canal terminations, &c.

The Canal Committee, of which Gen. Greene is Chairman, (the report of which I am transmitting at the same time,) was appointed solely to consider the canal problem. The Commerce Commission was appointed to consider the whole problem of New York's loss of commerce, inquiring into all the causes, and seeking to find out all possible remedies. It speedily discovered, however, that the question of the canal was really the central question around which hinged all others concerned with benefiting the commercial development of New York or arresting the decline of this development. This is a further proof, if any be needed, of the immense importance of the canal, and extreme unwisdom of abandoning it as an outworn institution.

The commission makes eight recommendations to legislative action. As to seven of these there can be no question in my opinion. Proper terminal facilities should be immediately provided as the commission outlines. The act regulating the fees and charges for elevators should be amended. The act limiting corporations designed to navigate the canals to a capital stock of $50,000 should be repealed. The canal piers should again be reserved exclusively for canal boats. New York City should be allowed to carry out its plan for the construction of piers and improvement in dock facilities, and also to acquire possession of the water front between Gansevoort and Twenty-third Streets. With some hesitation I agree also to the wisdom of passing an act prohibiting the conveyance in perpetuity of any land under water within the limits of the Greater New York, but providing for the lease of such land with power of renewal. This is obviously proper for the crowded districts of the city. In remote parts of the city, however, the terms must be sufficiently liberal to encourage private parties to take hold and build up improvements which will help the whole water front.

The commission, as of the first importance, recommends action on the State canals themselves. They agree with the committee, of which Gen. Greene is Chairman, that in the first place the canal cannot be abandoned; that in the second place, a ship canal ought not to be built by the State, and that in the third place, the present canal must be enlarged. On these three fundamental points the reports of the commission and committee are as one. They differ, however, as to whether the thousand-ton barge canal should be built at a cost of some sixty million dollars, or whether the canal improvements proposed in the act of 1895 should be carried through at the cost, as they estimate it, of $15,000,000. This difference corresponds to the undoubted differences of opinion on this subject among the people in the State at large who are most interested in seeing the canals built up. In my message accompanying the Canal Committee's report I have given in detail the reasons why I accept their conclusions rather than the conclusion of the Commerce Commission on this matter.

I desire especially to call your attention to that portion of the Commerce Commission's report which shows the main source of the trouble over the $9,000,000 for improvements under the act of 1895. The Commerce Commission's report makes it perfectly clear that there never was sufficient authority, or indeed any authority, for supposing that this $9,000,000 would be enough to complete the work, and that a sum was named which was entirely insufficient. It was doubtless believed to be easier to get the small sum than a large one.

I call your attention to the whole report, which should be read and studied in detail. The commission held its hearings not only in New York and in the West, but also visited all the important seaports which are the business rivals of New York. We cannot afford to blink the fact that there has been a very serious loss in New York's commerce and that the State cannot allow this loss to go unchecked. The commission has gone at great length into all the various causes for the state of things described. Prompt action should be taken to remedy the evils complained of. We cannot afford to rest idle while our commerce is taken away from us, and we must act in the broadest and most liberal and most energetic spirit if we wish to retain the State's commercial supremacy. In accordance with the direction of the statute the commission will speedily submit drafts of bills designed to carry its recommendations into effect.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

COMMISSION'S CONCLUSIONS.

The commission presents a summary of its conclusions and recommendations as follows:

The decline in New York's commerce has been steady and continuous for many years, it has been more pronounced during recent years, and has now reached serious proportions in an actual loss of exports. This loss has been largely in exports of grain and flour.

The loss to New York is due in great measure to a discrimination against New York in railroad rates imposed by an agreement, known as the differential agreement, between the trunk line railroads of the American Atlantic seaports, including the New York railroads.

While this differential agreement, by its terms, gives preference in railroad rates only to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Newport News, the Port of Montreal and the Gulf ports are benefited to the injury of New York, to as full an extent as if they were parties to the agreement, in view of the fact that in the competition with the Gulf ports and with Montreal the differential agreement alone prevents the New York roads from giving New York as low a rate as is accorded by the agreement to Baltimore and to Newport News; and the same differential agreement, while providing the same rate for Boston as for New York, permits the Boston roads to allow free insurance and free storage to an extent that amounts to as substantial a discrimination against New York as is imposed by the discrimination in the rail rate in favor of Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Newport News.

As a result of this situation, in which New York is prevented from receiving the benefit of her natural advantages, in competition with these other ports, each of the ports named has made gains, while New York has continued to lose.

While there are port charges in New York that can and should be reduced, it will be impracticable to assure to New York any benefit from such reductions so long as the railroads are permitted to offset the saving in expense thus secured by correspondingly increasing the differential against New York. That such is the principle of the differential agreement and the policy of the New York roads, as well as the roads to the Southern Atlantic ports, was conceded by the officials of the New York roads when they appeared before the commission.

The theory of such discrimination is that under natural competitive conditions New York would maintain its pre-eminent position in the export as well as in the import trade of the country—New York under such natural conditions being the cheapest route to the foreign markets for the products of the West. To the extent that this differential agreement requires the New York roads to charge a higher rate than otherwise would be imposed upon the export products of the West, it is in effect an export tax upon such products.

To abolish the differential, therefore, would not only result in New York regaining the commerce now diverted to other ports, but it would also benefit the producers and exporters of the West when competing in the foreign markets.

The fact that the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company has received exceptional benefits from the State of New York makes that corporation exceptionally culpable for participating in the discrimination to the serious injury of New York. This railroad discrimination against New York would be impossible without the participation of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, and the demand that it withdraw irrevocably from the differential agreement is now made understandingly.

The State has it within its power, through an adequate improvement of the Erie Canal, not only to apply the remedy that will secure it against further loss of its commerce, but that will secure to it as well the restoration of that which has already been diverted.

This result may be achieved through the completion of the improvement of the State canals contemplated by Chapter 79 of the Laws of 1895, at an expenditure not exceeding $15,000,000. To receive full benefit from the completion of such improvement, canal terminals should be provided by the State both at Buffalo and at New York for the receipt, safeguarding, and delivery of package freight transported or destined for transportation over the Erie Canal.

While thus providing for competition with rail rates, sufficient to render difficult if not impossible a discrimination against New York, certain high charges at the port of New York should be reduced, including the charge for elevating grain, and also including the excessive rentals imposed for the use of public docks.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE.

The commission recommend for immediate legislative action:

The passage of a bill providing for the earliest possible completion of the improvement of the State canals contemplated by Chapter 79 of the Laws of 1895, and providing for bonding the State in the sum of $15,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the proceeds to be applied to such improvement, said bill to be submitted to the people for their approval at the next general election.

The amendment of Chapter 494 of the Laws of 1899, so as to authorize the designation for canal terminals of public piers in the City of New York, and suitable locations upon the Erie Canal lands at or near Buffalo, with power to cause to be erected thereon proper inclosures for the reception, safeguarding, and delivery of freight transported or destined for transportation over the State canals, and further providing that said piers and said canal lands, when so designated and so improved, shall be set apart exclusively for canal terminals under such rules and regulations as may be established. Said amendment should further provide for the appointment of two residents of the City of Buffalo as members of the commission.

That Chapter 585 of the Laws of 1888, entitled "an act to regulate the fees and charges for elevating, trimming, receiving, weighing, and discharging grain by means of floating and stationary elevators and warehouses within this State" be so amended as to make it more difficult of evasion and to provide for a maximum rate of ½ cent per bushel for all services performed in and about the elevation of grain, and providing a penalty for any violation of the act.

That Section 2, Article 2 of the transportation corporation law (being Chapter 40 of the General Laws) be amended by striking out the words "and no corporation organized under this act and designed to navigate any of the canals of the State, shall have a capital stock exceeding $50,000."

That the provisions of the charter of New York City, relating to the canal piers in the City of New York, shall be so amended as to restore the provisions contained in the original law, Chapter 276 of the Laws of 1882, limiting the use of said canal piers to "barges on the Hudson River, north of Castleton."

The passage of an act prohibiting the conveyance and perpetuity of any land under water within the limits of the City of New York, now owned by the State or city, and providing that leases and renewals thereof of such lands may be made under proper restrictions to the owners of the uplands when required by the necessities of commerce or manufacturing.

That the Legislature should confer annually such authorization as may be requested from time to time by the City of New York, to enable it to carry out plans for the construction of piers and the improvement in dock facilities at the Port of New York as rapidly as they may be required. The City of New York should endeavor speedily to supply the demands of commerce for modern piers, and the Legislature should aid the city in such endeavors in every way practicable.

That such authority within the constitutional limits be conferred on the City of New York as will enable the Dock Board upon the commencement of condemnation proceedings, to enter promptly into possession of lands necessary to be acquired for the improvement between Gansevoort and Twenty-third Streets; 6 per cent. interest upon the amount of each award calculated from the date the city shall thus acquire title to be paid by the City of New York to the owner of the property taken.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Senator Ahearn to-day introduced in the Senate a new school bill, which is understood to have the approval, not only of the school teachers and authorities, but also of Gov. Roosevelt, who believes that any amendment to the Ahearn law should come from Senator Ahearn.

The bill provides for the schedules adopted by the borough boards in September, 1899, and which were then agreeable to all. It specifies that salaries to be finally established shall not be less than the salaries duly fixed and established by the several School Boards on or before the first day of September, 1899, and in force and payable on that day in the several schools in the City of New York.

No woman teacher in the public schools of any of the boroughs shall be paid a sum less than $800 per annum. No regular woman teacher shall, after ten years' service in the public schools of said boroughs, who has completed ten years of service as teacher in public schools shall receive less than $900 per annum; nor shall any woman teacher in said schools who has completed fifteen years of service as teacher in public schools receive less than $1,200 per annum; and no woman, Vice Principal, head of department, assistant, or teacher of graduating class in said schools shall be paid less than $1,400 per annum after ten years of service.

No male teacher in the public schools in said boroughs shall be paid a less sum than $900 per annum, and no male teacher in said schools who has completed twelve years of service as teacher in public schools shall receive less than $2,100 per annum. Women teachers shall receive an equal annual increase of not less than $30 from the first year of service up to and including the tenth year of service, and thereafter an equal annual increase of not less than $60 from the tenth year, up to and including the fifteenth year of service.

Women teachers of boys or mixed classes, or of classes containing boys and girls, shall receive not less than $60 per annum more than women teachers of girls' classes, of corresponding years of service. Men teachers shall receive an equal annual increase of not less than $105 from the first year of service up to and including the twelfth year of service. No male vice principal or first assistant or head of department, or teacher of graduating class shall be paid less than $2,400 per annum after twelve years of service.

But no increase of salary above provided for shall be paid unless the service of such teacher, vice principal, head of department, or first assistant, shall have been approved after inspection and investigation as fit and meritorious by a majority of the Borough Board of School Superintendents; such inspections and investigations shall be made at the end of the first, sixth, and twelfth years of service, and if the service of such teachers, vice principals, heads of departments, or first assistants, are found fit and meritorious at such times, they shall receive the annual increase provided in this section, until the next investigation and inspection is made by such Borough Board.

No woman principal shall receive a salary less than paid to a woman first assistant, vice principal, or head of department, nor a male principal less than that paid to a male first assistant, vice principal, or head of department.

Gov. Roosevelt's Opinion.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—In speaking of school legislation for New York City, Gov. Roosevelt to-day said that there was one thing which he did want, and that was that the purpose of the Ahearn law should be carried into practical effect. The increase of salaries for the teachers provided for in that act should be secured. That is all that he desires. The teachers should receive their salaries due them at once. Legislation seeking to accomplish that purpose should not be complicated with other propositions.

COMPULSORY INDIAN EDUCATION.

Assembly Bill Applies to Allegany and Cattaraugus Counties.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—Assemblyman Fancher has introduced a bill to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children on the Allegany and Cattaraugus Reservations.

Parents who fail to send their children to school between the ages of six and sixteen years shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $5 or by imprisonment not exceeding ten days; for a second offense, $25 fine, imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both.

SENATOR GRADY'S SCHOOL BILL.

Controller Coler Says the Measure Is Free from Politics.

In speaking of Senator Grady's bill providing for the repeal of Section 1,065 of the charter and permitting the transfer by the Board of Estimate of unexpended balances in the Department of Education for the purpose of meeting emergency deficiencies, Controller Coler said yesterday: "This bill provides for an adjustment of troubles which have threatened us in the last year and also a remedy for conditions which arose in Richmond and Queens. At present no provision is made for transfers of these balances, and in consequence in times of emergency it becomes necessary to issue bonds—an absurdity, as every one conversant with city affairs must know, when we have money that can be used for the same purpose.

"I have nothing to do with the reorganization of the educational system, much as one appears to be needed. This department will take no part in forwarding reorganization, believing that such matters should be left to those more familiar with the educational necessities of the city. What we desire is that the financial part of the school system should be so arranged that there shall be no more bill-ups of pay rolls.

"There is absolutely no politics about the bill. Any one who would play politics over the necessities of a few women is unworthy of the respect of the community."

COURT ORDER IN MARCUS CASE.

Mrs. Marcus Cited to Show Cause for Her Husband's Arrest.

Henry Marcus, a son of the late Martin Marcus of Baltimore, yesterday obtained from Justice Fitzgerald, in the Supreme Court, an order directing his wife to show cause why the order of arrest in a separation suit she has brought against him should not be vacated. Marcus had been arrested on the ground that he was a resident of Maryland and was about to leave the jurisdiction of the New York Court to avoid paying her alimony and counsel fees pending the trial of the action. He had been locked up in the Ludlow Street Jail in default of $2,000 bail.

In his wife's suit for separation Marcus was charged with failure to provide for her. It was alleged that he had inherited about $600,000 upon the death of his father. In his application Marcus denied that he had at any time refused to support his wife, and said that he is willing to do so now. He charged her with addiction to alcoholic drink and "cigars," and alleged that at one time she attempted to commit suicide while under the influence of liquor.

Marcus says his marriage took place Oct. 31, 1896, and had been kept a secret from his relatives in Baltimore because his wife was a Gentile. He left Baltimore after his marriage and found employment in this city. He alleged that his wife had left him to take pleasure trips alone on several occasions.

Funeral of Andrew J. White.

The funeral of ex-Police Justice Andrew J. White took place yesterday morning. Soon after 10 o'clock the body was taken from the family residence, 6 Mount Morris Park West, to All Saints' Church, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and Madison Avenue. It was accompanied by a delegation of 200 members of the Sagamore Club, headed by Mayor Van Wyck and Peter F. Meyer. The pall bearers were Senator Thomas F. Grady, Commissioner Maurice J. Power, United States Marshal John P. McCarthy, John F. Carroll, Daniel F. McMahon, Commissioner Thaddeus Moriarty, Judge James Fitzgerald, Patrick Ferrigan, ex-Senator John Fox, William P. Mitchell, James W. Boyle, Philip J. Britt, and Judge Joseph Fallon. Solemn requiem mass was celebrated by the Rev. Father Power, and the interment was in Calvary.

BASEBALL "MAGNATES" MEET.

Refuse to Discuss Decisions, but It Is Reported Cleveland and Washington Will Leave the League.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 25.—A meeting of the National League baseball magnates, which has been in session here for two or three days past, and as to which, up to to-day, no definite information was obtainable, came to an end this afternoon and all but Messrs. Brush and Hart started for their homes.

While the representatives of the various clubs declined to give out the least information up to the time of their departure, it can be stated on the best of authority that as a result of the meeting Cleveland and Louisville will be dropped from the National League. It is also reasonably certain that Baltimore and Washington will not be in that organization when the coming season is opened. So far as Washington is concerned, the matter is already practically settled. But there is still a hitch on the Baltimore proposition upon which the Circuit Committee and the representatives of the latter club failed to reach an agreement. However, Messrs. Hanlon, Abell, Soden, and Ebbitt went East together on the same train this afternoon, and it is intimated that they may be able to reach a satisfactory solution on the Baltimore matter before they arrive home.

In case, however, no settlement is made in regard to Baltimore, it is probable that the National League will consist of ten clubs.

The League in each case will purchase outright the franchise and players. The purchase money is to be obtained by setting apart a small percentage of the gross receipts of each game played this season until the sum is fully made up. The amount will be considerably lessened by the sale of players and franchises, which will all be disposed of by the League. This will enable the New York Club to secure some good players, as it is the intention of the League to give the New York Club first choice of players.

Cleveland will undoubtedly be in the American Association, although no papers have been signed to that effect as yet. President Ban Johnson of the latter organization has made a proposition which will in all probability be accepted. The same is true of Louisville. An offer has been made for that club by the American Association, which is now under consideration. Indications are that the deal will soon be closed.

President Johnson of the American Association said he would put the best club in Cleveland that money could buy. He also said that he was still negotiating for a club in Chicago, and under certain conditions would have a club in that city. The National League "magnates" took every precaution to keep their presence in town a secret. Each of them registered at the Hollenden under a fictitious name, and in most cases actually denied their own identity when seen by newspaper men.

GOLF AT TAMPA.

Professionals from Magnolia Tournament Play for Qualification.

Special to The New York Times.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 25.—After a ride of six hours the professionals who were star players in the Magnolia tournament reached here last night. They found many golf enthusiasts awaiting their arrival with interest, as was evidenced by the large number of spectators on the links this morning.

Partly from the change of climate and partly from the effects of long games in the preceding tournament, the men became tired after playing thirty-six holes for qualification. George Low was in the lead, closely followed by Willie Smith. On the second round Smith's ball fell in a ditch, and he lost three strokes getting it out. Tom Dunn played in fine style, but was unlucky with two balls. One fell into the mat of Palmetto shrub that skirts the course, and will never be found even by caddies.

Among those entered were five professionals and three amateurs. Four qualified for the first division in the match play of eighteen holes to-morrow, and four for the second division. The qualifying scores for thirty-six holes were as follows:

Baltimore Baseball Ground Leased.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 25.—The new American Baseball Association scored a point against the National League team here to-day when its representatives signed a lease for the Union Park Baseball Grounds. The lease is to run for one year and $3,500 is the consideration for the use of the grounds and stands.

British Golf Champion May Come Here

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 25.—Among those who are expected to play on the Fairfield County Golf Club's links here next season is Harry Varden, the British champion. Charles S. Cox, one of the best of Fairfield's players, has just returned from a trip to England, and has been authorized by Mr. Varden to make contracts with the different clubs in the United States who wish to have him play on their links.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

Yesterday's stock market was narrow and irregular. Less than a quarter of a million of shares made up the total Stock Exchange transactions, and market values fluctuated but slightly—announcement of British victory in South Africa exerting no influence whatever upon security market sentiment.

Of more direct importance than anything else developing during the day was the action of the Bank of England in reducing its discount rate to 4 per cent., leaving it at two-thirds of the rate prevailing at New Year's. Announcement of this encouraging action was also without market effect, so far as either activity or the course of values might indicate.

The prospect of easy money is becoming accepted generally; and some financial authorities recently insistent that there could be but temporary yielding in interest rates are now among those who unqualifiedly forecast cheap money throughout the rest of the Winter and Spring.

Yet notwithstanding the showing ease and the steady gain to the banks from the Sub-Treasury and the interior, some interests other than bankers on Wall Street are not all agreed that money will from this time on be easy. Six months' money now can be had in not a few quarters on good collateral at 4½ and 5 per cent., and yet it is a fact that a leading trust company this week has closed several six months' loans for very large amounts, and on excellent collateral, at from 6 to 7 per cent.

Discussing the situation, a well-known financial authority said yesterday: "Those people who are insisting on higher than the present prevailing rates for time money are acting wisely and are apparently keeping their eyes open to possible future developments. In my opinion when England calls for her new war loan you will see gold leaving this country in no inconsiderable amount."

And though views like these are relatively few, they are not wisely ignored—and so conservative commission brokers are insisting in their continuing counsels to customers to be patient rather than active just now.

While the stock market lags there are not lacking indications that extraordinary plans are under way toward success in a variety of vast undertakings whose accomplishment will mean much that is good for financial interests. Concentration of control is impending in many corporation quarters, and though slight hints get to the public of what is proposed, it is probable that results of far-reaching influence are very close at hand. These plans have to do not only with the railway field, but some of them have consequential purposes in the industrial world.

The inactivity marking the stock market is no sign of inactivity upon the part of those financiers at whose will, eventually, stock market activity can be commanded.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

To-day is the day set for the annual meeting of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and many are the conjectures in Wall Street as to what developments the meeting may bring forth. Of late there has been in the Street much talk of changes in the Directorate, and it is no exaggeration to say that at one time or another the name of almost every important financial interest in the Street has been heard in connection with the matter. These names included men prominent in Standard Oil interests, W. Seward Webb, C. M. Depew, D. O. Mills, E. H. Harriman, W. C. Whitney, H. H. Porter, and others But, despite all the talk, no positive information on the subject could be gotten, though there seems to be a rather strong opinion that some changes of consequence in the Directorate will be made.

In this connection a Wall Street bulletin yesterday said, discussing probable changes in the board:

"It is believed that the new board will practically represent the consolidated interests which now control the Third Avenue, Metropolitan Traction Company, Consolidated Gas, and the Electric Lighting Companies. It is thought that after these changes have taken place it will show that all the traction roads in this city, as well as in Brooklyn, are practically controlled by the same interests.

"Bearing still further upon this belief is a well defined rumor that a plan is now being matured to run Brooklyn Rapid Transit cars over specified routes on Manhattan Island and return over the new East River Bridge. It is said, for instance, that upon the expiration soon of the contract for the use of South Brooklyn ferry, the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company will not renew the contract, but will put on its own boats over this route, equipped with accommodations for street cars to be carried to Manhattan. Thence these cars will proceed as stated over certain routes in Manhattan and return over present and future bridge routes to Brooklyn."

But on these matters, as on all others of a like kind, Directors of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and other gentlemen who might be concerned were silent.

MEETINGS AND ELECTIONS.

Peoria & Eastern Railway Co. Stockholders' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Peoria & Eastern Railway Co. for the election of Directors, and for such other business as may come before the meeting, will be held at Danville, Illinois, on Wednesday, February 14th, 1900, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The stock transfer books will close February 1st, 1900, at 3 o'clock P. M. and reopen at 10 o'clock A. M. February 15th, 1900.

J. C. DAVIE, Secretary.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN INstitute, February 1st, at 19 West 44th St., at 8 o'clock P. M. DAVID PETTIGREW, Secretary.

A RIDICULOUS REPORT.

Little attention was paid in the Street yesterday to the ridiculous report from Cleveland that the recently acquired holdings of Baltimore and Ohio stock by Pennsylvania interests were due to a sale by Mr. J. J. Hill of his Baltimore and Ohio stock. As a matter of fact, it is of record that most of the shares bought by Pennsylvania were acquired in the open market, while it is officially stated that Mr. Hill has not parted with any of his Baltimore and Ohio holdings.

LARGEST IN WEEKS.

Norfolk and Western shares continued strong yesterday on the certainty of the declaration next week of the semi-annual dividend on the preferred stock. It is officially stated that the earnings of the road for the third week of the present month show the largest increase for many weeks, the total gain being $54,940, or at the rate of nearly $8,000 a day. Since July 1 the increase has been $1,051,490.

Officials of the road point to the fact that these increases will be added to after April 1, when the higher coal rates go into effect.

GIVES ADDED STRENGTH.

Southern Pacific was bought yesterday, both for London and for home account, on the growing belief that the admission of Mr. D. O. Mills to the Directorate signified future important developments in the property. The statement was also made that the earnings of the company for the present month would show a handsome increase over the same month last year, and easily maintain the record of increases lately made.

KNOW OF NO STEEL WAR.

It was reported on the Street yesterday in a special dispatch from Pittsburg that a war among the steel companies was on, and that as a result prices of open hearth steel and billets were to be cut considerably below their present prices.

At the offices of the Carnegie Steel Company here and of the Federal Steel Company all knowledge of any such war or threatened reduction in price was denied.

LONDON'S SMALL BUYING.

It is a singular fact that, notwithstanding the buoyancy of the London market, London was only a comparatively small purchaser in the market here, not more than 30,000 shares being bought. Indeed, houses with London connections say that the trading for foreign account was less active yesterday than it had been for several days.

INCREASED EARNINGS.

The buying in Missouri Pacific was not large yesterday, but it was from the same source as recent buying, and was helped by the report that the earnings of the company in the third week in January increased $36,000 over the same week last year. Since the first of the year the increase has been $53,350.

PACIFIC MAIL'S MOVEMENT.

There was comparatively little trading in Pacific Mail yesterday, and what there was was principally prompted by the announcement of the presentation at Washington of the memorial from the National Board of Trade in favor of the bill. Reports were somewhat more hopeful in respect to the probability of the passage of the measure.

SOLD FOR $39,000.

A seat on the Stock Exchange was this week sold for $39,000—one thousand less than the highest price ever paid for a seat, which was some six or seven weeks ago. A seat sold since then brought only $37,000, but it is understood this was due to the fact that the owner took the first bid that was offered him.

SUGAR AND TOBACCO.

There was little change in the quotation for Sugar Trust and Tobacco Trust stocks yesterday, the former scoring a gain of ¼ point on sales of 19,000 shares and the latter losing ⅛ on transactions involving about 6,000 shares. There was nothing new in the way of news concerning either property.

FOR A RIGHT OF WAY.

Among the factors contributing to the strength of Rock Island yesterday was the report from Washington of the passage by the Senate of the bill granting to the railroad the right of way through the military reservation in Oklahoma. It is said that this will remove obstacles in the way of certain developments which the company has for some time had in mind.

PULLMAN CERTIFICATES.

The Committee on Securities of the New York Stock Exchange has ruled that contracts in Pullman Company made on the Exchange before March 19, 1900, may be settled by the delivery of certificates of the old Pullman's Palace Car Company or the new certificates of the Pullman Company. Contracts made after March 19, 1900, must be settled in the certificates of the new Pullman Company.

FLOUR MILLING COMPANY.

A report was printed yesterday to the effect that the United States Flour Milling Company was in danger of disintegration. It was said that the Hecker-Jones-Jewell milling interests would withdraw. The trust was formed in May, 1899.

Thomas A. McIntyre, Treasurer of the company, said yesterday that the report was untrue. President George Urban, who is in the city for a few days, said: "This report comes from Minneapolis. It is the result of some animus which so far we have not been able to trace, and it crops up every now and then. The Hecker-Jones-Jewell interests couldn't get out if they wanted to. We bought 95 per cent. of their stock and have covered their property with a mortgage. The company is not going to disintegrate. Business is good. We can sell more flour than we can make.

"We are accordingly looking for more working capital, and our chance of getting it is bright. I don't thing we shall get it by issuing new stock, though we are authorized to issue stock to the amount of $25,000,000, and we have only issued $8,000,000—$5,000,000 of preferred and $3,000,000 of common. As to a bond issue, I cannot say. Negotiations are going on now, but I am not prepared to talk as to what our plans are.

"We have not cut rates and have made no pretension to controlling the flour market."

THIRD AVENUE FLOATING DEBT.

The accountants engaged on the books of the Third Avenue Railroad Company are still at work, and it may be several days before the plans for the taking up of the $17,000,000 floating debt are made known in detail. Meanwhile there is a great deal of speculation regarding the corporation. An authorized representative of the Whitney syndicate denied yesterday that Metropolitan interests were in either the syndicate which is to take up the floating debt or in that which is to protect the individual holdings of Henry Hart.

CLEARING HOUSE COMPANY.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clearing House Building Company was held at the Clearing House yesterday. The following Directors were re-elected for a year: George G. Williams, President of the Chemical National Bank; F. D. Tappen, President of the Gallatin National Bank; J. Edward Simmons, President of the Fourth National Bank; E. H. Perkins, Jr., President of the Importers and Traders' Bank, and Dumont Clarke, President of the American Exchange Bank. The Directors re-elected the following officers for a year: President—G. G. Williams; Vice President—J. Edward Simmons; Secretary and Treasurer—William Sherer.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The Cotton Exchange had a fairly active market yesterday, the trading amounting to some 350,000 bales. Cotton opened up 3 or 4 points, and steadily advanced, closing with a net gain of 7 or 8 points. It enjoyed a firm undertone. The demand for spot cotton in the South continues good.

Coffee gained slightly yesterday in a rather dull day's trading, amounting to 22,000 bags. It opened unchanged to 5 points off, and closed unchanged to 5 points up, without the presence of any exciting incidents.

Wheat was dull on the Produce Exchange but strong, making a slight net advance. Improving tendencies in foreign markets are reported, and confirmation was received of the news of plague at Rosario, Argentine Republic, and of crop damage in France. The export sales were small. Corn was dull, without much change. Oats were firm and steady.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE SURPLUS.

The younger members of the Produce Exchange were somewhat excited yesterday over a report that it is proposed by the Gratuity Fund Trustees to leave them out in the distribution of the $750,000 surplus and to divide the fund among the older members who helped swell it some time ago. The Trustees, it is said, are thinking of going to the courts to get them to help settle the distribution of the funds. There is no doubt, it is said, that the older members will get the larger share, but it is well understood by the Exchange generally that no one who has contributed anything at all will be entirely shut out of the division.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 2½@3½ per cent., closing at 3 per cent.

Time money, 4@4½ per cent. for sixty to ninety days and 4½@5 per cent. for longer periods. Mercantile paper, 4½@5 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 4¾@5½ per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 6@7 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statement: Exchanges, $173,829,114; balances, $9,419,023; Sub-Treasury debt balance, $969,737.

Money on call in London, 1½ per cent. Rate of discount in open market, 3 per cent. for short, and 3@3½ per cent. for three months' bills.

Foreign exchange very firm. Nominal rates were $4.85 for sixty days and $4.88 for demand.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the market for outside securities yesterday was more active and prices were more irregular than on the previous day. A number of issues were traded in, in the majority of which closing quotations showed some recession from Wednesday's final figures, while a few stocks closed with substantial net gains. Considerable willingness to sell, with a demand that in some stocks was rather meagre, with here and there a stock that was in excellent demand, led to the irregular condition of the market. For most of the movements that occurred there was no explanation in news developments, though most of the news that did come to hand was of a favorable character. The trading in the gas issues made less prominent the continuing advance in Standard Oil, but this issue, though less active than earlier in the week, remained the object of considerable interest and ended the day with another large net gain. One or two of the industrial stocks were in good demand and sold at advances over previous day's figures, but as a whole this group furnished only a small part of the day's business.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS common sold down to 22, the preferred stock to 43¼, and the bonds to 92¾. These declines were brought about by the announcement that the Directors of the company had reduced the rate of gas to 65 cents, thus bringing its price down to that fixed by the Consolidated Gas Company at the outbreak of the present rate-war, and still maintained by it. On the curb no definite opinion as to the significance of this move was expressed, but it was at first viewed as an indication that the conditions in the local gas industry are not quite as favorable as was supposed, and this led to the selling of the New Amsterdam issues, which brought about the sharp declines recorded. It was said, however, that insiders were buyers of the stock yesterday as they had been sellers when the New Amsterdam issues advanced after the price of gas was raised recently to the legal limit. Net declines in these issues for the day were half a point in the common stock, about 2 points in the preferred, and 1½ points in the bonds. The bonds were the most active of the three issues.

STANDARD GAS attracted attention in view of the strength it displayed, notwithstanding the declines in the New Amsterdam stocks. Standard common was in demand at 112, and the preferred stock was wanted at 135. Very little of either issue was offered.

ILLINOIS TRANSPORTATION was active to the extent of about 700 shares, which changed hands at 2⅝. It was offered at this figure at the close, and 2¾ was bid, showing a net loss of ⅛ of a point. The decline in this stock caused some surprise, for during the day it was officially announced that the second payment of $5 a share, which was due Feb. 1, would not be called until July 2. It was also reported that at the annual meeting of the company, to be held in the first week in April, a proposition to reduce the capitalization from $25,000,000 to $2,500,000 would be presented to the stockholders with all probability of the plan being adopted. If this suggestion meets with approval, as is expected, the stock will become full paid and non-assessable, with a par value of $10. It is said that a similar plan may later be adopted by the New York and New England Transportation Companies.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was fairly active at the close and was offered down with very little support showing. It sold at 5 and for a time was offered at that figure, but it rallied a little and closed at 5 bid, with a net loss of half a point.

BOROUGH GAS.—It was reported that at a meeting of the Borough Gas Company, held in Philadelphia on Wednesday, a new Board of Directors, consisting of R. L. Austin, H. Wichman, J. A. Eustis, Horace C. Potts of Philadelphia, and Albert Seligman of New York, was elected. It is said that the business of the company is growing rapidly and that a large number of new contracts have recently been made. It is thought that no further assessments will be called on the stock of the Brooklyn Gas and Electric Light Company, which was found last year to take over the Borough Gas Company, and which now controls that company.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 25.—The developments regarding the Fitchburg property naturally had sympathetic influence to-day on Boston and Maine, Central Massachusetts, and Rutland, all of which made slight gains. Rutland preferred was up 10 points on the bidding quotation to 80, while the best offering price was 81½.

In the copper shares business was extremely light, but all of the specialties showed improvement. This was notably true of Butte, which at one time sold at 53, but later fell off to 51, while ¼ of 1 per cent. was bid to call it at 60 in 60 days. Osceola gained 4 points to 71; Montana sold at from 265 to 267 ex dividend; Calumet and Hecla was up 5 points to 745; Arcadian in a small way, on odd lot transactions, sold at 15½ and 16½; Parrot went to 41⅜; Centennial-Eureka sold at 22½.

In the general list Erie Telephone was in good demand up to 104 and the rights pushed up again to $1. Dominion Coal sold at 42, and Bell Telephone gained two points to 332. The last hour brought an intense dullness, with the ticker actually at a standstill for much of the time, and final prices generally came somewhat under the best figures of the day.

At the Clearing House 4 per cent. was the nominal rate, but it is understood that some of the banks made loans as low as 3 per cent. on rate that is just one-half that quoted a week ago. The actual business done, however, was so light that the loaning rate really counted for little. New York funds sold at 5 and 7½ cents premium.

THE ARDANDHU'S CREW HERE.

The survivors of the crew of the steamer Ardandhu, arrived here yesterday on the Fall River steamer Pilgrim. The Ardandhu was in collision with the Herman Winter of Boston, in Robinson's Holl, Vineyard Sound, on Jan 23. Two men lost their lives as a result of the collision. The twenty-eight members of the crew who came here yesterday, were paid off at the British Vice-Consul's office, and a number of them left for their homes in Halifax.

Various stories were told by the crew as to the cause of the collision. These did not entirely agree, and the Munson Line is awaiting the report of Capt. Dundas of the disabled vessel. The Captain left Vineyard Haven last noght, and will make his report to-day.

Among the statements made by the crew of the Ardandhu was one to the effect that the Captain of the Herman Winter did not offer them any assistance after the collision.

SCHWARTZ DEFAULTS HIS BAIL.

Samuel L. Schwartz, a broker, living at 701 Second Avenue, and who had a handsomely appointed office at 32 Broadway, where he is said to have conducted a bucket shop, disappeared yesterday, having defaulted the $1,000 bail fixed for his appearance in the Tombs Police Court. He was arrested Tuesday on the charge of grand larceny, made by Louis Lifschitz, a diamond cutter, of 321 East Eighteenth Street, who said he had been swindled out of $300.

Isadore Wolf, a real estate dealer of 220 Eldridge Street, qualified as a bondsman for Schwartz, who was held in $1,000 bail to await further examination yesterday. Schwartz could not be found yesterday. It developed in the Police Court that he had received $4,600 in foreign notes and jewelry from Lifschnitz for safe keeping in addition to the $300 specified in the charge.

The police say that the missing broker has a long record of crimes against him both in this country and Hungary, where he was born. He came to this country in 1896 and established himself at the Hoffman House, but was soon indicted for grand larceny in connection with a bucket shop then running at 49 New Street under the name of the "Schwartz Commission Company."

In September, 1898, he again gained notoriety in connection with the theft of a hat box containing $3,000 worth of jewelry from a wealthy Southern woman at Atlantic City.

Less Duty on Mr. Gould's Antiques.

Judge Wheeler, in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday reversed the decision of the customs authorities in an appeal taken by Amerman & Patterson, importers of the George J. Gould ewer and tray, antique articles of a painted copper, which cost when purchased abroad $14,000. The Government had contended that the articles were dutiable as decorated china, on which the rate is 60 per cent. The importers insisted that the articles should have been classed as oil and water paintings, and assessed under Paragraph 454 of the Dingley law, which imposes a tariff of 20 per cent. Judge Wheeler upheld the latter contention.

COTTON.—Taken as a whole the cotton market showed all the symptoms of healthiness, although not making especially active nor scoring a pronounced advance. The opening was steady, with prices 3@6 points higher. The early improvement was the result of better English cables than looked for. Liquidation and covering on about even terms kept the market quite steady but new speculation was not attempted with much confidence, as there still remained some misgivings as to the real situation of affairs at the seat of war. At the best point of the session prices showed an advance of 8@10 points on Wednesday's closing figures, while during the weakest interval the net improvement was only a matter of 3@5 points. Whenever the market showed signs of breaking, however, there was a pretty good class of buying, with March contracts getting the preference. The bull contingent at this point were disposed to disregard current predictions of larger receipts upon the ground that they will merely represent recent heavy buying by exporters, and that as soon as this cotton is shipped the proportions of the movement will again become very small. The market was finally very steady at an advance of 6@8 points. Southern spot markets, middling quoted, were officially reported by wire as follows: New Orleans, 7 9-16c; Mobile, 7½c; Savannah, 7½c; Charleston, 7½c; Wilmington, 7½c; Norfolk, 7½c; Baltimore, 7⅞c; Memphis, 7½c; St. Louis, 7 9-16c.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—The wheat market yesterday was moderately active and generally firm, closing ¼@½c net higher. Local traders started the day with a bearish sentiment, and sold short quite freely during the first half hour, but failed to make any impression on the market owing to firmness abroad and a cold wave over Winter wheat States. One of the features of cable news was a confirmation of Wednesday's reports of plague in Rosario, coupled with the usual intimations that Argentine ports might have to close. Cables at first were considerably higher both at Liverpool and Paris, but subsequently eased off. The former closed unchanged to ¼d net higher, and Paris wheat 10 points up, with flour 5 points lower to 15 points net higher. The situation in our own crop States was about similar to that noted on Wednesday, the cold weather continuing over a good portion of the belt without snowfall. Arrivals at all interior points amounted to 317,000 bushels, and Northwest receipts were 261 cars.

COFFEE.—Speculation in Brazil coffee futures was moderate, and the general market developed increased weakness. The market opened steady at unchanged prices to a decline of 5 points, as cables, while of somewhat conflicting purport and generally higher, were not satisfactory. Against the firm feature of small receipts at Rio and Santos was the weak feature of much smaller warehouse deliveries in the United States. There was some local covering, however, which prevented any material decline. The market, following the opening call, ruled rather quiet within a range of 10 points for the entire session. Total sales were 22,000 bags. The market closed steady, with prices 5 points lower to 5 points net higher, having rallied late in the day on a spurt of local covering.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

HEYMAN ROBINSON.—Deputy Sheriff Radley yesterday sold out the effects of Heyman Robinson, Manufacturer of mattresses at 111 Avenue B, for $415.

SOUTH BROOKLYN RAILROAD AND TERMINAL COMPANY.—Transcript of a judgment from Kings County was filed yesterday against the South Brooklyn Railroad and Terminal Company in favor of Jonathan K. Gapen for $39,644 for deficiency.

ISAAC MORAFF.—The Sheriff received an execution yesterday against Isaac Moraff of 807 Grand Street for $479 in favor of Uhlfelder & Hecht for dress goods sold to him. Max Silverstein, their attorney, said that Moraff formerly had a dry goods store on Grand Street and last Fall bought a lot of goods to take to Cuba to sell. He had returned from Cuba, and did not pay his bill for the goods purchased from Uhlfelder & Hecht, so they sued him for the money.

Out of Town.

VOSS CONCENTRATED SOUP AND FOOD COMPANY.—Deputy Sheriff Roberts received an attachment yesterday against the Voss Concentrated Soup and Food Company of Carthage, O., for $683 in favor of John P. Tuomey on an assigned claim for canned meats sold to the company by the Frank Diesel Can Company of Chicago. The attachment was served on two wholesale grocers here.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

ADDISON E. DEDERICK.—Addison E. Dederick, a carpenter of Kingston, N. Y., has filed a petition in bankruptcy here, with liabilities of $9,403 and no assets. He made an assignment on Dec. 31, 1896.

CHARLES REICH.—Charles Reich, a workman on furs, at 52 East Tenth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $2,475, and no assets. The liabilities are all for eggs purchased in 1894, when he was a wholesale dealer in butter and eggs.

MEHAFFEY & PHILLIPS.—William H. Mehaffey and Charles H. Phillips, who composed the firm of Mehaffey & Phillips, importers of buttons, formerly at 27 Howard Street, have filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,327 to four creditors and no assets. The firm sold out in December, 1895, and it was said that they compromised with most of their creditors at 25 cents on the dollar.

MATHEW F. RILEY.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy has been filed against Mathew F. Riley, builder, of Union Avenue, near One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street, by the following creditors: Luigi Marino, $1,087; Conrad Malkmes, $240; Pasquale Zeolla, $15; and Newschaffer & Co., $325; all for work on five buildings, which Riley was erecting on Union Avenue, near One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street. They allege that he is insolvent, and committed an act of bankruptcy by transferring the property above mentioned on Oct. 17 to John F. O'Leary, a creditor, in order to prefer him.

HUNNINGHAUS & LINDEMANN.—Hunninghaus & Lindemann, formerly manufacturers of window shades at 79 Walker Street, who filed a petition in bankruptcy on Aug. 9, 1898, have asked leave to withdraw the petition and to have the proceedings dismissed. Creditors were ordered to show cause yesterday before Referee in Bankruptcy Seaman Miller at 346 Broadway why their request should not be granted. There was no opposition. The matter was merely formal, as the firm effected a settlement with their creditors sixteen months ago at 33 1-3 cents on the dollar, and dissolved partnership.

Receiver for Rents.

Justice Andrews of the Supreme Court has appointed William E. Wyatt receiver of rents of 255 Pearl Street in a suit brought by Mary A. Chisolm against Joseph E. Weed and others to foreclose a mortgage of $35,000 made by Mr. Weed on June 23, 1896. The property has passed through several hands since then, and on Oct. 28 last was purchased by Emma W. Vaughan and Kenerk & Healy. Miss Vaughan is a sister of William W. Vaughan, dealer in building materials, who filed a petition in bankruptcy on Nov. 4 last, and it is said his interest was put in her name on account of his bankruptcy. His trustee in bankruptcy, it was stated, claims that the half interest in the property in her name belongs to his creditors.

E. Berry Wall's Creditors Meet.

A meeting of the creditors of E. Berry Wall was held yesterday before Referee in Bankruptcy Seaman Miller at 346 Broadway. Mr. Wall filed a petition in bankruptcy on Nov. 22, showing liabilities of $9,384 and no assets except clothing valued at $250, which is exempt. Three creditors proved their claims at the meeting yesterday, as follows: George Latham, $3,084; Henrietta Latham, $3,272; Oliver Moore's estate, $81. No trustee was elected.

Discharge in Bankruptcy.

Judge Brown of the United States District Court has granted a discharge in bankruptcy to Adolph Blitz of 824 Lexington Avenue, whose liabilities were $423,178. He was formerly in business at Nashville, Tenn.

MANHATTAN LIFE REPLIES

Rock Foundation Permits No Settlement of Building.

Mr. Crocker's Counsel Declares the North Wall and the Big Cornice Overhang.

The Manhattan Life Insurance Company has issued a statement relative to the alleged encroachment of its building on the adjoining property of George Crocker, at 70 Broadway. It is in part as follows:

"William J. Fryer, a member of the Board of Examiners in the Department of Buildings, says that as a member of that board he carefully examined the original plans of both the foundations and the superstructure, and, in his opinion, the foundations placed under the building being carried down to bedrock, have never, and will never, permit any settlement of the building. In his personal and thorough examination, recently made, there is no evidence that the north wall, which adjoins the Crocker property, is in any different position from what it was when it was originally erected. It is conceded that the cornices project beyond the dividing lot lines, but these are purely ornamental and temporal, and must of necessity be removed when an adjoining building is erected to the same height.

"Mr. Sooysmith, the distinguished engineer, said that as to the foundations and stability in general of the building, these had never been questioned, and that the foundations were on bedrock and absolutely perfect, and that the walls built upon these foundations had never and could never settle a particle."

Eugene D. Hawkins of 111 Broadway, counsel for Mr. Crocker, made the following statement last night:

"The results of the three different surveys taken at the instance of Mr. Crocker, show that the north wall of the Manhattan Life Insurance Company Building at the Broadway end overhangs its base and Mr. Crocker's building, 70 Broadway, 5⅝ inches.

"Part of this overhang the Manhattan Life Insurance Company admits, but the most of it, it claims, is due to the lateral movement of Mr. Crocker's building at the time the Manhattan Life Insurance Company made the foundation for its new building. This southward movement of 70 Broadway, the witnesses for the Manhattan Life Insurance Company stated, was due in part to the pressure on 70 Broadway coming from the direction of the Union Trust Company Building, 80 Broadway, the foundations of which it claims are not upon bedrock.

"The improbability of these claims is clearly demonstrated (1) by the uncontradicted surveys of Mr. Francis W. Ford, which show that Mr. Crocker's building is exactly in the same position now as it was in 1892; (2) by the uncontradicted testimony that the Union Trust Company's building has not moved; (3) by the testimony that the flagging, coping, front walls, and foundations of the building between the Union Trust Company's building and the Manhattan Life Insurance Company's building are unbroken and all in line.

"It was because of the refusal of the Insurance Company to permit Mr. Crocker to utilize its wall so as not to lose the space occupied by the encroachment that Mr. Crocker began this action for an injunction to compel the removal of so much of the wall as the surveys showed overhang his premises.

"In addition to the above encroachment, the three cornices of the Manhattan Life Insurance Company's north wall overhang Mr. Crocker's property from one to three feet all the way from Broadway to New Street."

MISS KELLAM PLEADS GUILTY.

Actress Admits that She Committed Perjury to Avoid Paying Damages to Mary B. O. Maris.

Adelaide Kellam, an actress, who has been in Ludlow Street Jail for the last six months for contempt of court in refusing to pay a judgment obtained against her, pleaded guilty to perjury yesterday in the Court of General Sessions.

Miss Kellam was the defendant in a civil suit for $2,000 brought against her in the City Court in October, 1897, by Mary B. O. Maris, also an actress, who said that she had lent the money to the defendant. She stated in her complaint that she received as security for her loan a quantity of what purported to be diamond jewelry, but that afterward it turned out the gems were paste. Miss Kellam failed to pay the judgment obtained against her, and when examined in supplementary proceedings on Feb. 15, 1899, testified that she had no money. She was asked then if she had received any insurance at the time of her father's death, and answered that she had not, and that her father's life had never, to her knowledge, been insured. Francis A. Hine, an employe of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, testified that the company had issued a policy for $1,000 to Mr. Kellam Jan. 20, 1862, and that $1,248.37 was paid to Adelaide Kellam after his death, in November, 1898. The actress was committed to jail for contempt of court and afterward indicted for perjury. She was remanded until Friday for sentence.

POLICEMAN TRIED FOR ASSAULT.

Commissioner Hess Reserves Decision in the De Leon Case.

Policeman Patrick McGovern of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station was tried before Commissioner Hess yesterday on a complaint made by a boy, Solon De Leon, a son of Daniel De Leon, the Socialist leader. Young De Leon alleged that on Dec. 27 he was assaulted by the officer, and afterward arrested by him on a false charge. De Leon had been one of several boys engaged in a football game in a vacant lot at Seventy-eighth Street and Avenue A.

The boy said that after the game had been broken up by McGovern the latter struck him because he refused to leave the lot. Two other boys, Albert Bush and John Marshall, testified to the same effect. McGovern denied that he had struck the boy, and Patrolman Parsloe, who was with him at the time, confirmed his denial. The elder De Leon acted as counsel for his son. Commissioner Hess reserved his decision.

CITY SWEEPERS' PAY CUT.

New Rule of Deputy Commissioner Quinn—Funds Short.

Deputy Commissioner of Street Cleaning Quinn of Brooklyn Borough issued a notice to his sweepers yesterday that for an indefinite period they would have to take one day's leave of absence each week without pay. This is said to be due to the large increase in the salaries account of the sweepers.

When Commissioner Quinn presented his estimate last year he asked for $2,124,234 for the maintenance of the department. He was allowed $1,405,005. It was understood that the salaries of the sweepers were to be graded the same as those of policemen and firemen. The Board of Estimate adopted a resolution providing that the men receive the maximum amount, beginning on Jan. 1. This action was taken in accordance with the law known as the Prevailing Rate of Wages statute. While the Board fixed the salary at the maximum, $720, it is said, it made no provision for the increase, which, aggregated about $120,000 a year.

Commissioner Quinn was at first inclined to dismiss 150 to 200 of the sweepers to keep within the appropriation.

Life Saving at Many Stations.

The Volunteer Life-Saving Corps of the State of New York has issued its tenth annual report. The association has over six hundred life-saving stations, and more than 6,000 members enrolled. During the last year the expenditures amounted to $6,231.60, and contributions were received to the amount of $4,972.25. For lives saved from drowning 113 honor medals were awarded. The total number of lives saved during the season was 468.

To Succeed Inspector Quinlan.

Robert Warchorn, for some years an Inspector of Immigration, has been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury as Supervising Inspector in charge of the Contract Labor Bureau at this port to succeed John J. Quinlan, resigned. The appointment is understood to be a temporary one. Mr. Warchorn will take charge of the bureau on Feb. 1.

EX-GOV. MORTON WINS.

Jury Unmoved by Music Teacher's Complaints About the Douglass—Singers' Long Climb.

Prof. Paul Wiallard, a teacher of singing at 485 Fifth Avenue, was defeated on Wednesday in a suit brought against him by ex-Gov. Levi P. Morton in the City Court before Judges O'Dwyer and a jury. The action was brought to recover $330 alleged to be due for rent.

Prof. Wiallard in December, 1898, leased for a year a large suite of apartments on the sixth floor of the Douglass apartment house at One Hundred and Twenty-first Street and Seventh Avenue, which is owned by ex-Gov. Morton. The professor conducted his conservatory and lived on this floor until last May, when he suddenly sent his family to Montreal for the Summer and took up his temporary residence at the Lotos Club. The family never returned to the Douglass and the professor refused to pay the rent for the last seven months of the term of the lease.

When the case was called in court Prof. Wiallard told the jury that the elevator at the Douglass was nearly always out of repair, and his pupils were consequently compelled to walk up six flights of stairs to reach the conservatory of music. After walking up six flights of stairs, the professor averred, even the most ambitious singer could not accomplish much. Frequently, he declared, students had to sit in idleness trying to recover their breath. The professor also said that this was the cause of monetary loss to him. The heating apparatus, he further said, was erratic.

The jury decided against the professor.

SOUTHERN MORMON MISSIONS.

The American Missionary Association Reports on Its Progress.

The American Missionary Association, which through Prof. H. L. Hoyt of Chattanooga, Tenn., has been investigating the Mormon propaganda in the South, has issued a report on the subject, reviewing the methods of Mormon organization throughout the South and the work thus far accomplished by it.

Mr. Hoyt reports that there are now 500 Elders working as missionaries in Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia. The entire work is under the direction of Elder Rich, whose headquarters are at Chattanooga. Although failing in their efforts at winning converts in the cities, except among the most illiterate classes, Mr. Hoyt says that they have met with some success with the mountain people, chiefly because the latter have natural religious inclinations and are isolated from counteracting influences. The Mormons claim between 9,000 and 10,000 converts in the South, which Mr. Hoyt concedes to be a fair estimate. The Elders do not urge their converts to emigrate to Utah, but rather to remain and propagate their faith in their own communities. They do not preach polygamy, but defend the doctrine in its relation to the history of the Mormon Church.

COURT ON WIFE-BEATERS.

Hot Oil Suggested as One Punishment —Mr. Schramm's Complaint.

Magistrate Pool, in the Harlem Court yesterday morning, made use of strong language in regard to wife beaters in general and Adam Schramm of 622 West One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, in particular.

"Any man who beats his wife," declared the Magistrate to Schramm, "should have hot oil poured over him, then be whipped, and afterward hanged. No punishment I can think of is bad enough for a wife beater."

Schramm had had his wife arrested, and wanted her sent to the workhouse, charging her with drinking and making home a place of misery. In reply the wife had told the Magistrate that she never drank anything except beer occasionally. She had a baby in her arms when she came to court. She further told the Magistrate that Schramm beat her.

Schramm said that he never struck her except once in a while when she was intoxicated and exasperated him by her conduct.

Mrs. Schramm said that Schramm had three sisters who came to the house and made trouble.

"Keep your sisters out of your house," was the Magistrate's order. And then, turning to Mrs. Schramm, he said:

"If any of those sisters of his come to the house let me know, and I will issue a warrant for the arrest of all of them."

LEGAL NOTES.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE A QUESTION OF FACT.—Mrs. Anna N. Beecher, as executrix of Charles L. C. Beecher, who was killed three years ago by being struck by a locomotive of the Long Island Railroad Company at Jamaica, L. I., brought a suit against the company for damages. A dismissal of the complaint at Trial Term was reversed by the Appellate Division of the Second Department, and that decision was recently affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Evidence was given upon the trial that the company had started the train on the south track at Jamaica substantially every morning for many years, and that during all that period of time, upon the announcement by the doorman of "the rapid transit for Brooklyn" the people were accustomed to rush out to the station over the platform to the north tracks, then across them to and upon the platform, in readiness to board the train as soon as it came to a stop. The Court of Appeals holds, in an opinion by Chief Judge Parker, that the jury were at liberty to find that this custom had been so long continued that such an announcement by the doorman on the morning of the accident constituted an invitation to every passenger there, including the decedent, to pass out of the station, across the station platform, then over the north tracks, and to the platform of the south track, with the assurance that the way was not only free from obstructions, but would remain so for such a reasonable time as would enable them to pass to the train in safety. The question whether or not the deceased man was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look or listen as the train which caused his death approached was therefore one of fact and should be submitted to the jury. Judgment absolute was ordered for the plaintiff upon a stipulation made by the defendant.

IMPORTING LOW-QUALITY TEAS.—The Secretary of the Treasury, by an act of Congress passed nearly three years ago, was authorized, with a board of tea experts, to establish standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of all kinds of teas imported into the United States; and the act prohibited the importation of teas below the standard, on penalty of their reexportation or destruction. William J. Crulkshank, Montague Hope, Rowre Harris, Russell Bleecker, and Mark Bagaley, who —with knowledge of the act and of the standards—imported teas below standard, brought suit on their rejection by Collector Bidwell, to enjoin him from holding or destroying the teas, claiming the act to be unconstitutional, for various reasons. A decree of the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York dismissing the bill of the complainants was recently affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. Chief Justice Fuller, giving the opinion, held that the mere fact that the law was unconstitutional did not entitle the parties to relief by injunction against proceedings in compliance with it. The sole ground of equity jurisdiction put forward in the bill of complaint was the inadequacy of the remedy at law, in that the injuries threatened were not susceptible of complete compensation in damages. The Court held that the bill was defective, in that it did not allege facts showing ground for equitable relief. Nobdy, the Chief Justice said, had a vested right to import tea of low quality.

NE EXEAT IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS. —Abraham and Nathan Lipke, composing the firm of A. Lipke & Brother, against whom bankruptcy proceedings had been instituted by Messrs. Overstein & Kohner, for creditors, when arrested and brought before Judge Addison Brown, in the United States District Court, three weeks ago, on an order in the nature of a writ of ne exeat, were held in $1,500 bail that they should not depart from the jurisdiction of the court and would obey its lawful orders and decrees. No examination being asked for, bail was immediately given. Then a motion was made by Messrs. Goldfogle, Cohn & Lind on behalf of the bankrupts to vacate the writ, on the ground that it was void because it did not state on its face that the defendants were brought before the court for examination. Judge Brown has decided that, as no examination was asked for, the right to it had been waived, and he denied the motion, holding that the facts stated in the sworn petition upon which the writ was granted warranted the belief that the defendants were about to abscond, and thereby greatly embarrass the administration of the bankruptcy proceedings. Without the occasional exercise of this power, the Court says, a bankrupt could easily defy and largely nullify all adverse proceedings against him, by absconding with his assets.

WOMEN ON BIG REFORMS

Inquiring Spirit Moves West End Republican Association.

CHARGES A TAMMANY TRICK

May Ask Raines to Define Saloon and Hotel, and Legislature to Curb Surface Lines.

Trolley and cable cars, the sudden stops and starts thereof, the elevated structure in Battery Park, the difference between a "Raines law hotel" and a saloon, and the general desirability of reforming the west side, were some of the matters which received attention at yesterday's meeting of the West End Woman's Republican Association, held in the rooms of the West End Republican Club, Broadway near Eighty-second Street. On the subject of surface cars, it seemed agreed that something should be done to allow women time to board them, and several women imputed sinister motives to Tammany Hall in its fight against the Battery Park structure. As to the desirability of continuing personal efforts toward west side reform, there was some uncertainty, deepened by inquiries as to the essential points of difference between hotels and cafés.

The club had before yesterday's meeting discussed the question of excise violations, and taken action thereon. Last December Mrs. Charles O'Connor Irwin of 120 West Eighty-fourth Street, a member of the association, had a disagreeable experience associated with an open saloon while on her way to church. Other members of the association united with her in sending a letter of complaint to the Police Commissioners. The Commissioners replied through the commanders of the West Sixty-eighth Street and West One Hundredth Street Police Stations that the localities complained of were at all times orderly. On Wednesday, to their utter surprise, Mrs. Irwin and Mrs. B. F. Ostrom were subpoenaed by Magistrate Mott to give evidence in a case against Owen McCann, whose saloon had been complained of. This the women of course were unable to do. It was said yesterday that the members of the association did not care to act as detectives, but they wanted the police to do their duty. It was alleged by several members that the subpoena serving was a Tammany trick to discourage Republican women.

The matter came up yesterday, when the association went into Committee of the Whole. Mrs. Cornelia S. Robinson, the President, thought that the Police Board was able to provide its own detectives.

"All we want to know," she said, "is where they are."

Mrs. Clarence Burns announced that she had a letter giving a list of places run in violation of the law, which, after investigation, she would send to the public.

"I think we have gone as far as we want to in this matter," said Mrs. Irwin, who had been subpoenaed.

"Personally I draw the line at appearing in court. We were told yesterday afternoon that it was a mistake our being called, as we could know nothing of the case. It is strange that two women should be called from a club to give evidence against one whom we have never seen. We should make our reports more carefully in the future, I think."

Mrs. S. Solomons did not think that the saloon need concern the association.

"The liquor saloon," said she, "concerns full-grown men. I don't see why we should interfere with the province of the police. We—"

By this time the discussion had become general.

"How can you tell a Raines law hotel?" asked one woman.

Three answers came simultaneously.

"A dining room separate from the bar."

"The tables must be all up."

"A café is not a hotel."

"We ought to have a copy of the law," suggested one.

"Oh, write to Mr. Raines; he'll send it to you," was the general reply.

"I'd really like to know all about it," a member said in a short lull that followed, "because I've seen people going into a saloon on Sunday, and I couldn't tell whether it was a Raines law hotel or not."

The others laughed. It was finally agreed to leave the matter to a committee.

The association agreed to send for a copy "of some bill or other now pending in the Legislature," and to prepare an amendment requiring trolley and cable cars to come to a full stop in taking on or letting off passengers.

Mrs. L. B. Niver read a review in verse of current events whose concluding stanza was:

You see, I have the Roberts case,
The Taylor-Goebel feud,
Mr. Bryan on his ostrich,
With his doctrine that's no good.
As to Philippine expansion,
McKinley was my choice.
His policy is also mine,
With heart and soul and voice.

The meeting then adjourned.

MOLINEUX TRIAL POSTPONED.

Juror Brown Still Ill, and the Recorder Says His Fellow-Jurymen Need a Rest.

Court convened yesterday morning for the resumption of the trial of the Molineux case, but as reported would be the case, Manheim Brown, the tenth juror, was unable to be present, and Recorder Goff postponed the trial until Monday morning next at 10:30 o'clock. After the jury had been polled the Recorder made the following announcement:

"I have received a letter this morning from Mr. Brown's physician, also an oral message, in which Dr. Tyneberg states that Mr. Brown cannot appear to-day with safety to his health. The physician says that the illness is not serious. It is merely what is commonly called 'an attack of the grip' with a rheumatic affection. I do not think, under these circumstances, that the interests of this defendant will suffer in the least if Mr. Brown has two days more in which to recuperate. I am of the opinion you gentlemen all need a rest until that time."

Mr. Osborne was asked if he had succeeded in finding any new evidence for the prosecution, and replied that he had not been looking for any.

"I would not call another witness, other than those I have already summoned, the two experts and Dr. Weston, if you were to furnish me a dozen. What is the use of it? Haven't I called enough to prove my case?"

Mr. Weeks would not discuss any of the features of his defense, except to intimate that it would not be so long as the prosecution.

Dr. Tyneberg said last night that his patient, Juror Brown, was improving, and he thought he would be able to report at court for duty Monday morning.

Eleven Jurors Not Enough.

The trial of John Reedy, the Pocantico Hills Postmaster, and George Morris of this city, on the charge of using the United States mails in trying the "green goods" game was unexpectedly adjourned yesterday morning on account of an accident to George F. Doak of 500 West One Hundred and Fifty-third Street, one of the jurymen. Doak fell on Wednesday and broke three of his ribs. Assistant United States Attorney Baldwin proposed to go on with eleven jurors. Abraham Levy, attorney for Morris, opposed this, and Judge Thomas of the Criminal Branch of the United States Circuit Court, who is presiding at the trial, held that such a proceeding would be of doubtful constitutionality.

TEACHER CALLS POLICEMAN.

Has Two of His Pupils Arrested for Fighting Out of School.

Homer C. Bristol, Principal of Public School No. 10, at Seventh Avenue and Windsor Place, Brooklyn, caused the arrest yesterday of two of his pupils, Frank Wicks, thirteen years old, and John Harvey, fourteen years old, for fighting during the noon recess.

When the boys returned to school in the afternoon the Principal, who had seen them fighting, sent for a policeman and had them taken to a police station. The Sergeant refused to hold the boys, and they were taken, together with the complaining Principal, to the Butler Street Court, where Magistrate Bristow paroled them until Saturday. The action of Principal Bristol is said to have caused much indignation among the parents of children attending his school. He defended his course as a necessary example to aid in suppressing the frequent schoolboy fights.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Yale students are no more averse to turning an honest dollar when they can than the majority of mankind. They are the fiercest sort of speculators, as attendants at the football and baseball games played at New Haven have learned to their cost. Some of the alumni of that institution who were at the junior promenade on Tuesday—the social event of the year in college life—are telling a story of how a couple of the student speculators met with a financial Waterloo during the week. Violets are Yale's flower, and every lady wears them to the exclusion of all others during "promenade week." The price is generally $2 a hundred, and has been at that rate ever since junior "proms" were instituted. The two students referred to decided to make a bit of money by underselling the local florists, and bought 50,000 of the blossoms from New York dealers which they decided to sell at $1.75 per hundred to their fellow-students. The scheme started off all right and worked until the local florists began to notice a falling off in the demand for the Yale flower. Then they began an investigation, found what the scheme was, and cut their rates first to $1.50, and then, when the speculative students met that rate, to $1 a hundred, and at that price flooded the market to the sorrow of the student speculators, whose college mates refused to pay more than the market price even to help them out of a hole. As the wholesale price for the blossoms here is $1.25 per hundred, it was a losing transaction all round, but the florists won out and taught the student speculators a lesson that they think will be effective for some years to come. Midwinter violets have rarely sold so cheaply, and the New Haven girls were the winners, as their bouquets were larger and handsomer than were ever before seen at a Yale function.

Stamp collectors have a novelty which reached here by the last mail in the shape of Cape Colony samps issued in that portion of the colony that has been annexed to the South African Republic, for a time at least. These are the regular issue of British stamps, across the face of which have been stamped the letters "S. A. R." and the value of the stamp in Boer coinage. Dealers have not yet been able to secure these specimens, in any number at least, and there is a fancy value attached to the bits of printed paper that makes their actual worth to collectors an unknown quantity until some one ascertains how many of them have been issued.

"If Conolly had as many fingers as he had originally I think he would be much more satisfactory in Dan Daly's part," said the woman at the Casino who was watching the performance of "The Belle of New York." "Do you know, it positively makes me nervous, and while he is on the stage the sight of that missing finger overshadows everything else, in spite of the fact that that remark is the worst kind of an Irish bull. Every time he moves his right hand the one thing that strikes me is that missing first finger, and I really can think of nothing but it, no matter what else may be said or done."

"Thursday is my apple day," said the buyer for one of the large up-town markets while on a visit to the fruit quarter down town yesterday. "I always stock up heavily then for the Saturday trade, which demands the best of apples. New York people are a funny lot to cater to, and a man who does not know the habits of the masses would have a hard time buying for his trade. I have a lot of customers who never buy apples except on Saturday, and then they want the very best. It seems that New York men have a fondness for crunching apples on Sunday, and the housewife of the great middle classes lays in a supply for his use on that day. During the rest of the week eating apples are a drug on the market, and the only apples for which there is then a demand are pie apples. Incidentally, too, it may be stated that the New Yorker is the greatest pie eater in the world, much as he may laugh at the New Englander for his pie habit. Pie stuffs are always saleable, and the market man who does not keep a good supply of them will find his trade leaving him."

Mrs. Grace Van Studdiford, the prima donna of Jefferson de Angelis's comic opera company, and Papinta, the dancer of the continuous performance houses, are both owners of racing stables. The former goes in for the thoroughbred horse, and her name figures in the list of recent nominators to the stakes of Western racing associations. Papinta has a breeding farm in California, where she raises trotters and races them in the California circuit. All of which is suggested by the fact that the most famous racing woman since the death of the Duchess of Montrose, Lily Langtry, is acting here now, and has declared that she is out of racing for good. Her racing name was "Mr. Jersey." Papinta races as "Mr. Holpin," which is her husband's name.

Half hose of deep Yale blue, with white polka dots of small size, are the latest imported novelty for men's wear, and were shown at one of the fashionable haberdashers yesterday. What with these and the shirts of bright pink that have been declared to be the correct thing for Spring wear, the up-to-date man will be a very gorgeous thing when the Winter has gone and he adds to these the bright-colored scarfs that he will wear about his neck if he would be thoroughly in the fashion.

It would seem as if the Japanese scheme for house decoration had reached the limit and that a reaction was about to take place among fashionable people. At all events, there has been an outbreak of Japanese auction sales in all parts of the city. More than a score of these have been running between Central Park and the Battery during the week, at which all sorts of trinkets, presumably of Japanese make, have been disposed of in a way that would seem to indicate that the owners of the stock were anxious to get rid of it. These auction sales are good barometers, generally indicating that a prevailing fad has reached the limit, has become common, and is therefore dropped by the exclusive ones.

"I see that we are now called upon to buy tickets for a benefit to Edward E. Rice, the theatrical speculator, whose balloon has burst again, as it has done a dozen times before in his career," remarked a gentleman whose face is always familiar at the first nights at the principal theatres. "Of course it is all very nice for theatrical managers to get together and try to pull Rice out of the financial waters that engulf him every year or so. It's a sort of brotherly love for which you and I have to pay, and for which a lot of actors have to contribute their services. But it strikes me that the proper thing under the circumstances would be for the managers to give the benefit for the men and women of Rice's company who did not receive their salaries and who cannot find a theatrical speculator at any street corner ready to back them in some new scheme. They are the actual sufferers from Rice's 'enterprises,' and they are the ones it strikes me who are in need of a benefit. Rice is always able to find a backer, and seems to come up smiling after every successive failure."

"Do you know," asked the man who was fussing about one of the automobiles at the Madison Square Garden show, "that the first automobile that was successfully run as a public conveyance is now stowed away in a barn at Locust Valley, over on Long Island? It is a crude affair, and was built in 1866, I believe, by Richard Dudgeon, whose son still owns the rough and unsightly conveyance. It was propelled by steam, and looked something like the pictures of the old locomotives that were built when the steam railroad was in an experimental stage. The wheels are of cedar with steel tires, and are very solid affairs. There are four of them, the heaviest pair in front, where the greatest weight is, as the machinery is located there. The rear wheels are the drivers, connected with the machinery in front. The boiler, covered with a cocoa matting, formed the floor of the wagon, and the water tanks were stretched along the sides, seats being placed over them that would accommodate ten people. The seat for the driver of the machine is at the extreme rear end of the carriage, and from it he operated the steering gear with a lever, much as a sailor manages a boat. Mechanically the thing was all right, but it was clumsy, and the tread of the tire was not sufficiently wide to allow it to run over the ordinary dirt country road, though I believe it would run smoothly on an asphalt pavement if the experiment could be tried. It was not the first steam wagon that Mr. Dudgeon made, for he had one involving the same principles that was shown at the New York Crystal Palace in the days before the war, and that was burned in the fire that destroyed that show building. The one now in existence had a lot of actual use, and served the purposes for which it was built when the weather was fair and the roads dry enough for it to run over. Some experts who have looked over the old machine declare that the principle is one that is simple, and that there is no reason why it could not now be applied, as the first cost of such a direct-connected steam wagon would be smaller than for any other model. But I suppose our modern methods are so much better as a whole that steam will never again be a popular motive power in these days when electricity is so much more readily made available."

Sentenced for Naturalization Fraud.

Judge Thomas, in the Criminal Branch of the United States Circuit Court, yesterday sentenced Louis Hurvitz to imprisonment in Sing Sing for one year and three days for attempting to register at a polling booth in Chrystie Street last October on fraudulent naturalization papers, obtained in the United States Court in Brooklyn. The jury which found Hurwitz guilty recommended him to the mercy of the Court. The convicted man has a wife and three children.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE

THE FURNISHER'S VOBABULARY.

Speaking of Emerson's exquisite choice of words, Dr. Holmes said:

"If you have seen a cat picking her footsteps in wet weather, you have seen the picture of Emerson's exquisite intelligence, feeling for its phrase or epithet—and at last seizing the best—the only one which would serve his turn of thought."

In furniture we try to be an Emerson—feeling for and seizing the best, the only expression which will suit different tastes.

The decorative ideals of Gothic mediaeval carvers, of Italian, Dutch and Sheraton inlayers; of French lacquer-workers and painters; of Flemish and Oriental weavers—all these, together with a host of our own ideas for present comfort and beauty, fill our floors, and on many pieces factory prices are reduced.

You cannot help felicitous choosing, if you

BLIZZARD UP THE STATE.

GENEVA, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The worst blizzard of the Winter prevails here. A high northwest wind has drifted the snow badly and traffic is impeded greatly. The streets are nearly deserted. Telephone and telegraph companies are suffering as a result of the high winds. The mercury dropped forty degrees last night.

LYONS, N. Y., Jan. 26.—A blizzard from the northwest struck here to-day, sending the thermometer from 45 to 5 degrees above zero. There was a forty-mile wind to-day. The snow is drifting badly, and trains on all roads have been badly delayed.

TO RAISE TICKET AGENTS' PAY.

Railroad Men Want to Make Up for Coming Loss of Commissions.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Plans to partially reimburse the ticket agents of the country for the losses they will sustain by the sweeping abolition of commissions Feb. 1, are being discussed by the general passenger agents of the roads operating west from Chicago.

A proposition is before the general passenger agents of these roads to call a meeting here to consider salaries to be paid agents who will be affected. Many of these have been receiving as high as $500 per month in commissions, while their salaries have been as low as $35 per month. The changes will not bring the salaries up to the commission point, but it is expected that reasonable advances will be made.

In this connection a new plan has been broached. It has been suggested that the railroads agree on a common scale that will give equal salaries to all agents having similar duties. Chicago tickets agents of the big Western roads will be dealt with first.

FRANCIS HENDRICKS WILL SUCCEED PAYN

Gov. Roosevelt Names the New Insurance Superintendent.

THE NOMINEE HAS ACCEPTED

Was Strongly Urged by Senator Platt and Other Leaders.

Payn's Friends Threaten to Fight the Machine—Platt Said to be Secretly Working to Nominate Gov. Roosevelt for Vice President.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 26.—Francis Hendricks of Syracuse, long prominent in the offices of the Republican Party in this State, will succeed Louis F. Payn as State Superintendent of Insurance. Official announcement of this was made to-night by Gov. Roosevelt, who will send Mr. Hendricks's name to the Senate next Monday night. The prediction is made that Mr. Hendricks's nomination will be confirmed by the Senate before the adjournment next Friday. A caucus of the Republican Senators will be held early in the week, and it is believed that Mr. Hendricks will receive 26 of the 27 votes. The only Republican who may vote against the nomination is Senator Ambler of Chatham, who represents Mr. Payn's home district, and it is said to-night that even Mr. Ambler may fall into line, as there is no possibility of defeating the nomination.

In making the announcement that he had selected Mr. Hendricks, the Governor said: "Senator Hendricks was my first choice for the position, but on two occasions he said he could not possibly accept the appointment on account of his private business matters. I appreciate his acceptance very much. On Wednesday he telephoned me that he would accept.

"I wish to express my obligation to Judge Charles T. Saxton, ex-Senator Cuthbert W. Pound, and former Mayor Green of Binghamton, each of whom I considered for the office and to each of whom I wrote concerning a possible appointment. Each of them told me that he earnestly hoped I would get some one else to accept the office.

"Judge Saxton desired to remain on the Court of Claims bench. Prof. Pound did not see how he could relinquish his chair at Cornell University. Ex-Mayor Green has business interests which would interfere with an acceptance. But each said that he would accept if I found it necessary to name him. Judge Saxton wrote to me several days ago urging me to prevail upon Senator Hendricks to accept. I have known Senator Hendricks for a long period. We were in the Legislature together. He is an old friend of many years."

It is understood here that Mr. Hendricks consented to accept the place only after being strongly urged by Senator Platt and other organization leaders, as well as Gov. Roosevelt. He has been identified with the machine, and when Senator Platt saw that the Governor was determined to replace Mr. Payn, even if he had to engage in a factional warfare, it is said that the State leader's first choice was Mr. Hendricks.

Much speculation is being indulged in here as to what effect the refusal of Senator Platt to stand by Mr. Payn, who for forty years has been his personal friend and political ally, will have on the State organization and also on the next campaign. Mr. Payn's friends say that they will oppose the renomination of the Governor, and that ex-Gov. Black will use his influence to bring about such a result. Some of the more radical Payn men threaten that a fight will also be made against Senator Platt with a view of driving him from his place as leader of the organization forces in the State. They say that they will have no difficulty in securing the support of all the anti-machine element in the Republican Party, and predict that the Senator's reign as dictator of the organization is nearing its end.

Should they fail to defeat Gov. Roosevelt for renomination these radicals hint at employing treachery at the polls next Fall. Even conservative Republicans admit that they fear the Payn controversy will work to the serious disadvantage of the party in the State. They argue that, while the friends of ex-Gov. Black and Mr. Payn might not be able to prevent the renomination of Gov. Roosevelt or force Senator Platt from his leadership, they could do great harm to the Republican State ticket next Fall.

The story that Senator Platt is secretly working to have Gov. Roosevelt nominated at Philadelphia next June for Vice President finds many believers. The gossips have it that the machine leaders hope to have some delegate from a State well up on the roll call, such as Alabama, Arkansas, or California, present the name of Gov. Roosevelt to the National Convention, dwelling on his career as a soldier and trusting to stampede the convention for New York's Chief Executive. Those who hold this view say that the Governor would not be able to decline a unanimous nomination.

There has been much talk to the effect that Senator Platt wants to remove Gov. Roosevelt from State politics and nominate a man for Governor such as Benjamin B. Odell, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, whose loyalty to the organization has never been questioned.

Mr. Payn Refuses to Talk.

Mr. Payn was in consultation with friends at the Grand Union Hotel last night. In reply to a request for his views on the Governor's announcement of the choice of Mr. Hendricks, he replied:

"Really, I have nothing to say for publication. I don't know just what I shall do."

Friends of Mr. Payn, however, say that he realizes that he is beaten and feels more hurt than angry. While several prominent men want him to fight to the last ditch regardless of consequences, it is said by others in his confidence that he does not care to sacrifice lifelong friends by making an issue of his case. These men regard it as probable that he will retire without any further struggle.

FRANCIS HENDRICKS'S CAREER.

Francis Hendricks was born in Kingston, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1834, and after receiving a common school education took a course at the Albany Academy. He moved to Rochester, where he lived for eleven years preceding the civil war, and then went to Syracuse, where he has since made his home, and where almost from the first he has figured prominently in the political and business life of the city. He established a photographic supply house with a capital of only a few hundred dollars, but it grew under his management, until it became one of the largest concerns of its kind in the State outside of the metropolis.

He was appointed a Fire Commissioner of Syracuse in 1877, and was for two years President of the board, and during the time that he held this office the paid department was organized and brought to a high degree of efficiency. On account of his public services he was elected Mayor in 1880 and was re-elected the following year. He served his first term as a member of Assembly in 1884, and was re-elected for the next term.

While in the Assembly Mr. Hendricks was Chairman of the Committee on State Charitable Institutions and a member of the Committees on Cities and Indian Affairs. He was also Chairman of the select Committee to Investigate the State and Adirondack Surveys, and was chosen by the Reform Associations of New York and Brooklyn as their special representative to oversee legislation affecting the sister cities.

Mr. Hendricks was elected State Senator in 1885, and figured prominently in the election of two United States Senators, one of them his fellow-townsman, Frank Hiscock, and the other William M. Evarts. He served three consecutive terms in the Senate from 1886 to 1891. Mr. Hendricks was also Chairman of the Committee on Cities, and was Chairman of a committee which made a special investigation into the Tammany methods of conducting the municipal affairs of this city, although in that work he was overshadowed by J. Sloat Fassett. The committee's work was not so fruitful of results as the Lexow committee, for which it paved the way in a measure. Mr. Hendricks took an active part in the legislation which drove the New York Aqueduct Commissioners out of office.

He was appointed Collector of the Port of New York Sept. 17, 1891, to succeed Mr. Fassett, who had just accepted the nomination for Governor, and held that position until he resigned, March 6, 1893, giving as his reason a pressure of private business. His administration of the affairs of the Custom House was considered highly successful.

Mr. Hendrick's many battles with the Belden faction in Syracuse have been a feature of the political history of Central New York. Leaders of the organization urged the appointment of Mr. Hendricks to succeed George W. Aldridge as State Superintendent of Public Works, and it was considered almost certain that he would secure the place, but Gov. Roosevelt upon coming into office refused to appoint him.

MONTANA MAY LOSE SOME LANDS

Northern Pacific Railway Likely to Get Seventeen Townships.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 26.—The State Board of Land Commissioners received word to-day that Binger Hermann, Commissioner of the General Land Office, had refused to grant a motion for review applied for by Attorney General Nolan in a proceeding involving seventeen townships of valuable timber lands in Missoula County.

Unless the Secretary of the Interior should reverse the Commissioner's ruling, by the decision the Northern Pacific Railway Company will secure timber lands having a present value of at least $500,000, which the State itself had expected to obtain from the Federal Government under the grant to the State at the time of admission.

MUST USE INK IN CHECKS.

Secretary Gage Bars Typewriters and Rubber Stamps.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Secretary Gage has issued an order to United States District Attorneys forbidding them to use typewriters and rubber stamps for the purpose of filling in dates, payees' names, and amounts of checks issued in payment of public debts.

The order says that the use of the typewriter and rubber stamp for these purposes is not only unsatisfactory, but dangerous. Words and figures written on the typewriter can easily be erased, and this makes it easy to substitute other words and figures. The impression made by the rubber stamp is often so dim as to be almost illegible.

"Paid checks," says the order, "form important vouchers, which remain permanently on file and are often referred to years after their payment."

MANY UNDERPAID LETTERS SENT

Department's Collections Increase Over $27,000 in One Quarter.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The remarkable increase of $27,584 (26.78 per cent.) in the value of postage due stamps issued by the department during the quarter ended Dec. 31, over the corresponding quarter of 1898, taken in connection with Postmasters' reports of short paid matter received, indicates to Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden a very gratifying and commendable vigilance in detecting and properly collecting due postage.

One office alone, that at San Francisco, reports the receipt of over 20,000 short paid letters and the collection of $659 due postage between Sept. 26 and Jan. 15. It appears that a large proportion of short paid letters are dispatched without due postage being rated thereon, and postal officials are urged to exercise the utmost diligence in guarding against such violations of law hereafter.

TRAINOR TO AID SHEPARD.

Assemblyman Is Ready to Testify in Soldiers' Home Inquiry.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 26—Assemblyman Patrick F. Trainor of New York, who was a member of the legislative committee which visited the Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Bath two years ago, will probably appear as a witness during the investigation into the charges preferred against Commandant Shepard.

Col. Shepard has been charged with having ordered wine to be served in the chapel to members of the committee. Mr. Trainor denied to-day that Col. Shepard delivered such an order. He said:

"If I am wanted I shall be glad to aid in the investigation. Col. Shepard did not direct that any wine be brought in the chapel, and he was not present when it was taken there. The committee had been in the chapel for some time, and about the time we were ready to go down to supper Col. Shepard told one of the physicians to treat us to some liquid refreshment. The Colonel did not tell him to bring it into the chapel, and the physician evidently misunderstood the commandant. When Col. Shepard returned later and found the wine there, he remarked that it 'was too bad.'" There was no dancing in the chapel as has been charged, and no one was intoxicated.

PRICE OF BIBLES INCREASES.

Cheaper Editions to Cost More Because of Advance in Paper, &c.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Dealers in religious literature say there is nothing surprising in the report from the East that the manufacturers of Bibles contemplate making an advance in teachers' Bibles. The advance in paper and bindery material has compelled the increase, but it is only the chapter editions that will be affected.

"Bibles have been advancing in cost for some time, but not over 5 per cent.," said Alexander McConnell of the Fleming H. Revell Company. "With the advance in material came the increase, but I do not expect to see much further advance."

"I do not anticipate an advance in teachers' bibles," said T. A. Mack, Secretary of the Chicago Bible Society, a branch of the American Bible Society. "A representative of the Oxford Bible Company called on me several days ago, but said the advance would be on the cheaper editions, and that it would be only a few cents."

Row in the Astor Military Company.

FISHKILL LANDING, Jan. 26.—Trouble is brewing in the John Jacob Astor Military Company at Rhinebeck. It grows out of a desire on the part of an element of the organization to elect a new Commander in place of Capt. McCurdy. As a result, some of the unruly members have threatened a disturbance, but thus far nothing has come of it.

Is the Mystery of the Maine Cleared up? The New York Herald to-morrow (Sunday) will contain the amazing confession of a Spaniard, who asserts that he helped Spanish officials in the deliberate and premeditated destruction of the American war ship and the murder of our sailors and marines. He backs up his unheard of statement by affidavits, diagrams, &c. The New York Herald has submitted it to the highest naval authorities in Washington and to officials of the United States Secret Service. What the Spaniard says and what the officials say will all be printed in the New York Herald to-morrow. —Adv.

STRANGE PENSION ROMANCE.

Years After Husband's Death the Widow Finds He Had Been a Criminal and Abandoned His Real Wife.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—A strange romance lies behind a commonplace looking private pension bill introduced by Senator Joseph V. Quarles of Wisconsin. The heroine, or rather victim of it, is Nellie A. West of Stevens Point, in that State, who has learned in her old age, years after her husband's death, of the deception practiced upon her by him in her girlhood, nearly forty years ago.

During the civil war she met a young soldier serving in Company B, First Wisconsin Cavalry. His name was West. They fell in love, and while he was at the front they corresponded and agreed to marry when the war was over. He served faithfully and was honorably discharged after Lee's surrender. When he returned they were married. Whispers concerning her husband's early life came to her ears, and he finally confessed to her that before the war he had fallen into evil courses, and had been convicted of counterfeiting, serving a term in the State Penitentiary at Waupun. But he was anxious to redeem himself. He turned over a new leaf, fought gallantly, and earned a good reputation.

The news was a blow to his wife, but there was no doubt of his reformation. They lived together happily for many years, and had eight children. He was wounded in the war and was a pensioner. After his death she applied for a pension. The Government authorities looked up his record, and the result of the widow's application was the discovery that she was not West's legal wife. Before the war he had married a girl in New York State, but he had deserted her, and had gone West shortly before his arrest for counterfeiting.

To West's legal wife, also, the news brought by the pension bureau detectives came as a revelation. She had known of her husband's trial and sentence, and of his subsequent release and enlistment in the army. One day during the war she received word from his army comrades that he had been killed in battle. There is no doubt that West, who had in the meantime met and become engaged to the Wisconsin girl, had himself arranged to send to his real wife this false information. West's first wife fell into the trap. In the course of time she married another man, and they have lived together happy and respected, in the New York town from that time to this.

Under the circumstances, the second Mrs. West could not receive a pension in the regular way. A special bill for her benefit was therefore drawn and presented by Senator Quarles.

AUCTION OF WILD ANIMALS.

An Elephant Brought $2,450, While a Camel Sold for $125.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHTABULA, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The big circus and menagerie auction of the Walter Main Shows is nearing a close. All the wild animals have now been sold to the highest bidders. Bostock Brothers of Boston bought more of the animals than any other showmen present. For a Bengal tiger they paid $410, for two leopards $650, two ostriches $200, one elephant $2,450, and another $1,800, a hyena $75, two kangaroos $200, and a female lion $500.

The llama was purchased by Welsh Brothers of Lancaster, Penn., for $350, a zebra for $475, a hyena for $150, an emu for $90. Lewis Sells, representing the Sells Brothers and Forepaugh shows purchased a camel for $125. A native buffalo, scarce as they are, was purchased by E. D. Colvin of Chicago for $275. A water buffalo purchased by William Sells of Chicago brought $100.

CHICAGO TO ISSUE SCRIP.

$300,000 Will Be Put Out to Pay Employes and Creditors.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—For the first time since 1887 employes and creditors of Cook County are to be paid in scrip. Warrants in anticipation of the tax levy will be issued by County Controller Monagan next week.

The first batch of warrants will aggregate $300,000, covering salaries and supply bills for December and January.

The paper is redeemable when the current tax levy is collected, but "loan sharks" are preparing for a rich harvest from employes receiving small salaries, who, on this account, are unable to hold the scrip until it can be redeemed at its face value. The brokers discount the paper at from 5 to 10 per cent.

DR. ABBOTT ON GENESIS.

Says that It Is an Edited Book Based on Legend and Myth.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott's lecture in the Lowell Institute course on "The Old Testament" was this evening devoted to the book of Genesis. It was the second lecture in the course, and, as on the first night, Dr. Abbott explained that his point of view in discussing the Old Testament was that of modern literary or scientific criticism.

"The Book of Genesis was supposed to have been written about 1,450 years before Christ," said the lecturer, "but it deals with a period twenty or twenty-five centuries before the time of Moses. Supposing, then, that Moses wrote the Book of Genesis, how did he obtain the fact found in the book? My own opinion," continued Dr. Abbott, "is that it was written by some unknown prophet as a sort of introduction to the Bible."

He called attention to the two separate and distinct acts of the deluge, and said that to him Genesis seemed like an edited book rather than a written book. It was known to be in existence long before the time of Noah. "What were the resources if not legend and myth?" he asked.

THE FORT RINGGOLD RIOT.

Gov. Sayers Notified that Civil Court Has No Jurisdiction.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 26.—Gov. Sayers to-day received a letter from Secretary of War Elihu Root regarding the recent trouble between the negro soldiers at Fort Ringgold and the citizens of Rio Grande City. Judge Advocate General Lieber has held that the soldiers are not liable to answer in a State court for the offense.

Secretary of War Root's letter is in part as follows: "I beg to assure you that I appreciate the temperate and kindly tone of your letter of Dec. 22, and I am glad to find, upon a careful examination of the papers, that the facts so far as now ascertained obviate any occasion for conflict between the authorities of the State of Texas and the military authorities upon the reservation at Fort Ringgold, for it appears by Gen. McKibbin's dispatch that the occurrences to which he refers as a cause for the arrests, which he does not propose to permit, are occurrences which took place on the reservation. Such occurrences the learned Attorney General of your State, in the opinion which you were good enough to transmit to me, dated Dec. 14, 1899, declares to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States and not within the jurisdiction of the State of Texas.

"It appears, so far as any papers which have come to my notice are concerned, that no one off the military reservation was wounded or struck by any shot fired during the occurrences in question, so that no act done on the reservation took effect off the reservation, and there is, therefore, no occasion for applying the rule laid down in the numerous and unquestioned cases which hold that an offense is deemed to be committed where the act takes effect. I beg to assure you that there is no disposition on the part of the military authorities of the United States to interfere in any way with the process of the State of Texas."

W. BOURKE COCKRAN TO SUPPORT BRYAN

Imperialism, He Declares, Is the Real Campaign Issue.

FREE SILVER SHELVED NOW

Democratic Party's Only Obstacle to Success the Danger of Reaffirming That Financial Plank.

W. Bourke Cockran has come out in favor of W. J. Bryan as the Democratic nominee for President. Mr. Cockran still repudiates free silver, but proposes to support Mr. Bryan on the ground of his anti-imperialistic policy solely.

In a report sent out from Lincoln, Neb., it was said Mr. Cockran had associated himself with J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture under President Cleveland, in an effort to elect delegates to the Democratic National Convention who would be unalterably opposed to Mr. Bryan. It was this report which caused Mr. Cockran to give out the following statement, contradicting the report and defining his position in the coming campaign:

"There is no truth in the statement, so far as I am concerned. I am not engaged in any movements, plots, or enterprises to aid any Democratic faction or thwart any Democratic politicians. I am neither a 'Gold Democrat,' nor a 'Silver Democrat,' a 'Bryan' or an 'Anti-Bryan Democrat.' I am simply a Democrat, without adjective, qualification, or hyphen.

"In 1896 I believed that fidelity to Democratic principles imposed opposition to the Democratic Party. Therefore, I supported the Republican candidate. My opposition, however, was confined to the platform. To the candidate there was no objection, and there could have been none. Before his nomination I had served four years with him in Congress, and the high opinion which I formed then of his personal qualities I am glad to say is now held by the whole American people. But Mr. Bryan's personal virtues, far from diminishing my objection to the platform on which he stood, in 1896, intensify it. Vicious principles are never dangerous when supported by a vicious or commonplace man. It is only when they enlist the advocacy of enthusiastic but misguided virtue that they become really formidable. From all this you will perceive that the reason which led me to regard Mr. Bryan as a most dangerous candidate while he represented what I believed to be a vicious platform would lead me to support him warmly if he stood on a sound platform.

"I am very much mistaken in Mr. Bryan if he would be capable of suppressing, renouncing or disguising his views on any question for any reward, even the Presidency of the United States. But the issues of the campaign do not depend upon Mr. Bryan or any other leader. They are fixed by the preoccupation of the electors. Campaigns are always waged on the question which happens to be of chief interest to the people at the time. In this respect the convention has no other function than to formulate the opinion reached by the rank and file of the party as the result of individual reflection and of local discussions. The people seldom, if ever, pass upon more than one issue at a time, for the obvious reason that men who agree upon any one question are likely to differ upon another, and, therefore, the paramount question becomes the decisive issue.

IMPERIALISM THE ISSUE.

"The issue in the next election will be imperialism or silver; it cannot be both. No matter what platform the convention may adopt, if its candidates were elected the currency of this country could not be reduced to a silver basis for at least four years. The silver question, therefore, will not play a decisive part in the campaign. A question which cannot be decided by the election cannot become one of its issues. The American people have never waged a Presidential contest upon an abstraction. The maintenance of an imperialistic policy or its abandonment is the one question which can be decided—and decided forever—by the popular verdict next November. There is little doubt that it will be rejected, if all who condemn it are allowed to unite in opposing it. The only chance of its success lies in the danger that anti-imperialists may be divided by the injection of a financial discussion into the campaign. For my part, however, I believe this issue will be presented without any distracting question to complicate it. It is inconceivable that under our political system the people should be denied the right to pass directly upon a question involving the very structure and essence of our Government. While a desire for Mr. Bryan's renomination appears to be unanimous in his party, the sentiment is still stronger that the people of this country should have an opportunity to vote squarely upon this policy, which threatens to effect a divorce between our flag and our Constitution by unfurling the one over countries where the other cannot exist, and which has already deprived us of that unquestioned primacy among civilized nations which we had achieved during the first glorious century of our existence.

"To unite the Democratic Party it is not necessary that it should repudiate any of its former expressions; that it should renounce, suppress, or even disguise any of its beliefs. The Democratic Party would be invincible if, recognizing the fact that the silver question has been postponed by the people for at least four years, reaffirming, if necessary, the faith of the majority in the declarations of 1896, and their determination to press them whenever an occasion again arises for obtaining a popular verdict upon them, realizing that this election involves not any one policy, but the very existence of Democratic government, the convention should invite all citizens who abhor the attempt to clothe this Republic in the tawdry rags of imperialism to co-operate in maintaining the territorial integrity of the United States, leaving all questions affecting the financial integrity of the United States to be settled hereafter.

REAFFIRMS INDEPENDENCE.

"I would reaffirm the Declaration of Independence, and go to the people on that alone. On such a platform the campaign of 1900 would resemble the campaign of 1800 in its issues, its temper, and its results. Who can doubt that Jefferson's immortal work would obtain in 1900 an indorsement as emphatic and as salutary as its author received in 1800?

"I have no doubt Mr. Bryan will advocate the readoption of the Chicago platform in its entirety, and I am equally confident that he would decline to be a candidate or to remain in the convention if the Chicago platform was repudiated directly in words or indirectly by silence. But I cannot and do not believe that he would refuse to accept the judgment of the convention as to whether this is the proper time and occasion for submitting the doctrines embodied in that platform to the judgment of the people.

"If Mr. Bryan were elected upon a platform declaring that the financial status quo should be preserved for the next four years, I have no doubt that he would loyally abide by it. He would of course be free to seek re-election in 1904 as an advocate of free silver, and if he were renominated on such a platform I would oppose him again as earnestly as I did in 1896. In the meantime, he would have an entire right to surround himself with officials who shared his views and who could, therefore, be trusted to aid his renomination. This would exclude me and those who share my views from all prospect of holding office under his Administration, but whoever assumes an attitude of independence to his party from a sense of duty must be prepared to pay the price of his independence.

"I do not believe that Mr. Bryan's position on trusts is very different from mine, although his expressions on this subject are somewhat vague. I have no doubt that what he really condemns is an industrial organization which obtains control of the market through Government favor. An industry dominating the market by furnishing goods or service cheaper and better than any other I am sure he would not disturb. There is but one way in which such a predominance could be checked, and that is by reducing the excellence on which it rests. Mr. Bryan, I am sure, does not mean to denounce skill and industry or their natural fruits. In his opposition to trusts built upon the favor of Government or of railroads, or other public or quasi-public agencies, Mr. Bryan is no more resolute than any other Democrat.

"Opposition to trusts, in my judgment, really means opposition to special privileges. This discussion of trusts, while not always sensible, has already borne valuable fruit. It has shown that the tariff, if not exactly the mother of trusts, is to a large extent their nurse, and whatever tends to demonstrate the folly and vice of taxing some people for the benefit of others is calculated to promote Democratic principles and to secure good government, which is the same thing.

ATTACKS PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

"Every election depends largely upon the policy of the party in power. This discussion of trusts is one manifestation of this tendency. It shows that, notwithstanding the disturbing questions of foreign policy that have arisen during the last four years, the country has grown uneasy over the domestic policy of the present Administration. The men who have directed Republican councils in the past have either disappeared from the public service or they have been excluded from prominence in the Republican Administration. The policies which, however unsound, under their leadership were always dignified by a brilliant support, have sunk now into schemes of absurd paternalism, at once senseless and extravagant. The leading measure of this Administration is the Subsidy bill, the passage of which has been urged by the President on the ground that the business of shipping is highly profitable, so profitable, in fact, that the Government should undertake to pay the losses of those engaged in it. With a statesmanship too profound for me to comprehend he appears to believe that after a certain period accumulated losses will be metamorphosed into profits. What sensible man can contemplate the initiation of such a policy without apprehension as to its results? If it be advisable to guarantee profit to a new industry, it must be still more advisable to protect from loss an established industry. Surely, the laborer, the merchant, the farmer, or the lawyer has as much right to be guaranteed a profitable occupation as any person engaged in transportation. If this system of bounties be once established, I know of but one way in which we may hope to escape from it, and that is by insisting that everybody be pensioned—each individual thus forced to contribute to his fellows in the shape of taxation the equivalent of which he draws from them in the form of subsidy.

"No party ever entered a Presidential canvass with an easier road to success than that now open to the Democracy. The only cloud on its prospects is the danger that it will tie itself to a question, dead as a practical issue, but still sufficient to hamper its movements, distract its councils, and paralyze its efficiency."

COL. W. J. BRYAN IN DELAWARE.

He Makes Speeches at Wilmington and at Smyrna.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 26.—Col. W. J. Bryan spent to-day in Delaware making speeches here and at Smyrna. Mayor Fahey of Wilmington presided at the meeting in the Opera House here to-night. The place was crowded to the doors. Among those in the audience were ex-United States Senator Higgins, a Republican, and Patrick Neary, a well-known gold Democrat of Wilmington.

Mr. Bryan, in opening his address, said he felt flattered at the large turning out of the citizens. He said that he felt sure that the people were not so much interested in him as they were in the matter which he was about to discuss. He said the people throughout the country were just as much alive to the issues of the day as those in front of him were.

He immediately plunged into the subject of his speech, and severely arraigned the Republican Party for "its many failings," and accused the party of grand larceny by law for the many things that it has not done to better the condition of the workingmen of the land. He reiterated his oft-made charge that the Republican Party put the dollar above the man. He also discussed the financial question, expansion, and the income tax.

On the way to Smyrna Mr. Bryan met Abner McKinley, brother of President McKinley, who was on his way to Norfolk. The two exchanged pleasantries for five minutes, to the great amusement of the others in the car.

After luncheon Mr. Bryan was driven to the Opera House, where he delivered a lengthy speech.

FELT BROTHER WAS DEAD.

One Chicago Twin Knew the Other Had Died in Manila Days Before Cable Message Came.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—The news of the death of Fred Roe Pratt, a lawyer of this city, at Manila a few days ago, was received yesterday. His twin brother, Frank Fay Pratt, maintains that an instinctive knowledge of his death flashed quicker than the cable's message to his mind through some strange telepathic sympathy the brothers had known to exist between them for years. He says he knew the minute the occult chain had been severed. He informed his parents of the fact three days ago, and the fateful message reached him yesterday.

The life of one of the boys is practically the life of the other. Until they were twenty-three years of age they never had been away from each other for a single night. Frank went to Europe several years ago, and his first act upon his return was to go to a long-distance telephone to inform his brother of his safe arrival. It was not surprising to him, although it might have been to others, to find, after connections had been made, that Fred was on the other end of the line, trying to reach his brother by the same means and at the same time.

The young men were frequently referred to as the two Dromios of Chicago. The effect of the resemblance was heightened by the fact that they always dressed alike, even to the color and design of their neckwear. As youngsters, there were many complications resulting from the inability of all, even their parents, to tell which was which.

Fred Pratt was traveling in the Orient on a combined business and pleasure trip, and had gone to Manila to see something of the war. The cause of his death is not known.

STANDARD OIL BUYS STOCK?

It Is Said the Rockefeller Interests Own Chicago Railway Shares.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—The Times-Herald to-morrow will say:

"On the authority of men connected with the Chicago Union Traction Company, it is stated that large blocks of the stock of that corporation have recently been purchased by the Rockefeller interests. As confirmation of the announcement, shares of the Union Traction Company in thousand-share lots have recently been transferred to New York names. These shares were purchased in the local stock market, were paid for in cash, and shipped East to their new owners."

WARREN'S RETREAT DEPRESSES LONDON

News that He Has Abandoned Spion Kop Causes a Shock.

CHECKS BULLER'S MOVEMENTS

Seven Days' Fighting Leaves the Boer Position Intact.

Impression Grows in Great Britain tha Ladysmith Will Surrender Before Relief Can Arrive.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The chief interest in the news from the front in the last twenty-four hours attaches to Gen. Buller's dispatch, dated at Spearman's Camp, Jan. 25, noon, in which he says:

"Gen. Warren's garrison, I am sorry to say, I find this morning, had in the night abandoned Spion Kop."

Gen. Buller also reports that the British casualties, Jan. 24, were:

Wounded—Officers, 12; non-commissioned officers and men, 142.

Missing—31 men.

The killed include Col. Buchanan-Riddell of the King's Royal Rifles. He served in the Niger war of 1881.

It is not clear whether the casualties include those at Spion Kop, or only those resulting from the fighting prior to the Spion Kop engagement.

To sum it all up seven days of fighting have left the main Boer positions intact and Gen. Buller's army 706 men weaker, according to the official casualty lists, which may not include the Spion Kop losses, as those last forwarded do not mention Gen. Woodgate's wounding.

England is possess

what disquieting spirit displayed in Gen. Buller's comments as revealed in The Gazette's dispatches. For instance, his comment as to the action at Zoutpans Drift. His remark concerning the probability that British officers would in time learn the value of scouting, might properly have come from a foreign military attaché, but it is gather more than surprising that it should be thrown out in this casual, irresponsible fashion by the head of the forces concerning his subordinates, a week or two moreover after the loss of the guns on the Tugela.

"The consequences of this latest check may be very serious to the gallant Ladysmith garrison. It is impossible to estimate the next movement It may be that Gen. Buller will be compelled to retire from the ground he lately won; but, in any event, we may be sure that the British people will not show themselves wanting in fortitude and steadiness. The Government would be well advised to call out immediately all the militia and to expedite the dispatch of the Eighth Division and of the Fourth Cavalry Brigade. No doubt Lord Roberts will strain every nerve to enable Gen. Buller to renew the attempt to relieve Ladysmith."

The military critic of The Times, discussing various possible explanations, dwells strongly upon "the terrible drawback to British Generals involved in the absence of maps of this tangled hill country."

The Standard, which thinks still more troops will be required, and which comments upon the "astonishing manner in which South Africa swallows up troops wholesale without any appreciable result," goes on to refer to the Continental jubilation and to the predictions regarding Gen. Buller's check. It says:

"It is humiliating to find that the Natal tarrain has been more accurately studied in Berlin than at our own headquarters on the Tugela."

The afternoon newspapers only briefly comment on the situation, preferring to await fuller particulars. The St. James's Gazette says:

"We are only at the beginning."

Still, The Westminster Gazette suggests that the abandonment of Spion Kop need not mean more than that a miscalculation was made regarding the value of the Kop.

The Pall Mall Gazette expects that "the advance will again continue, as it began, with a series of rushes. A kopje taken here, half a mile gain there, and that we shall have, in short, to fight our way to the rescue by hardly won degrees. Ladysmith, nevertheless, will be saved."

The Globe says it is assured that the country will face the situation "calmly and bravely, with the firm determination to press forward unflinchingly in spite of all obstacles."

GERMANS CALL IT A DEFEAT.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The latest news from South Africa is interpreted as a signal defeat for the British. The Deutsche Tageszeitung calls the British position there "another step into the mouse trap."

The last direct German mails to the Transvaal are now being returned from Cape Town without any explanation on the part of he British authorities. The German press comments upon the fact with considerable heat.

An incident illustrating the bitterness of popular feeling in Germany against England is the appearance of a pamphlet today entitled "The Final Reckoning with England." This pretends to describe events in 1931, and sets forth descriptions of naval battles in which Germany defeats England, and a general break-up of the British Empire ensues, with Australia declaring her independence and the other British colonies being divided up amid various powers.

PARIS PLEASED WITH THE NEWS.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Most of the French papers hail with keen satisfaction the announcement that the British have abandoned Spion Kop. The ambiguous wording of the first dispatch had led them to declare that the British War Office was keeping back something; and they now insist that this dispatch must have contained the fact that Sir Charles Warren had abandoned the position, and that this was suppressed by the War Office.

All comment upon this "extraordinary step" and express the opinion that it is sufficient to "drive any nation to despair."

The Matin even goes so far as to make this insinuation:

"The British Government willingly gave the nation false joy when it knew it had the truth. Was it from motives of policy or from other motives? To what must we attribute such sharp practices? Signor Crispi acted thus at the time of the Abyssinian war. We believe Lord Salisbury to be a stranger to such proceedings, which are only explicable if the direction of affairs is in the uncontrolled hands of Mr. Chamberlain."

LESS SICKNESS AT LADYSMITH.

LADYSMITH, Jan. 21, (by Runner, via Free Camp, Jan. 24.)—The garrison is watching Gen. Buller's guns shelling the Boers. Their fire can be seen at this distance, and appears to be very effective. The movements of the Boers show that they are evidently determined to stubbornly oppose the advance of the relief column. They show no signs of removing their guns, and have mounted new ones, and are continually strengthening their fortifications. Our fortifications have been greatly strengthened since Jan. 6, and Ladysmith is now practically impregnable.

Owing to the dry weather the fever has diminished, and the number of convalescents returning from Intombi Camp exceeds that of the patients being sent there. The supplies are spinning out splendidly, all the troops having sufficient wholesome food.

LONDON Jan. 27.—A dispatch to The Standard from Ladysmith, dated Dec. 26, and describing the Christmas celebrations, says:

"Only a few were fortunate enough to get turkeys or geese. A majority had to be content with the hard beef of wasted, underfed oxen or the coarse goatflesh which does duty for mutton.

"On Saturday there was a provision auction. Potatoes brought at the rate of a shilling each, eggs averaged 10 pence each, carrots 7 pence each, ducks half a guinea each, cigarettes 42 pence per threepenny package, and whisky from £5 to £7 a bottle. Everybody, however, was able to indulge in Christmas pudding, as the commissariat kindly issued the necessary ingredients for the occasion.

BOERS TO RESIST TO THE LAST.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Times publishes the following dispatch from Frere Camp, dated Wednesday morning, and evidently written before the capture of Spion Kop was known.

After describing the position of the Boers, actively intrenching and bringing fresh guns forward, the correspondent says:

"Their front extends ten miles, and we shall have to try to break it in the middle. Every prisoner says the Boers will never let us reach Ladysmith. This is their last chance of preventing us, for, behind this hill, lies open country, without a single fortifiable position. Therefore, they will strain every nerve to throw us back here."

SAY BOER LOSSES WERE HEAVY.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Special dispatches from Durban say the Boer losses on the Upper Tugela during the fighting Sunday last were very great

They add that Gen. Warren's men captured 100 prisoners, and that 130 Boers were found dead in one trench.

DURBAN, Wednesday, Jan. 24.—One hundred and sixty Boers captured during Gen. Buller's recent operations, have arrived here. A Free Stater, who is among the recent arrivals, says that President Steyn has been removing his furniture to Pretoria, where several of his officials have taken houses.

It is also reported that no big guns are now left in the Pretoria forts, and that the Boers have exhausted their stock of good Mauser cartridges, and are now issuing cartridges formerly condemned by Gen. Joubert. They are said to be manufacturing 12,000 cartridges and 200 shells daily at the dynamite factory.

METHUEN PRAISES THE BOERS.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The position of the British armies in Cape Colony is virtually unchanged. Lord Methuen forwards by mail the first official recognition of Boer valor and military art. He calls their tactics and their courage "indisputable." In defending frontal attacks, Lord Methuen says:

"The mobility of the Boers is such that they can change front in fifteen minutes, so that a flanking operation, when striking home, simply meets a new front."

The Daily Mail, referring to Boer resistance, and what may be necessary to overcome it, alludes to a saying of Napoleon that no position could resist 300,000 men.

CHEER THE PRINCE OF WALES.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—At the Life Guards' barracks, Regents Park, this morning, the Prince of Wales inspected the first lot of yeomanry who start for South Africa tomorrow. A number of well-known people were present, including Lady Essex, Lord Rothschild, and Lord and Lady Lonsdale. The Prince of Wales, who wore the undress uniform of a Staff General, walked along the entire line with Lord Chesham, making the most minute inspection of every man, often taking a rifle in his hands and examining all parts of the equipment. The men looked very businesslike in khaki and putties, with cowboy hats, turned up at the side, with a little bronze emblem representing the Prince of Wales's feathers. At the conclusion of the inspection the Prince of Wales made a speech, during which he said.

"I am proud of the privilege of inspecting you here to-day before you start for active service. I also feel it is a very high compliment that I have been asked to be your Honorary Colonel. You may be sure I shall take the deepest interest in your welfare and watch all your proceedings. Throughout you will, like all the men who have volunteered for active service, do your duty to your sovereign and your country. I am sure that, although you leave your homes and your country, you all feel that a great duty devolves upon you to maintain the honor of the British flag, and that you will assist the regular forces of her Majesty and do credit to your corps. I wish you now godspeed and a safe return."

Lord Chesham called for cheers for the Prince, which were enthusiastically given, the men hoisting their hats on their rifles. The officers were then presented to the Prince individually. Several of them were among his personal friends, notably Philip Percival of the Royal Yacht Squadron, who goes out as a Captain. Among the troopers is the husband of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the actress.

REPORTS OF BRITISH GENERALS.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The Gazette to-day publishes a number of dispatches from Gen. Buller to the War Office, inclosing reports from Gens. White, Hildyard, Methuen, and other Generals regarding their various operations, but containing nothing later than the record of occurrences to the middle of December.

A dispatch from Gen. White, dated Nov. 2, says:

"I was so greatly impressed with the exposed position of the garrison of Glencoe that I determined, Oct. 11, to withdraw from there and concentrate all the troops at Ladysmith. But the Governor represented that this step would involve such grave political results that I determined to accept the military risk of holding Dundee, as the lesser of two evils."

Gen. White then proceeds to describe the subsequent attack by 4,000 Boers, of whom about 500 were killed or wounded, three of their guns being left dismounted at Talana Hill, but, he adds, there was no opportunity of bringing them off. He also describes how the Boers were seen streaming away in bodies of from fifty to one hundred, on which the British artillery could have inflicted great loss. But the Boers displayed a white flag and the British refrained from firing.

After describing the desperate fighting at Elandslaagte, culminating in the bitter, protracted fighting before the capture of the Boer final position, the General continues:

"At length the guns reached us and the captured end of the ridge was gained, from which the whole of the enemy's camp, full of tents and horsemen, was fully exposed to view at a fixed range. While the flag was shown in the centre of the camp, Col. Hamilton ordered 'Cease fire!' and some of the British moved in the direction of the camp. For a few moments there was a complete lull. Then a shot was heard, followed by a deadly fire from a near-by kopje. The British momentarily fell back, but charged and recaptured the position."

Gen. Methuen reports similar white flag incidents.

Gen. Buller, commenting on the action at Zoutpans Drift, Dec. 13, says:

"I suppose the British officers will learn the value of scouting in time; but, in spite of all none can say, our men seem to blunder into the middle of the enemy."

Describing the battle of Colenso, Gen. Buller, under date of Dec. 17, says:

"When I heard of the disaster to Long's artillery I believed the six naval guns had shared the same fate, and I decided immediately that it was impossible to force the passage without guns. Long was dangerously wounded and I was unable to obtain explanations. I had personally instructed him where to go into action, and with the naval guns only, but Long advanced so fast that he left the infantry escort and Naval Brigade behind. I believe that but for the failure of the artillery we would have carried the crossing."

Gen. Buller recommended the Victoria Cross for Capts. Congreve and Reid, Lieut. Roberts, and Corp. Nurse, all in connection with the attempts to save the guns.

Gen. Methuen in a dispatch dated Dec. 1, with reference to the battle of Modder River, confesses that he believed the force in his front was only fighting a retiring action. He had no idea that 8,000 Boers had been brought from Spytfontein to oppose his advance.

Commenting upon the difficulty of conveying orders, Gen. Methuen says, "The truth is that no one can be on horseback with any safety within 2,000 yards of the enemy," and he admits that he himself, most of the day, was in positions where he had no right to be, because, unless he went to the front, he could not see how the fight was progressing.

Gen. Methuen draws special attention to the services of Col. Paget of the Scots Guards in this action, in leading his men in the face of a punishing fire, during which his horse was killed after being hit five times.

BLAME IS LAID ON OFFICERS.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The following account of the Modder River fight was received today from one of the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders.

"We have had some hot fighting with Methuen, but we get through all right until the 11th, when we got a licking. We, of the Highland Brigade, had to march during the night to surprise the Boers. No one knew what we were going to do or where we were going. The rain came down in torrents, and we were soaked through, and that on empty stomachs. We were led right into the Boer trenches by guides, and before we could deploy from column half of us were shot down. We all ran for our lives, and reformed 500 yards back, when the Gordons joined us, and we again tried the trenches. But it was no good. All day we lay out in the sun without food or drink, and in the afternoon the Boer shells began bursting among us; so we made the best of our way to the rear. The men were sick and dispirited, there was no fight left in them, and they would not stop for the officers or for anyone else. Gen. Wauchope was killed—hit in seven places. He was the right sort. They say it wasn't his mistake at all, and he did not want the night attack. Anyway, it was a ghastly failure.

"The camp at Modder River was full of Boer spies—Colonials and others—so our every movement was watched, and information carried to the enemy. Why these people are allowed to mess about the camp I cannot understand. Some of these disloyal Colonials have been caught red-handed fighting against the Queen. Why don't they shoot them right off, instead of sending them down for trial—they don't deserve it.

"Most of the regiments here are full of young boys for officers, and the men don't care about them. I saw some of them at Modder River fight like a lot of schoolboys, shouting out orders that none of us could understand, so the old hands took no notice of them and went their own way as best they could. Most of the regiments are the same; the guards are the best off for officers. None of us can make out why so many young officers are sent out to take charge of old soldiers. Why can't we have more of our old officers? My late Captain, who left us at Aldershot, came to see us off, and we asked why he wasn't coming with us. He replied that the War Office would not let him rejoin. He was a good man. We should not have lost half the men we had if we had had older officers.

"We were a good brigade if we had not been messed up, and if only Wauchope had been left to handle us himself. This is a terrible war, and God only knows how it will end."

TOO EARLY FOR INTERVENTION.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The Echo de Paris this morning publishes a report of an interview with Dr. Leyds, in which the Transvaal representative denies that Charles E. Macrum, former United States Consul at Pretoria, has been intrusted with any mission to President McKinley, and says:

"It is not time for intervention. We must await events."

The morning papers comment upon the absence of the British Ambassador, Sir Edmund J. Monson, from President Loubet's banquet last Thursday evening, at which Dr. Leyds was present. The Echo de Paris says:

"His absence was the cause of much remark. Moreover, the receptions at the British Embassy have been suspended for some weeks past. Marquis de Galliffet, who was formerly a constant visitor, has not been seen at the embassy during the last fortnight.

"We may add that the recall of Sir Edmund Monson, which was so much discussed before the Transvaal war, is only delayed. He will be replaced after the exposition."

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Standard this morning alludes to the significance of Dr. Leyds's doings in Paris, remarking:

"Dr. Leyds was a guest at President Loubet's banquet on Thursday, where, in consequence, the British Ambassador did not appear. M. Delcassé conversed some time with him, and it is believed that he has since received him at the Quai d'Orsay. Our Paris correspondent, however, assures us that the French Government is determined to preserve neutrality."

WAR TALK LEADS TO BLOWS.

Two Englishmen and a Boer Sympathizer in a Lively Mix-Up.

Great Britain won a battle on Thursday night over the Boers. The scene was not South Africa, but the Susquehanna Railroad Station at Homestead, in Hudson County, N. J. The Boer sympathizer, Louis M. Stein of Hoboken, was outnumbered three to one, and received the worst of the argument.

Mr. Stein was waiting for a train at Homestead about 6 o'clock, when three Englishmen employed in Givernaud's mills, and who knew Mr. Stein's feelings, stopped to gloat over the capture of Spion Kop by the British forces so as to be overheard by Mr. Stein.

Mr. Stein stood the taunts of the tormentors as long as his temper would allow him, but it finally got the better of him, and he asserted that he could whip any ten Englishmen. In less than a minute there was a lively mix-up.

One of Mr. Stein's enemies was of slender build, and did not engage in the encounter, beyond encouraging his comrades on. The other two Britons were stout and stocky, but neither of them was as large as Mr. Stein. They were handy with their fists, however, and when Mr. Stein gave them an opening they planted blow after blow upon him. He was knocked down once, but regained his feet. The arrival of the train stopped further hostilities.

Mr. Stein says he gave the men enough to let them realize they had been in a fight. When he heard yesterday that Warren had been driven back from Spion Kop he forgot his injuries and danced a jig.

Speakers at Pro-Boer Meeting.

The final arrangements for the big pro-Boer mass meeting to be held at the Grand Central Palace Monday were made last night at a meeting of the New York Committee to Aid the South African Republics. The speakers who will appear at the meeting are Senator Wellington of Maryland, Congressman Charles F. Cochran of Missouri, Congressman William Astor Chanler of New York, Congressman D. A. De Armond of Missouri, Augustus Van Wyck, and Robert B. Roosevelt.

MRS. RICH FOUND GUILTY.

Sentenced to Fourteen Years' Imprisonment in Mexico for Killing Her Husband.

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 26.—Mrs. John D. Rich, the Chicago woman surrendered to Mexico to be tried for the murder of her husband in Juarez last May, was adjudged guilty to-day by the Mexican court and sentenced to serve fourteen years in prison. The finding of the court was read to the woman in her cell, she being unable to attend court owing to a broken leg. Only her attorneys and the court officials were present.

When she heard the sentence Mrs. Rich screamed like a maniac, and it required the combined strength of two guards to prevent her from assaulting the officials. She was finally quieted, however, and then asked the pardon of those present for her conduct.

Mrs. Rich's lawyers will appeal to the higher court at Chihuahua, and in the event the finding of the lower court is affirmed, Gov. Ahumada will be asked for a pardon. Money is required to prosecute the appeal, and a subscription list has been opened here by United States Marshal Hillebrand.

A search of Mrs. Rich's cell last night revealed the fact that a quantity of nitric acid and other poisons had been concealed there. Mrs. Rich had decided that she would commit suicide if convicted, and it is supposed that she procured the poison for the purpose. She will be imprisoned at Chihuahua.

WANTS PART OF $5,000,000.

Ruthven W. Stuart's Suit Against William Whitewright's Estate.

Ruthven W. Stuart, who is now eighteen years old, has brought an action in the Supreme Court to secure a share of the property left by his relative William Whitewright, who died a year ago, leaving an estate worth over $5,000,000.

Mrs. Jeannette R. Stuart Ruthven's mother, yesterday obtained from Justice Fitzgerald, in the Supreme Court, an order appointing J. T. Hurd guardian for her son, for the purpose of bringing the action. The plaintiff claims that his mother made an agreement in 1888 with Whitewright by which he consented to provide for Ruthven in his will as liberally as he would for his other grandnephews and grandnieces.

POLICEMEN CAUGHT NAPPING.

Thieves Rob a Saloon in Plain View of Adams Street Station.

While a dozen or more policemen were peacefully sleeping in the Adams Street Station, Brooklyn, early yesterday morning, a Sergeant dozing at the desk down stairs, and other policemen chatting pleasantly on the adjacent corners, two burglars robbed a saloon under their very noses and got safely away with the cash.

The saloon was that of John Ryan, at 323 Washington Street, which is immediately in the rear of the station house on Adams Street. The rear part of the saloon is plainly visible from the back windows of the police station, yet the thieves forced one of the rear windows, entered the place, robbed the cash registers of $40, and got away without being discovered. They overlooked $300 in cash in a drawer behind the bar.

AMERICANS SHOT IN MEXICO.

It Is Reported Gen. Torres Ordered Execution of Six Prospectors.

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 26.—The mail tonight from Guayamas, Sonora, Mexico, brings the news that a report is current there that six Americans, David Cusick, John Eldridge, George Lunt, Charles Burns, Lon Webster, and Henry Williams, were shot during last week near the foot of the Bacatete Mountains, east of Guayamas, by order of Gen. Torres, who is in command of the Mexican troops now operating against the Yaqui Indians in the Bacatete range.

It is further reported that the matter was brought to the attention of the American Consul at Guayamas, but that the latter declined to act.

It is said the Mexican troops found the Americans in friendly intercourse with the Yaquis, whom the troops have surrounded in the range. Some of the names are known here as those of prospectors. Americans at Guayamas warn all Americans to keep away from the Yaqui country.

Col. Waring's Widow Wants Damages.

Mrs. Loise Waring, widow of Col. Waring, has filed papers in a suit for damages in the United States Circuit Court against the F. C. Austin Manufacturing Company, an Illinois corporation doing business in this city, and George B. Marx, a resident of this city, for infringement, as she claims, of her patent rights as inventor of improved receptacles for street sweepings. Mrs. Waring says that the Austin Company, without her license or allowance, is making and selling the receptacles which she invented. The amount of damages asked is not stated.

SONS OF DARTMOUTH DINE

Ex-Speaker Reed the College Association's Guest.

President Tucker on the Amos Tuck School of Administration—Competition of Alumnae.

Songs led by Musical Director Herbert R. Thurston and college yells given with full strength enlivened the thirty-sixth annual dinner of the Dartmouth College Association of New York, held at Delmonico's last evening. Ex-Justice William N. Cohen, President of the association, presided. On his right was the Rev. Dr. William J. Tucker, President of Dartmouth College, and on his left ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed. Others at the guests' table were Prof. Justin H. Smith, William B. Hornblower, Hamilton W. Mabie, Dr. John S. Warren, and Judge Warren W. Foster.

A feature of the evening was a yell given by members of the class of '99 for the class of '45, which was represented by Edwin T. Rice.

Toastmaster Cohen in his introductory remarks recalled that the association was the first of its kind established in this city. He said he wished to stimulate the activity of his hearers toward the association because there were new and dangerous rivals in the field.

"There used to be competition enough," he continued, "when we had to contend with the alumni of other colleges, but now there are alumnae, and our sisters of Polyoke and Barnard and Wellesley and Vassar are pushing us so hard that unless we are energetic, the women will have also encroached upon this new field. Information reaches me (quite confidential, however,) that one difficulty—almost insurmountable—confronts our sisters. That lies in the necessity of revealing their age. We have only to ascertain the class with which they graduated, then, by a simple mathematical calculation, we have the deadly fact. Can any woman, however intellectual, face these startling figures, and thus proclaim to the world, almost to a year, the date of her birth?

"We hope that they will have moral courage enough to confront the situation, and also that they will be successful. Their success would not be at all lamentable if they would let us join with them, but up to the present they have not shown that catholicity of spirit which would result in a new and added joy to their meetings and in the more orderly conduct of their proceedings."

Mr. Cohen then called upon President Tucker to respond to the toast of "The Relation of the Alumni to the College."

Dr. Tucker observed that there were three forces which are keeping the American college at the front in the quickening life of the generation—the growing enthusiasm of college men, the capacity of the colleges themselves for enlargement to meet new demands, and the increasing recognition and confidence of the public, especially as evinced in material support. The power to utilize these forces was the test of a college.

He referred to the establishment of the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance through the gift of $300,000 to the college by Edward Tuck of Paris, a member of the association, as a memorial to his father, Amos Tuck. This school, President Tucker explained, is not offered as a substitute for a college education, but has been established in the endeavor to make a college education available to those who possess it in the conduct of affairs.

He further announced that it was proposed to observe the centennial of the graduation of Daniel Webster at some time during 1901, and that in this connection a strong effort would be made to raise a fund of $1,000,000, including the amount of $300,000 given by Mr. Tuck, for the purposes of instruction in the different departments, and $400,000 for buildings and equipment.

Ex-Speaker Reed was called upon by Toastmaster Cohen in the following words:

"At gatherings of this kind it has almost become a formula to say that a person about to be introduced needs no introduction. If that statement were ever true, it is surely applicable to the giant among our living statesmen—he of childlike face, so strongly reminiscent of Raphael's cherub looking out in baby wonder upon a strange and unknown world! From the look of intelligence in your eyes I see that you know him without further characterization, and I call upon the gentleman on my left to tell us how to preserve the undergraduate spirit."

Mr. Reed responded briefly and in a vein complimentary to Dartmouth College and laudatory of his own college, Bowdoin.

The other speakers and the toasts to which they responded were: Prof. Justin H. Smith, "The College Idea of To-day"; William B. Hornblower, "Why I Entered Princeton when Dartmouth Existed"; Hamilton W. Mabie, "What Makes the College"; Judge Warren W. Foster, "A Judicial Comparison Between the Indian of Moor's Charity School and the Tammany Indian." Dr. John S. Warren recounted reminiscences of Edward Tuck, to whom Luther W. Emerson also paid a tribute.

At a business meeting which preceded the dinner the following officers of the association for the ensuing year were chosen: President—William N. Cohen, '79, (re-elected;) Vice Presidents—Benjamin S. Harmon, '82; Hiram U. King, '73, (re-elected,) and Charles M. Hough, '79, (re-elected;) Secretary—Jordan J. Rollins, '92, (re-elected;) Corresponding Secretary—Albert A. Wheat, '89, (ree-lected.) Treasurer—John French, '86, (re-elected.)

CORNELL ALUMNI DINE.

President Schurman Says a Modern University Is Needed in the Philippines.

For the twentieth time in their history, the Cornell University alumni held their annual dinner last night, this time in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Nearly 300 graduates were present, and besides listening to several speeches, lived over again one phase of their college days in the songs of the University Glee Club, whose ditties, some old and others new, brought forth rousing applause, and seemed to please no one half so much as they did the old fellows who became young again in reminiscence.

One of the most pleasing events of the evening to the graduates as well as the few undergraduates present was the announcement by President Schurman of Cornell University of an anonymous gift of $80,000 to the university for a building for physiology and anatomy.

William R. Bronk, President of the Cornell University Club, presided. During the evening a letter from Ambassador White at Berlin was read regretting his inability to be present and extending congratulations. President Schurman, who was the first speaker, made an allusion to the Philippines, saying:

"We of Cornell believed with all our hearts and soul in the constitutive principles of the university. Of these the most essential is freedom—freedom expressing itself both in the curriculum of study and in the life of the students. Our aim was to give free play to the individual and to have as little government control as possible. I am inclined to think that this foundation principle of our university will be found to be of the greatest value in the solution of our Philippine problem.

"We can govern the Filipinos successfully by letting them, as far as possible, go their own way, by allowing the largest measure of home rule, and perhaps the greatest service we can render them is to educate them." He added that he often used to think that, from an educational point of view, the greatest desideratum for the archipelago was a modern university, where, as Ezra Cornell said, "Any person can find instruction in any study."

President Schurman, in speaking of Cornell University, took President Hadley of Yale to task for some remarks made by Yale's President in a recent address reflecting upon Cornell. Mr. Schurman said he had thought Cornell's conception of education and teaching had by this time been pretty well understood, but he found he was mistaken when he read the following from President Hadley in a Yale college paper:

"I believe it is possible to bring them [the professional schools] into closer connection with the life of the country, not by the so-called teaching of practical things, for, admirable as are some of the arrangements at Cornell, I have great doubt whether the best way to make a man a mechanical engineer is to teach him to hammer out a link of a chain with his own hands."

"If this means anything," he went on, "it means that in Cornell University, engineers are made by manual training, or that the larger part of the course, at least, consists of manual exercises. When President Hadley makes such a misstatement, I deem it my duty to state the actual facts. And the facts are that a student is not admitted to Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering or to the College of Civil Engineering without a preparatory training as complete as that required for admission to the academic department either of Cornell or of Yale, and that in his first year the engineering student takes higher mathematics than was ever prescribed for graduation at any of the New England colleges, and throughout the entire course he devotes the larger portion of his time to mathematics, physics, chemistry, and other sciences fundamental to the practice of engineering and only 15 per cent. of his whole time to shopwork or manual training. You may judge from this how much truth there is then in the statement that we make an engineer by teaching him 'to hammer out a link of a chain with his own hands.'

Following this speech a toast in silence was drunk to Ezra Cornell, and afterward came these: "Municipal Government," Controller Bird S. Coler; "Intercollegiate Relations," Dudley De Forest Van Vleet; "Good Citizenship," the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer; "Cornell in Greater New York," Dean of the Cornell Medical School in New York, Dr. W. M. Polk; "Cornellians," John De Witt Warner. Joseph C. Hendrix also spoke.

HILO SCARED BY PLAGUE.

HONOLULU, Jan. 17, via Victoria, B. C., Jan. 26.—The citizens of Hilo are worked into a frenzy by the plague news, and those on shore even tried to keep the Sheriff, Mr. Andrews, from returning after he made a visit to Minister Cooper on the steamer Kinau. Not only the organized movement to keep off communication with Honolulu manifested itself, but a mob armed with guns and stones made an ugly demonstration at the landing. Minister Cooper's show of authority was of not the slightest avail, and the people at Hilo did not mind being told that they were in rebellion against the Government.

"We don't care if it was the President of the United States," they shouted, "he could not land here."

Sheriff Andrews finally succeeded in getting ashore. He secured the aid of the United States survey ship Pathfinder, which vessel was in the harbor. He was finally landed, and then began another stormy meeting in Hilo.

A Red Cross society, formed by some of the most prominent ladies of Honolulu, has done most effective work, and the local physicians and clergymen have continually gone among the sick and dying, submitting to voluntary isolation to minister to the physical and spiritual needs of the stricken ones.

Honolulu is not a closed port. In spite of reports to the contrary from San Francisco, the Australian passengers will be quarantined in San Francisco, judging by advices received to-day via the Australia. The booking for San Francisco number 150, and W. G. Irwin & Co. are preparing to fit up the quarters of the vessel usually used by steerage passengers for cabin passengers. The quarantine at the other end will be fifteen days, though it is possible from this period the time occupied by the voyage will be deducted. San Francisco has apparently taken on a bit of a scare as a result of the latest advices, and the greatest precautions are now being taken against infection from Honolulu.

The Japanese steamer Yorohine Maru, with about 700 emigrants from Honolulu, arrived this morning from Yokohama. She was anchored outside the harbor, as there is no room on Quarantine Island for her passengers. The Japanese brought by the Deyo Maru are still on the vessel, Quarantine Island being about full, and it is likely to be a long time before the latest arrivals are taken off the steamer.

The arrival of the emigrants on the Yorohine Maru makes about 3,000 that have arrived this month. The Yorohine Maru is thought to have brought the last that are coming, and the importation of contract labor from Japan is probably about at an end.

THE PLAGUE IN NEW CALEDONIA.

Japanese, Tonkinese and Kanakas Are Victims—Eight Whites Recover.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 26.—From Noumea, New Caledonia, come the most alarming reports of the ravages of the plague, which has been prevalent there since early in December. There were six teen deaths during the first ten days following the development of the malady.

The origin of the plague, an account of which was brought by the steamer Miowera, is attributed to the filthy quarters where a number of Japanese, Tonkinese, and Kanakas were lodged. The scourge is believed to be local in origin, and all the Kanakas have been isolated on an island adjacent to the town. Up to Dec. 23 there had been no deaths among the whites, eight of whom had been infected, but nine Kanakas, two Japanese, and five Tonkinese had died of the disease, according to the latest advices.

The western end of the town, where the infection first developed, has been fenced off with a high galvanized iron fence 700 yards long. The principal business houses, official buildings, and the banking and shipping offices are guarded by posses of soldiers. Twenty buildings in the infected quarter of the town were demolished by the health authorities, but, despite all the precautions, the plague continued to spread. Much alarm is felt by the residents, and business is at a standstill.

The natives believe the plague is a visitation of Providence and that it is wrong to take measures to check the disease. Their ignorance and superstition make the labors of the officials doubly arduous.

AN UNDERTAKER ACCUSED.

Meagher Left Scarlet Fever Victim's Body Too Long Unburied.

William H. Meagher, an undertaker of 683 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, was charged in the Adams Street Police Court yesterday with violating the sanitary rules regarding funerals of persons who die of contagious diseases. On Tuesday last Michael J. Curley, thirty-two years old, of 606 Third Avenue, died of scarlet fever. Meagher took charge of the funeral.

The law requires the burial of contagious disease victims to be made within twenty-four hours after death. An Inspector of the Health Department, it is alleged, visited the Curley home on Wednesday night, and found that the body was still in the house and that a "wake" was in progress. It was promptly broken up.

The body of Curley was buried on Thursday morning. Dr. S. J. Byrne of the Health Department then secured a warrant for Meagher's arrest. The undertaker pleaded not guilty. His examination was set for next Thursday.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Fair; cold; diminishing northwesterly winds.

AMERICAN-ASIATIC DINNER

Wu Ting-fang, Chinese Minister, Guest of the Association.

OPPORTUNITIES CHINA OFFERS

Says Americans, However, Must Treat His Countrymen Fairly to Get Their Patronage.

The Chinese Minister, Wu Ting-fang, made a speech at the second annual dinner of the American Asiatic Association at Delmonico's last night which made a marked impression. The Minister, not only engaged in a little humor, but some raillery as well, and then he told the members of the association that if they expected to find an open door in China they must not expect to too closely exclude those whom they sought as customers from entering American markets to buy.

Covers were laid for about a hundred and a score more of the members and their guests in the Red Room. Over the guests' tables were draped the British and American colors and at the opposite end of the room were the colors of Japan and China.

At the guests' table with President Everett Frazar were ex-Minister to China Charles Denby, Wu Ting-fang, the Chinese Minister; Jutaro Komura, the Japanese Minister; Cornelius N. Bliss, John Barrett, ex-Minister to Siam; Brayton Ives, Senator Foster of Washington, Senator McLaurin of South Carolina, Richard Delafield, Dr. W. P. Wilson, and the Rev. Dr. McConnell. Among those at other tables were John Food, Secretary of the association; H. B. Montgomery, William E. Dodge, Pierre Mali, Horace J. Fairchild, S. M. Milliken, S. D. Brewster, Dexter N. Force, George C. Batcheller, F. B. Thurber, D. C. Ball, Herbert Appleton, Charles A. Schieren, A. O. Jennings, Francis E. Dodge, and Theodore Cooper.

Letters of regret were read from President McKinley, Secretaries Hay and Gage, Senators Beveridge and Aldrich, and President Morris K. Jesup of the Chamber of Commerce.

Minister Wu Ting-fang wore his brilliant Oriental costume of silk, embroidered with heavy gold braid and decorated with the Chinese characters, indicating his distinctions. He sat much of the time looking at Mr. Denby, as if very much interested in his every movement. The Minister from Japan wore full evening dress after the American model.

The toasts and speakers were as follows: "The President of the United States," Charles Denby; "The American Asiatic Association," Everett Frazar; "China, the Greatest Potential Market in the World," Wu Ting-fang; "Japan, the Pioneer of Asiatic Progress," Jutaro Komura; "The South and the Open Door in the Far East," Senator McLaurin; "The Pacific Slope and the Asiatic Trade," Senator Foster, and "The Paramount Interests of the United States in Asia," John Barrett.

MR. DENBY'S SPEECH.

Mr. Denby, speaking first, said: "Those of us who take an interest in the Far East and in its trade have peculiar reasons for being grateful to the present Administration for its efforts to secure fair and equal treatment for our trade and commerce in the Far East. It is understood that, owing to the efforts of the State Department under the direction of the President the great powers have all given their assurance that no discrimination will be made in China against the commerce and trade of the United States.

"We are a great nation, and it is not for us to stand aside, like a poor boy at a frolic, when international questions are on the tapis. We have just as much right to preserve and save our trade rights in China as England has, or Russia, or any other European power has to protect its own. We are the closest to China of all the great commercial nations except Japan. We have done more to open it to civilization than any country except England. Our trade is next to England's. Our population in China is next to England's.

"The Eldorado of commerce lies before us in the Far East. Hundreds of millions of people are awakening to the sense of new wants. The silent but persistent worker, the missionary, has been the pioneer of civilization as well as Christianity. Teach a Chinaman English and you make him a new man.

"All over that country the people are awake to-day. The whistle of the locomotive is heard in the land, and the syndicates of all nations are bidding against each other to open mines and to build railroads. China will be gridironed with railroads.

"Our own trade has recently been going by leaps and bounds. We sold to China twice as many pieces of goods in the past year as we sold in the year before, and the statistics of the current year will show still greater sales. Develop mines, send goods into the interior, and the Chinaman will buy.

"But if we are to compete with the world in trade we must use the methods that are commonly used by those who are our competitors. The Chinese are very critical, and are often attracted by the fine appearance of the packages containing the goods. Young Americans should be sent to China and made to study the language. A civil service system, so far as Consuls are concerned, should also be adopted for the Far East."

Mr. Denby concluded with an appeal for support for the policy now obtaining in the Philippines. "When the insurrection is over," said he, "we will discuss what to do with the Philippines."

Mr. Frazar the President of the association, followed in a brief address, in which he reviewed the work of the association and America's trade with and the commercial conditions as they now exist in the Far East, and then the Chinese Minister was called upon.

WU TING-FANG'S ADDRESS.

"Mr. President and gentlemen," he began. "I thank you for the manner in which you have referred to my country and the cordial manner in which you have received me, but I was puzzled at being put down as the third speaker. The mystery was why I was not first or second. But I am number three on the list.

"In reading the menu I think I have discovered the cause. The oysters come first, soup second, and third the side dishes. My toast is a side dish. It shows the ingenuity of the gentlemen who have framed this toast list, but it is not surprising, because you are all merchants. It is a merchant's trick.

"What I am going to say is a side dish. This association is, comparatively speaking, new. When we consider China it is a baby. I was fortunate to read its constitution, and I found its object was to foster and safeguard the commercial interests of the United States in China and the Far East. These gentlemen are very partiotic and honorable in what they have undertaken, but you must excuse me if I fear their object is selfish. I repeat it advisedly, and I am not surprised at it.

"We are all selfish. Show me the man who at some time is not selfish. Human nature is selfish. You can't repudiate that, Mr. President. I suppose if I stop here you will wish you had not invited me." The Minister smiled blandly, and was greeted with great applause and laughter.

"What!" he said, "you want me to go on? Gentlemen, be not impatient in condemning me. I was going to say there are men who are selfish regardless of the effect on others, but there are others who, in benefiting themselves, benefit others. I am here to protect the interests of my country and my people, but not to do anything to injure the interests of your country.

"My sole object is to draw closer and cement the bonds of friendship that bind us. We are on a common ground. I am here to give encouragement to your work. While I am here I feel as though I were in the East." Here he referred to the flags of China and Japan, which he said took him back to the Far East.

"My country," he continued, "is called the greatest potential market of the world. You all know that China is a great market with her 400,000,000 population, which has to be fed, clothed, and provided with all the necessaries of life. She wants the wheat of the Platte, the cotton of the Carolinas, the steel of Pennsylvania and Alabama.

"She is building railroads, and she must have rails and steel and electric power and hundreds of other things. Until she is able to develop her natural resources she must get these things abroad. There is a fine field for you. It is for you to realize it.

"With your Pacific a fine highway and the Philippines at our door, you have great opportunities. If you don't come up it is your fault. China wants these things. You must go to her. China is like the mountain, she doesn't go to Mahomet. You must go to the mountain. You must be on the alert. If you don't look out others will go and you will lose your opportunity. That will not be our fault.

SHOULD STUDY CHINA'S WANTS.

"I am not a commercial man, not an expert in these matters, but from contact with commercial men I have learned what is requisite. First you should study our wants. Find out what is suitable. Do not dump your surplus upon us without regard to our needs and irrespective of quality. If you did this you would rue the venture. You must supply according as you learn our needs from study.

"I would advocate an exhibition of your goods as I advocated before the Philadelphia International Commercial Congress. Such exhibitions should be established at the chief commercial ports. Chinese business people will not buy what they don't know. It would gratify me if the movement to ask the sanction of Congress to send a commission to the East to study the markets there should be carried out.

"You have done many things better than others have, and why should you be behind in these respects? In dealing with us study our manners, and be a little civil. Remember we in China are brought up in a different way. Our notions of etiquette are very different. Remember when you are in Shanghai or Peking you are not in Wall Street. There should be no browbeating, which, I am sorry to say, I have seen. A little civility goes a long way.

"Deal fairly and justly. I don't mean that you would cheat them, but don't be too sharp. I remember your President Lincoln said, 'You can fool some of the people all of the time, all of the people part of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.' That should be your motto when you go to China to deal with my people.

"You have a motto, 'Honesty is the best policy,' but a verbal promise should be as good as a bond. A verbal contract in China is as good as a bond. Here you will not enter into a contract until it is reduced to writing. Which is the better policy I leave you gentlemen to judge.

"If you want to have a share of China's trade, a good deal depends upon the kind of treatment you extend to my countrymen in this country, and especially in your new possessions. It is my duty as a friend to give you as much material support as I may, and I should be sorry to see my efforts offset by an unjust treatment of my countrymen in those places.

"I do not say my Government would take retaliatory measures, and I should be sorry and do my best to prevent. But remember there are 400,000,000 of people, and if you want their patronage you must be fair to them. You must give and take—not take everything and give nothing. It will not do for you to expect China to keep her door open all the time if you shut the doors on Chinese merchants who come to your gate. If you expect to have their custom you mustn't prevent their coming here to buy.

"I should not be surprised if some of my countrymen, in view of the exclusion, should boycott some American goods, but I hope this may not occur. I hope that your Congress may enact such laws as may be fair and just to my country. This society is composed of educated people, who should instruct the people here as to what we need and what is fair tratment."

The Japanese Minister, who followed, said: "I confess I did not receive notice early enough to prepare a speech for this meeting. The only merit I can claim is brevity.

"The pleasure of this occasion is enhanced owing to the position you have taken in entering the affairs of the Far East. Japan's most striking feature has been her transition from isolation to free and unrestricted intercourse. On July 17 last our treaties with all powers went into operation.

"Japan is now ready to welcome the cooperation of American enterprise. In Japan's advance none has been more sympathetic than the United States. The utterances of your President and press affords undoubted proof of your good will toward Japan. This has been so much impressed on the minds of Japanese that in the extension of your sphere of influence you have had no more sincere friends or well-wishers than the people of Japan."

COFFEY AND McLAUGHLIN.

Witness in Disloyalty Hearing Charges Senator with Making Sharp Attack on Brooklyn Leader.

The trial of Senator Michael J. Coffey on charges of political disloyalty before the special committee of the Kings County Democratic Executive Committee, was resumed last night. Boiler Inspector William O'Donnell, designated after the revolt in the Ninth Assembly District as Willoughby Street's representative in that district, testified to various conversations with Senator Coffey, in which the latter always expressed sentiments antagonistic to Hugh McLaughlin. On one occasion, Mr. O'Donnell alleged, Senator Coffey said:

"Do you suppose I am going to support the nominees of that poor, dopey, old fossil down in Willoughby Street? I guess not."

William A. Hervey, formerly a reporter, said that soon after the election he had a talk with Senator Coffey about the report that the Senator, with James Shevlin and Senator McCarren, was to form a combination in the county. Senator Coffey, he said, remarked:

"I will have nothing to do with Willoughby Street under any circumstances."

Mr. Kapper of Senator Coffey's counsel caused some surprise by admitting that Senator Coffey did make such a remark.

Mr. Kapper charged the committee with violating the Penal Code in issuing the form of subpoena used by it. This subpoena closes with the statement that a failure to attend will render the person subpoenaed liable to a fine of $50 for contempt. Mr. Kapper contended that the committee had no authority to issue such a subpoena.

The committee adjourned to meet again next Friday evening.

PLATT ON THE CAMPAIGN.

Says the Democrats Are Hopelessly Divided and Prospects for Republican Success Are Bright.

ALBANY, Jan. 26.—In a letter expressing his regret at his inability to be present at the annual meeting and dinner of the Republican State Editorial Association, held here to-day, Senator Thomas C. Platt said:

"Probably no more interesting and important a campaign than the approaching one has confronted us in many years, because it deals not only with fundamental principles of Republicanism, but particularly with newly established precedents, tremendous in their scope, and bearing upon our National welfare, which mark this epoch of the country's history. The proper education of the masses on these burning questions and the counteracting of the insidious poisons disseminated by the Democratic organization, and by individual Republicans masquerading as statesmen and patriots, rest in large measure with your association. Happily you have not faltered or been false to your duty, and the sentiment of the people of our State is overwhelmingly right.

"But it must be remembered that your influence reaches beyond the boundary lines of our State, for the reason that the people of the Nation look to New York for a guiding impulse on great National questions. I congratulate you that the Democratic Party is hopelessly divided on important party policies, and that the outlook for Republican success in the ensuing election is so bright."

Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith also sent a letter of regret, in which he said:

"I cordially congratulate my brethren upon the great position of country which has come as the result of policies which they have steadily sustained and as the fruit of a course which has had their earnest and faithful support. I congratulate them also upon the bright outlook of the year in which we are just entering. The country has never been so prosperous as now. The promises and the predictions which accompanied the return of the Republican Party to power have been more than fulfilled. New and unexpected responsibilities have come with the present Administration and they have been met with courage, the sagacity, and the success which have distinguished Republican statesmanship since it was first charged with National authority under Abraham Lincoln.

"There is no citizen of the Republic but what must feel new pride in the name of American, with the higher respect and the new deference which that name now commands throughout the world. We have gained a new conception of our mission in advancing humanity and civilization and have entered upon a new epoch of commercial greatness and beneficent world influence.

"As Republican journalists, you can enter upon the contest before you with the strongest conviction of the justice and grandeur of the cause you sustain and with the serene confidence that it will command the approving judgment of the enlightened and progressive American people."

SEEKS TO BE VICE PRESIDENT.

Webster Davis of Kansas City Said to be an Aspirant.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 26.—Webster Davis, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and ex-Mayor of Kansas City, has an ambition to become President McKinley's running mate this Fall, according to The Kansas City Star. The Star says:

"Davis's closest friends here in Kansas do not hesitate to express the belief that he went to South Africa on some mission other than in search of health. One of Davis's warmest admirers tells of a conversation he had with the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in Washington nearly a year ago.

"'I called on Mr. Davis in regard to a pension claim,' he said. 'He introduced me to Cornelius Bliss. Mr. Bliss talked of the future of Mr. Davis in politics. After we talked with Mr. Bliss we went over to see the President. Mr. McKinley declared that Davis was destined to be a great man in the Nation. The President questioned me closely about the standing of Davis in the West, and said that Missouri should be very proud of him.

"'After we left the White House Davis told me he was slated for the nomination for Vice President. He declared the President had taken up the subject with him voluntarily. McKinley believes that Davis can carry Missouri for the Republican ticket. The trip to South Africa is nothing more than a move on the political checkerboard to bring Davis into prominence.'"

THE KENTUCKY CONTEST.

Test Vote in the House of Representatives To-day—Mountaineers Remaining at Frankfort Are Quiet.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 26.—To-morrow a vote will be taken in the House of Representatives that is expected to foreshadow with some accuracy the strength that both sides will be able to muster when the Gubernatorial contest comes up. The vote will be on the contest brought by Van Meter, Democrat, for the seat now held by Berry, both being from Fayette County.

Both the Democrats and the Republicans claim to have a majority on the impending vote, and while it will not be decisive in any way, it will put every man upon record, and the party managers will know just who is for them and who is against them. There are 100 members of the House, and the Democrats claim with confidence that of these they will have at least 52 votes against 47 for the Republicans. The Republicans assert that they are absolutely certain that the vote will be at least 51 to 48 in their favor.

A vote taken in the House to-day forms a slight indication of the result of to-morrow's contest. Immediately after the opening of the session, Representative Grider presented a motion that, in hearing contests, the House go into a Committee of the Whole, listen to both sides when majority and minority reports are presented, and give to each side forty minutes for argument. After some debate, Representative Finn moved to table the Grider resolution, and the yeas and nays being called on the motion to table, it was lost by a vote of 49 to 47. Of the 49 votes received by the Republicans, 10 were cast by Democrats, as follows: Lafferty, Rawlins, Bagby, Hinton, Cochran, Orr, Willingham, Weatherford, Grider, and Lyon.

The city has been very quiet all day, without the slightest sign of trouble. There are still a number of visiting mountaineers in the city, but they are making no noise.

In case Goebel wins in the Legislature, the Republicans will make an effort to carry the matter to the United States Supreme Court. The Goebel men are anxious to have the matter settled by a joint ballot, and in the event of their being successful in this method of election, the claim will be made by the Republicans that Goebel was chosen illegally, because he did not have a majority of both houses independently. This possible plan of procedure was announced to-night by an anti-Goebel Democrat. The straight Republicans would not discuss it.

Scenes of unusual prominence testified before the Gubernatorial contest boards to-day. The number included Judge Sterling B. Toney of Louisville, for whom ex-Gov. Bradley, one of the contestee's attorneys, asked a warrant of arrest yesterday; United States Marshal A. D. James, Major A. T. Wood, former Republican candidate for Governor; Col. Thomas Landrum of Gov. Bradley's staff, and Dr. David Smith of Louisville.

Judge Toney retold the story of the granting of mandatory injunctions on election day, requiring the admittance of Inspectors for the Brown ticket to the voting places. In the course of his testimony he said that he believed that a Judge who took his politics upon the bench should be disrobed. He had done what he thought was right, and would have done as he did had his action ruined either the Democratic or the Republican Party.

Major Wood testified respecting the character of the speeches made by ex-Gov. Bradley during the campaign. The evidence was in rebuttal of the newspaper reports before the board to the effect that the Governor's speeches were inflammatory and were attacks upon Mr. Goebel. The witness said that Gov. Bradley had not attacked Mr. Goebel, that his speeches were chiefly a defense of his own administration.

BLACKBURN'S SENATORSHIP.

Gov. Taylor May Refuse to Sign the Certificate of Election.

Special to The New York Times.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 26.—Ex-Chief Justice Pryor, as counsel for Senator-elect Blackburn, to-day formally offered Gov. Taylor the report of the legislative sessions at which Blackburn was elected United States Senator, together with a request that a certificate be issued for his client.

The document was filed, but no official action was taken. Blackburn's friends are hoping that the certificate soon will be forthcoming, but Gov. Taylor declines to be interviewed upon this point. It is regarded as certain, however, that Gov. Taylor will not sign his name certifying Blackburn's election unless forced to do so. His failure to sign it may strengthen Bradley's claim for Blackburn's seat.

Gov. Taylor Pardons a Convict.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 26.—Gov. Taylor to-day pardoned John D. Young, convicted at Mount Sterling fifteen months ago of manslaughter, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Young is the son of ex-Congressman John D. Young.

Contest of T. J. McManus.

The committee of members of the Legislature appointed in the matter of the contest of T. J. McManus for the post of Assemblyman from the Fifteenth District of New York, met in the Hotel Cadillac yesterday, with E. H. Fallows as Chairman. M. L. Bruce appeared as counsel for the contestant and T. C. O'Sullivan for James E. Smith, the successful Democratic candidate. Samuel E. Carter was counsel for the committee. The notice of contest was put in as evidence, and the Supreme Court order authorizing the production of the sealed packages containing the ballots alleged to be void or defective, was read. The committee examined the packages. Some of them were imperfectly fastened. Before the examination was completed the representative of the County Clerk's office announced that under the law the documents must be returned for the night, and that the office closed at 4 P. M. The committee then adjourned.

SAILORS KILLED AND EATEN.

VICTORIA, B. C., Jan. 26.—Details have been received here per steamer Miowera from Sydney of the killing of the Captain and crew of the schooner Nikamarra on one of the islands of the Admiralty group by the natives. It is said all of the victims were eaten.

The Nikamarra was owned by E. E. Forsythe, and had left New Britain early in October on a trading cruise to the Admiralty Islands. On arrival there she was boarded by a number of the natives with whom Capt. Balthe was unsuspectingly doing business, when he was set upon by his treacherous customers and killed, his fate being shared by the mate and six New Ireland natives, all of whom were cut and hacked with knives and tomahawks. The natives then plundered the vessel.

Nothing was known of the killing until some time afterward, when Mr. Forsythe arrived on the scene with his other schooner, the Niagara. He was accompanied by Messrs. Bullock and Doudney, and they, too, were set upon by the natives from ambush as the white men rowed shoreward, using the rifles taken from the Nikamarra. Bullock was badly wounded by a shot through the thigh, but the boat party regained the Niagara, which, with her gas engine, reached open water.

An expedition to revenge the massacre has set out from New Britain.

Ex-Governor of the Chickasaws Dead.

DENISON, Texas, Jan. 26.—Jones Wolf is dead of pneumonia at his home, near Tishomingo, Indian Territory. He was for years Governor of the Chickasaws, and was the last of the full-blood Indian rulers of that tribe.

CASTELLANE-DE RODAYS DUEL.

The Count Closes the Incident Until He Reaches Paris by Cabling to His Adversary "Poor Idiot."

The Count and Countess Castellane spent an uneventful day yesterday, there being nothing more exciting during their forenoon and afternoon than receiving and paying a few social calls and a limited shopping expedition, this last by the Countess. The Count's day was singularly free from annoying cablegrams from Paris editors, and he was consequently in a placid and contented frame of mind.

When asked what reply he would make to the latest statement published in the Paris Figaro that that newspaper would sue him for 200,000 francs damages for his recent cablegrams in which, it is alleged, he libeled M. de Rodays, the directer of the paper, the Count smiled and shrugged his shoulders complacently.

"What will I do now?" he said elevating his eyebrows haughtily. "Well, I think it would be a waste of time and money to send any more messages to the Figaro. In signifying its intention to bring a libel suit against me for 200,000f. it has virtually acknowledged that my last telegram, published in all the other Paris newspapers, has wounded the editor personally and impaired still further the standing of the Figaro. I shall therefore content myself with doing nothing further in the matter until I reach Paris. I really feel sorry for de Rodays in his present predicament, and so I have just sent him a cablegram, as follows.

De Rodays, Figaro, Paris:
Poor idiot. CASTELLANE.

"I think this is about the most appropriate message I could send him after his latest attempt to escape the responsibility for having maliciously abused me."

The Count left the Waldorf-Astoria during the forenoon for a visit into the downtown district, presumably to call upon one or more of his brothers-in-law. It could not be learned, however, at the offices of George or Edwin Gould whether the Count had or had not put in an appearance there. The Countess went out alone during the afternoon it was said at the hotel, to visit her sister, Miss Helen Gould, at the latter's residence, on Fifth Avenue.

The Count and Countess will go to Lakewood, N. J., to-day, where they will be the guests for several days of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould.

AGENT AND MONEY MISSING.

Charles E. Mackey, who had charge of the ticket agents employed by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company at the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge, was yesterday reported to be missing. About $1,000 of the receipts from Thursday's sales of tickets, it is alleged, has also disappeared. Mackey was last seen in his office Thursday night. When the safe was opened yesterday morning no money was found in it. Assistant Treasurer C. D. Meneely of the company said last night that the amount missing was more than $1,000.

SCHOOL LEGISLATION OUTLOOK

Catholic Club and Statutory Revision Commission's Bill—Mr. McKelway Thinks It Has No Chance.

Members of the Catholic Club, comprising a sub-Committee of the Educational Legislation Committee, are holding meetings at which school legislation is being discussed. The proposed Educational bill, prepared by the Statutory Revision Commission, was the special subject of discussion Thursday night.

This bill was prepared by Chairman Lincoln of the commission, and, it is understood, meets the approval of Deputy State Superintendent of Public Instruction Ainsworth and ex-Judge Joseph F. Daly. While none of the members of the sub-committee will discuss the result of their meeting, it is understood that they are not entirely satisfied with the bill. Judge Daly, who is a prominent member of the club, and was with the Committee at its meeting, said yesterday:

"No person has been authorized to say what the club has done or will do. It is true that the bill was under discussion by the sub-committee, but it has not yet reported the result of its investigations to the entire committee. When asked to give his own views on the proposed legislation, Judge Daly declined.

According to St. Clair McKelway, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the State Board of Regents, there is little danger of the proposed bill becoming a law during the present session. "I do not believe," he said, "that Gov. Roosevelt will sign any school bill that ought not to pass, and I do not believe that this Legislature will pass any bill that Gov. Roosevelt ought to sign. We therefore expect the net result of no school legislation this Winter.

"We further expect that during the ensuing year the ease with which the Board of Regents and the Department of Public Instruction will get along with one another will show that no legislation whatever is required. The whole demand for the unification of the school lows, now that there is harmony between the two departments, seems to be confined to those persons and their friends who wish to manufacture unnecessary high salaried positions, and to do so in such a way that they can fall into the places.

"The late Unification Commission, which undertook to revise the school laws, was composed of seven members, four of whom were candidates for positions under a scheme of their own devising, or, if not the entire four, certainly three, and certainly a friend of the fourth in the person of a more or less distinguished manufacturer of educational propositions in the City of New York. Gov. Roosevelt can be trusted to see that rapacious influences, whether in the Legislature or outside of it, shall not be allowed to thrust the school system of the State into politics."

ANOTHER SCHOOL TEACHERS' BILL.

Assemblyman Fallows's Measure Fixes Salaries to be Paid.

ALBANY, Jan. 26.—Another school teachers' salary bill for New York City was introduced in the Assembly to-day by Assemblyman Fallows, which differs somewhat from the one introduced by Senator Ahearn yesterday. It provides for a different schedule of salaries, to take effect Feb. 1, 1900.

No teacher who has served ten years shall receive less than $1,080 per year, and for fifteen years less than $1,320. The first assistant, who shall discharge the duties of Vice Principal or head of department, is to receive $1,440, and no male teacher shall receive less than $1,080 after two years of service, nor less than $2,400 after twelve years of service. No male Vice Principal, male head of department, or male first assistant who shall discharge the duties of Vice Principal or head of department, shall receive less than $2,500. The salaries of women teachers shall not be more than $2,400 per year. No teacher shall receive a salary greater than that fixed for the seventh year of service, unless by a majority vote of the borough Board of School Superintendents.

The City Superintendent of Schools is directed to issue to teachers who have had experience in schools outside of New York City a certificate stating that the experience of such teachers has been equivalent to a certain number of years of experience in the New York City schools, and such certificate shall entitle the holder to salary in accordance with the minimum schedule of salaries established.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment is required to issue bonds to provide funds to carry into effect the provisions of the act during 1900, 1901, and succeeding years.

FATALLY WOUNDED BY BURGLAR

EASTON, Penn., Jan. 26.—J. F. Speer, a general merchant, is lying at the point of death at his home in Johnsonville, a hamlet in the northeastern section of this county, as a result of an encounter with a burglar last night. Johnsonville is situated in the backwoods, and it is one of the loneliest places in the county after nightfall.

When Speer was leaving his store last night he was confronted by a burly burglar, who, drawing a revolver, ordered him to throw up his hands. Speer showed fight and knocked the pistol from the fellow's hand. The burglar then attacked Speer with a club; in the scuffle he regained possession of the revolver, and fired at Speer, fatally wounding him.

The neighborhood was aroused and a posse started in pursuit of the burglar. He had not been caught at 9 o'clock this morning.

Thomas W. Grosvenor Dead.

UTICA, Jan. 26.—Thomas W. Grosvenor of Herkimer was found dead in his room in the Butterfield, in this city, this morning. Last Spring he was arrested in New York for uttering worthless checks at the Gilsey House. His relatives are wealthy, and this affair was settled up. During the last few weeks he had been drinking heavily, and his death was due to the excessive use of alcoholic drinks.

LOSS IN COLD-STORAGE EGGS.

Warm Weather in Chicago Brings Disaster to Holders.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Holders of eggs in cold storage have experienced a disastrous season. On South Water Street it was estimated that the loss upon eggs thus held amounts to at least $150,000. The warm weather is responsible. There are now in storage here 65,000 cases of eggs, and the uspply will not last more than fifteen days. The price has fallen to 11 cents, and recently was as low as 8 cents. It costs the holder about 14½ cents a dozen when he takes his eggs out of cold storage. The egg dealers started in the season with about 625,000 cases in cold storage, and for a time money was made on them. Then came the warm weather, and down went the prices.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

As a Place to Visit

DO you know our idea of a store? It is to have it so interesting that you'll feel any outing incomplete if it does not include a visit here; that you shall feel ashamed of the oversight if you fail to bring your visitors here. We want the store to be just as interesting as the matinee—want you to come here before or after it.

And yesterday we had a dry-goods man say that he believed New Yorkers did feel just that way toward Wanamaker's.

Now we haven't coaxed you to come to buy anything—we will not. Do as you please about buying—we know that if the store is good enough you'll come here when goods are needed. But come and enjoy it; come often—sketch; lunch; look; study.

To be sure, this beautiful store, that has been big enough, lo! these many years, doesn't seem so big now. But it is our welcome. If our wish would change it, the store—our welcome—would be as big again by Monday.

Fur Sale Continues—Prices Reduced One-fourth. Yet London cables report advances in prices of 20 to 100 per cent.

Three Shoe Bargains

At nine o'clock this morning we shall make a clear-up sale of three hundred and twelve pairs of Mens' $3 Shoes at $1. Tan and russet; good toe shapes.

It costs a third we'll get for the shoes to print the story—but little lots are the store's one bugbear.

Women's $2.50 Shoes at $1.20. Black kidskin; all the regular sizes, but we're afraid not enough to meet all to-day's demands. These are here as a factory clearance—glad we skip the loss; glad to give you the bargain.

Men's Scarfs and Smoking Jackets

One move is as good as a fire to this neckwear maker, for he has sold us every worthy scarf that he owned and sent to auction the last bit that we refused. He starts up in a new factory within a fortnight—everything new.

Seventy-two hundred Scarfs and Ties—we believe all, excepting possibly two hundred, were made for this winter's selling.

Ready for you this morning—a third of the lot are Batwing and String Ties—50c to $1 in these qualities—these we shall sell at 25c.

The rest of the lot is made up of Tecks, Puffs, Imperials and a few English Square Ties—a few are 50c quality, but most of them $1 and $1.50 sorts. These are 35c, or three for $1.

Sixty-two Men's Dressing Gowns are left from our holiday stock. As you read, yesterday, the prices were $10 to $22.50; to-day they are $5 to $11.25.

Smoking Jackets, just half of yesterday's prices. $2.50 to $8.25. Until this morning they were $5 to $16.50.

Ready when the store opens this morning.

Men's Goods, Ninth street side.

Girl's Dresses and Wraps Reduced! And they don't deserve it. But of the regular winter dresses there are just about two hundred, grouping certain lots, that must go out right away.

At $5—Dresses that ran up to $12 in value. Eton, Double-breasted, Guimpe and One-piece garments. For ages 4 to 12.

At $7.50—Dresses in value up to $16. Some are tailor-made, some are blouse suits; others one-piece. For ages 4 to 18.

At $30—Dresses in values up to $24, for girls of 8 to the miss of 18. Tailor made—single and double-breasted jackets.

Reefers for girls of 6 to 10 years—$2.50, $5 and $7.50—half the early prices.

Some Three-quarter Box Coats for girls of 6 to 12, $15. Of navy blue and brown velveteen. Second floor.

Men's and Women's Umbrellas Here are four groups of bargains—two for men, two for women. It's not umbrella weather, to be sure, but it's always wise to prepare for a rainy day—These may not be here when it comes.

$2.90—Women's 26-in. all silk umbrellas; fancy handles in all new designs; pearl, ivory, horn and natural wood, all silver mounted, and fine Dresden. The least expensive umbrella in the lot is a good $3.75 value. Others that are fairly worth $5.

$2.90—Men's 28-in.; all silk; fancy natural wood handles, trimmed with silver; the newest styles; regularly $4.

$1.75—Women's 26-in. Union taffeta umbrellas; various fancy handles.

Broadway.

Men's Overcoats for Real-Winter Wear

Ulsters of all-wool frieze—black or Oxford-gray; plaid lining; genteel and durable, $12.

Ulsters of frieze, Oxford-gray, (no use of saying "all wool;" we won't sell a man's garment unless it is absolutely all wool); frieze or cheviot; lined with a durable worsted stuff. $15. A clothing man, whom we thoroughly believe in, says they are fully equal to the best twenty dollar overcoats he has seen.

But this is list enough—a mere hint that we have whatever you need for the winter days that come sooner or later—that seem to be here now. Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Underwear and Hosiery Likely as not you shared the good fortune of last week—when we sold hosiery and knitted underwear at a half, third or fourth its worth. We do that once a year to make an absolute clearance of both the very extreme styles and broken lots of every-day styles.

Most of the things were sold.

To-day, the remnant lots—good as any—at still less prices—

Women's Stockings, that last week were reduced to 25c and 50c (some were $1) are 15c. Eight hundred and fifty pairs

Women's Knitted Under-garments that last week were reduced to 50c and 75c (some were $1.50) are 25c. Corset Covers, vests, drawers, Union suits. About five hundred pieces.

Ready at nine o'clock. Fifth floor.

Sometimes when lots become incomplete prices are reduced; that's the only reason for this lowering of price. Odds and ends, yet perfect goods, at $1 to $3 for kinds that were $2 to $7. They're of coutil, sateen or satin, in white, drab, pink and black; nearly all have real whalebone.

TO CHECK THE RAILROADS

DISCRIMINATION IS CHARGED

Business Men Assert that More Power Should Be Given the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Senate Committee on Commerce to-day gave a hearing to the representatives of a number of business organizations throughout the country in support of the bill to amend the inter-State commerce law. The first statement was made by Mr. Frank Barry of Milwaukee. He is Secretary of the National Millers' Association and the accredited representative of the National League of Industrial Associations. He commended the pending bill, saying that it had been framed with a view to doing justice to both the shipper and carrier. He condemned the present law, saying that it had become impotent and valueless, and the Inter-State Commerce Commission was nothing more than a moot court.

In reply to questions from Senator Tillman, Mr. Barry said the Standard Oil, Sugar Trust, and the large flouring mills of the Northwest and grain elevator interests were not co-operating in this movement. He had no direct information on the subject of favoritism, but he called attention to the recent change of freight classification made by the railroads, which he said left carload rates on oil practically where they were, while it raised the rate on fractional carload rates from 200 to 300 per cent. It was not difficult to see that this was in the interest of the Standard Oil Company. Mr. Barry expressed the opinion that the Minneapolis millers were receiving discriminatory rates from the railroads.

Mr. Barry also made complaint of the discrimination by the railroads in favor of wheat for export as against flour for export. He thought the discrimination was due to the fact that many of the railroad men were large owners in the elevators.

Augustin Gallagher of St. Louis, Commissioner of the Millers' National Association, spoke especially of the interests of the millers in the proposed legislation. He said that the railroads were not content with controlling the mines and the forests of the country, but that they were now attempting to control the ballots of the people along their lines. He contended that the railroad systems of the Middle West, so far as the grain interests are concerned, are practically parceled out by large firms in Chicago and other cities.

Mr. Gallagher, in response to an inquiry of Chairman Cullom, said he firmly believed the adoption of the amendment proposed by the National Board of Trade would produce results immensely beneficial to the whole people.

Further along Mr. Gallagher said that the exportation of wheat from the United States last year was about 148,000,000 bushels, possibly 60 per cent. of which went to the British Isles. The labor cost of producing flour, he said, was something more than 20 cents a barrel, and, of course, that amount was lost to the labor of this country on the exported wheat. In answer to a question by Mr. Chandler, Mr. Gallagher said that the National Millers' Association and the National Board of Trade were favorable to such legislation as would restore practically an organization similar to the recent Joint Traffic Association.

"You are here to-day, then," said Mr. Chandler, "to advocate a railroad trust with $1,100,000,000 capital. Is it not in effect a fact that you propose to organize a gigantic railroad trust which is to abolish all competition in traffic rates?"

"As a member of the National Millers' Association and of the National Board of Trade, I deny that I have any such intention. I do not, and they do not, advocate anything of the kind," replied Mr. Gallagher.

"You understand, I take it," said Mr. Chandler, "that the great mass of shippers want an organization similar to the old Joint Traffic Association?"

"They do," replied Mr. Gallagher. "If the resolution adopted by the National Board of Trade does not convey that idea, I ask this committee to prepare one that will."

"Well," said Mr. Chandler, "some of us politicians cannot understand why the National Board of Trade and the National Millers' Association should desire the establishment of a railroad trust, the idea of which is to crush railway competition."

"We do not want to crush competition," replied Mr. Gallagher, "and what we ask will not accomplish such an end."

"You want, then," inquired Senator Allen, "to authorize the railroads to maintain rates without the pooling of the railroads?"

"That's it," replied Mr. Gallagher.

"Well," said Mr. Allen, "that's another name for the same thing."

E. O. Stanard of St. Louis, a flour manufacturer, stated that the railroads for years had been giving rates to wheat shippers in discrimination against the flour manufacturers.

"This discrimination is so great that the British manufacturer can make flour from American wheat at least 18 cents a barrel cheaper than the same flour can be made here," he said.

In conclusion, Mr. Stanard stated there was nothing in the proposed amendment, which would enable the railroads to consolidate or pool their interests.

E. P. Wilson of Cincinnati, Secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, said it was essential that the Inter-State commerce law be amended so that the Inter-State Commerce Commission would have some vitality, and be able to do something definite.

He believed that the commission ought to have authority to step in between the railroads and shippers, and settle disputes until the question could be adjudicated by the courts. He did not approve of the idea of permitting the Inter-State Commission to fix the rates of railroads. That would be an insane notion, in his opinion. In conclusion, Mr. Wilson said that the bill before the committee was an excellent measure, and would accomplish, he believed, the ends desired.

L. B. Boswell, of Quincy, Ill., representing the Quincy Chamber of Commerce and Quincy Freight Bureau, urged Congress to come to the relief of shippers, by establishing an intermediary between shippers and railroads, whose action would be equitable and fair.

L. W. Noyes, representing the National Business League of Chicago, urged the proposed legislation. He declared that if some remedy for the present ills was not provided by Congress, and more distinct authority were not conferred upon the commission, local legislation against the railroads would result.

Edward P. Bacon, of Milwaukee, a member of the Financial Committee of the National Board of Trade, said that while the railroads were anxious, probably, to pool their interests, the National Board of Trade was not in favor of pooling. In response to inquiries by Senator Chandler, who declared the National Board of Trade desired simply to abolish all competition between railroads, Mr. Bacon maintained that while the railroad companies might be afforded some advantages, the proposed law would be of vast advantage to the people.

C. B. Cole, of Chester, Ill., a miller, said: "If this bill is passed it will stop the discrimination in freight rates, and it will strike trusts a harder blow than any other kind of legislation. It will be a benefit to the entire country, with special benefit to none and advantages to all."

John A. Smith, manager of the Charleston (S. C.) Bureau of Freight and Transportation, said the City of Charleston and the entire Southeast had been suffering from the most arbitrary, shameless, and reckless system of freight transportation that any people ever were afflicted with." He declared there would be no development in that section until the freight situation was relieved.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL BILL.

House Committee Provides for Only $10,000,000 to be Made Available Immediately.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The House Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce to-day reconsidered the Nicaragua Canal bill, which had been reported with an appropriation of $140,000,000, and changed the appropriation section so as to make $10,000,000 available, with authority to contract for the entire excavation, construction, defense, and completion of the canal at a total cost not exceeding $140,000,000.

Before this action was taken Mr. Hepburn, Chairman of the committee, stated that as all the members of the committee were anxious for the success of the bill, it was well to consider some objections which had been raised. He had heard several objections on the ground that the whole $140,000,000 was appropriated now, and three or four gentlemen had said they would not support the bill if the entire sum was appropriated now, but would support it if only a portion was made available at once, to begin the work.

"Section 6—That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated, and the Secretary of War is further hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work that may be deemed necessary for the proper construction, defense, and completion of said canal, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made not to exceed in the aggregate $140,000,000."

A statement made last week by authority, to the effect that the Government has engaged in no exchanges with foreign Governments respecting the Nicaragua Canal since the beginning of the present Congress, may now be reiterated.

Certain conferences which have taken place in London between Mr. Choate, our Ambassador, and Lord Salisbury have not, as erroneously inferred in some quarters, had to do with the subject of an isthmian canal, but related entirely to minor affairs.

Respecting the attitude of foreign nations toward the United States in the event that the pending Nicaraguan bill becomes a law, it can be stated that the subject has received nothing more than a preliminary consideration, and it is questionable whether inquiries from any foreign power would be acceptable while the bill itself is pending before Congress and its fate is uncertain. In the event of the final passage of the bill, it is probable that the first overtures directed to any foreign Government by the United States in connection with this matter would be made to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and not to a European power.

Mr. Fletcher (Rep., Minn.,) asked: "When you get that canal half built for $140,000,000, what will you do for the other half?"

Mr. Corliss answered that the highest estimate of cost thus far was $133,000,000.

Mr. Hepburn added that in the amended form the bill simply applied the contract system, and limited the aggregate to $140,000,000.

In the amended form the bill was ordered reported.

URGES BRITIAN TO ACQUIESCE.

London Newspaper Favors the Cutting of the Big Canal.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Spectator, in the course of an important article arguing that it is entirely to the advantage of Great Britain that the Nicaragua Canal should be cut, urges the Government to "anticipate the possibility of the Washington Administration raising the problem of the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty in an offensive form by voluntarily offering to abrogate the treaty."

"We should thus avoid," says the Spectator, "being put into a ridiculous position by seeming unwilling to yield to pressure when pressure was being exerted in regard to something which it was our own interest to do.

"We do not want, in fact, to quarrel with America over not doing something which would be greatly to the advantage of the British Empire. If the canal is to be made, and cannot be under our control, it is immensely important that it should be in the hands of a strong, friendly neutral power; and, God be thanked, there is less fear of our being at war with America than with any other power in the world. We do not believe Canada would block the way in a matter concerning the welfare of the whole empire."

GERMAN EXPORTERS COMPLAIN.

Ambassador at Washington Calls Attention to Alleged Faults in American Customs Laws.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Secretary Hay has sent to Speaker Henderson for submission to the House copies of complaints of the German Government, presented by its Ambassador here, Dr. von Holleben, against the existing customs regulations of the United States applicable to merchandise imported from Germany.

These complaints, as summarized by Mr. Hay, are as follows:

First—That the regulation governing the authentication of invoices by the Consular officers of the United States confer upon them the power of obtaining from the shippers such information as might be used to the detriment of the German trade, if disclosed to American competitors, and that, in any event, the details which may be inquired into by the Consul constitute a hindrance to the speedy transaction of the business and a course of molestation.

Second—That in the American ports of arrival the Consular certificates are merely examined with regard to their form, while the market value of the goods is finally decided by the American customs appraisers without regard to the invoice statement.

Third—That owing to the mode of procedure of the appraisers, it is hardly possible to prove the correctness of the declarations in the invoice, because their decisions are rendered on the strength of assertions and facts which never come to the knowledge of the exporter.

Secretary of the Treasury Gage, in a letter reviewing the Ambassador's complaints, states that the existing Consular and customs regulations cannot be modified without a departure from the law of 1890, and that such regulations "are equally applicable to shipments from any foreign country and do not discriminate against or in favor of any particular foreign market." Mr. Gage suggests that Congress deal with the matter.

Ambassador von Holleben's letter specifies that the system is highly calculated to injure the German export trade and in some cases lead to an entire disclosure of the conditions of production and the business secrets of German industry.

In conclusion he asks Secretary Hay "to give to the complaints of my Government the kind consideration demanded by the friendly relations existing between the two countries."

HOUSE EULOGIZES MR. HOBART.

Tributes of Respect Paid to the Late Vice President.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The House today at 2 o'clock suspended public business to listen to tributes to the memory of the late Vice President Hobart.

Mr. Gardiner, (Rep., N. J.,) who served for several years in the State Senate with Mr. Hobart, presented the resolutions of regret and was the first speaker.

He said, in part:

"The career of Mr. Hobart is another of those of the recurring examples offered to young American manhood that energy, integrity, and courage, if seconded by real ability, may traverse all the weary paths that lie between the lowly and the highest estates—and sit triumphantly in an exalted place, for he rose with no aid but his merit; with no friend equal to his deserts, and no claim to recognition but his fitness. In the career of Mr. Hobart there was nothing sensational or episodical. His aims were definite, his course steady as the granite hills, his effort sustained as the motion of the planets. To every task he brought the energy of a splendid hope. With him all objects were specific and every duty great, and to his conviction of duty, his definite aims, his tireless energy and steady purpose, quietly pursued, are largely due the success and honor that crowned his life."

Mr. Payne, (Rep., N. Y.,) the leader of the majority, and Mr. Richardson, (Dem., Tenn.,) the leader of the minority, each paid an impressive tribute to the memory of the late Vice President. Mr. Grosvenor, (Rep., Ohio,) in a warm eulogy, said Mr. Hobart was the first Vice President within his recollection who gave dignity and value and executive co-operation to the office. He said when the present tariff law hung in the balance in conference no one man did as much to effect the result as did he.

The other speakers were Messrs. Stewart, (Rep., N. J.;) Dalzell, (Rep., Penn.;) Brosius, (Rep., Penn.;) Parker, (Rep., N. J.;) Fowler, (Rep., N. J.;) Daly, (Dem., N. J.;) Griggs, (Dem., Ga.,) and Doliver, (Rep., Iowa.)

At 4:20 P. M., as a further mark of respect, the House adjourned.

MAY AMEND THE SUBSIDY BILL.

Senate Sub-Committee Agrees Upon Several Changes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Commerce appointed to consider the ship subsidy bill to-day agreed to recommend several changes in the bill. One of the amendments agreed upon limits the amount to be paid in any one year to 20 and 21 knot vessels to $2,000,000 in the aggregate.

Another change places vessels of 11, 12, and 13 knots speed in the special premium class, this action being taken to encourage low-power freight vessels. A third amendment provides for the admission of foreign-built ships of certain classes where a majority of the stock is owned by American citizens. The requirement in the bill as introduced was that 80 per cent. of the stock should be owned in this country.

COMMITTEES COMING TO NEW YORK.

Will Examine Into the Need for a Branch Post Office.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—William R. Corwine, representing the Merchant Association of New York, to-day extended the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an invitation to go to New York as the guests of these organizations to examine into the necessity for a large branch Post Office up town near the Grand Central Station. The invitation contemplates meeting the commercial organizations interested in the project, a banquet, and elaborate entertainment from Friday until Monday at such time as the committee shall fix.

Representative Cummings of New York, the author of the bill for the branch Post Office, also appeared before the committee and urged the acceptance of the invitation. The committee subsequently in executive session accepted the invitation and fixed Feb. 16, 17, and 18 as the days for the visit.

The House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads accepted a similar invitation.

DAMAGES TO THE MANILA CABLE.

Congressmen Protest Against Paying for Loss by Interruption.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—In the House to-day Mr. Mahon (Rep., Penn.,) called up the bill to authorize the Secretary of State to pay the Australasia and China Telegraph Company the amount of the expenses incurred in repairing the Manila-Hongkong cable, cut by Admiral Dewey during the war with Spain.

Mr. Mahon explained that the Government took the position that it was not liable for loss due to the interruption of business, but only for the actual expense of repairing the cable.

Mr. Ray (Rep., N. Y.,) said the Attorney General had reported that the company had no claim for indemnity. There were thousands of claims pending, and he thought it would establish a dangerous precedent to pay one which the Attorney General had reported against.

Mr. Moody (Rep., Mass.,) argued that the law of nations was well settled that property of neutrals within the theatre of war operations had to take its chances.

No action was taken on the bill.

MANILA CABLE IS DISCUSSED.

Louis Marshall and Gen. Swayne Oppose Government Control.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Louis Marshall of New York appeared before the Senate Committee on Commerce in behalf of the Eastern Extension and Australasian Telegraph Company, the British company which now operates the cable connections with the Philippines, and stated that he was present to submit a "caveat," or notice, of prior rights. He explained the concessions held by this company from Spain, some of them extending until 1940, and one of them granted in 1898 giving exclusive landing rights in the Spanish Pacific islands until 1918.

Mr. Marshall said the company maintained that these grants by Spain were binding on the United States, as this Government had succeeded to Spain's sovereignty and had put herself in Spain's shoes.

Mr. Corliss asked if it was claimed the United States could not lay a cable to Manila.

Mr. Marshall said it was held this could not be done without extinguishing the existing rights in some regular way. He submitted a brief on this point, and will be heard further.

Capt. Squier, acting Chief Signal Officer, stated that owing to the assertion of exclusive rights, the War Department had secured copies of the original concessions under which this British company was operating. He said these controverted the claims of exclusive rights. They were being translated, and would soon be submitted to Congress.

The Pacific cable question was also taken up by the House committee, and Gen. Wager Swayne of New York spoke in favor of private construction and operation of the cable line as against Government ownership.

DEMOCRATS TO FILL VACANCIES.

Numerous Places on the Congressional Committee Now Exist.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Democratic Congressional Committee ought to consist of forty-five members of Congress, one from each State, but there are several States which omitted to elect Democratic Representatives in 1898, and the committee will soon have to appoint members who are not Representatives.

The States which have no Democratic members of the House are Wisconsin, Minnesota, Washington, Oregon, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Iowa, Michigan, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, and Nevada. To these Utah has been added by the expulsion of Brigham H. Roberts. Idaho, Colorado, Kansas, and Nevada, however, are represented in the House by silverites and Populists.

Representative Hay, Chairman of the Democratic caucus, says that as soon as a quorum of the Congressional Committee has been chosen he will call a meeting to elect members for States that have not sent Democratic Representatives to the House.

PATRONAGE IN THE SENATE.

Republicans Will Soon Have Almost All the Offices.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The reorganization of the Senate is now an absorbing topic among the hundreds of employes about the North wing of the Capitol. Until a few days ago it appeared very doubtful that the reorganization would go very much beyond a change in the offices of Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms. The caucus Committee appointed to inquire into the distribution of patronage, of which Mr. Mason was Chairman, reported to the caucus, which rejected the recommendations, and appointed another committee, composed of Senators Platt of Connecticut, McMillan of Michigan, Perkins of California, Sewell of New Jersey, Carter of Montana, Hanna of Ohio, and Mason of Illinois, and this Committee has determined upon a plan which will doubtlessly be carried out within a comparatively short time.

This plan involves changes in about seventy-five positions now held by men whose "influence" has passed out of the Senate, or is wholly Democratic. The salaries of these places aggregate about $90,000 per annum. Under the plan only such Senators of the minority who have long been in the Senate will be allowed a certain amount of patronage. Younger Senators of the minority will not be recognized in the distribution of places.

These changes involve the offices of the Secretary and the Sergeant-at-Arms, and other positions, from high salaried clerkships to places on the watch force in the folding room and mechanical departments, connected with the Senate. The reorganization will soon begin, and within three or four weeks it is likely that all the changes to be made under the plan of reorganization will have taken place.

ROBERTS AND HIS SALARY.

Matter of Pay and Mileage Is a Subject of Discussion.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The question of salary and mileage allowance for Mr. Roberts is to be considered by the House Committee on Accounts. There is about $1,000 on mileage and a like amount for salary conditionally due Mr. Roberts, but there is some doubt as to whether the sums should be allowed.

The Attorney General, on application, has refused to pass on the subject, as it is not in his jurisdiction, and the Controller of the Treasury has also referred the matter back to the Committee on Accounts. The latter body will now seek to get at the law in the case and reach a decision.

Call for Republican Caucus.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—A call has been issued for the joint caucus of Republican Senators and Representatives at 5 o'clock P. M., Jan. 30, in the hall of the House, for the purpose of organizing the Republican National Congressional Committee.

Congress to Create Corporations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26:—Representative Jenkins (Rep., Wis.,) to-day introduced a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution giving Congress the power to create corporations for the purpose of commerce between the States, including railroads, telegraph, telephone, transportation, express, and sleeping car companies, and giving Congress power of control over such corporations.

Two New Postal Sub-Stations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Postmaster General Smith has ordered the establishment on Feb. 1 of two postal sub-stations with facilities for the transaction of money order and registry business, and for the sale of postal supplies, one to be known as No. 131, at Unionport Road, near Morris Park Avenue, and the other as No. 132, at 795 Eighth Avenue.

The loss was almost $5,000.

Drops Dead in Detroit Post Office.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 26.—Col. Louis Strassberger of this city dropped dead today in the Post Office from apoplexy. Col. Strassberger formerly resided in Baltimore. He served on the military staffs of three Governors of Maryland—McLean, Lloyd, and Jackson. Col. Strassberger served for a year and a half in the Confederate Army, enlisting at the age of thirteen. He had been Poor Commissioner and a City Councilor of Baltimore and was prominent in business there.

TUNNEL WILL BE BUILT BY COMPANY

John B. McDonald's Plan to Overcome Bond Difficulty.

TO SECURE STRONG BACKING

As a result of the attitude of the surety companies in the matter of furnishing the bond of $5,000,000 which Contractor John B. McDonald must give before he can proceed with the construction of the rapid transit tunnel, he has set on foot a plan to form a large construction company, the members of which will be of such individual responsibility as to do away with any objection the surety companies may have had in the matter of securities to be furnished on the bond. Mr. McDonald yesterday stated to President Orr that such a construction company was to be formed, and later in the day he, with his counsel, De Lancey Nicoll, met the representatives of the various surety companies already nominated by the contractor—the American Surety Company, the Fidelity and Deposit Company, and the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Maryland—when the question of securities and the compensation for the bonding was thoroughly gone into.

According to Mr. Nicoll, no definite conclusion was reached, but he and Mr. McDonald expressed their firm belief that all obstacles would be overcome and that in the additional ten days allowed the contractor yesterday by the Rapid Transit Commission all matters relating to the five-million-dollar bond would be satisfactorily settled.

TO BE CONTRACTOR'S BONDSMEN.

It is understood that the proposed construction company, or, more exactly, the members who are to comprise it, will in themselves constitute the bondsmen for the contractor and that it will not be necessary for Mr. McDonald to call on the surety companies at all. It is pointed out that if the members of the construction company can give the necessary security demanded by the surety companies for the alleged protection of their stockholders, they can just as well become personal sureties for the carrying out of the contract to the extent demanded by the contract.

Mr. McDonald's plan, therefore, is to gather around him a number of men who will form the construction company and build the tunnel and the road in it. They will be sharers in the profit obtained under the contract, and in consideration of this they will pledge themselves individually to furnish a proportionate share of the $6,000,000 security demanded—$1,000,000 in continuing bond or marketable securities and $5,000,000 in bonds for construction. While Mr. McDonald in forming this company would be departing from the rule he established when he became a bidder to do all the work himself, he would, on the other hand, be backed by men of great financial responsibility.

SAVING OF $50,000 A YEAR.

The first question that would be presented to a company of this kind would be the saving of $50,000 a year which will go to the bonding companies if they furnish the sureties, for their officers would not admit yesterday that they intended under any circumstances to accept less than 1 per cent. a year for their suretyship. As the five-million-dollar bond will continue until the road is in actual operation, and as it is stated by the surety companies themselves that they expect the bond to run for at least five years, the neat sum of $250,000 could be saved to the construction company alone.

But there is another fact which will be taken into consideration. The sub-contractors will be required to give bonds for the part of the work they undertake, and Mr. McDonald, or the construction company, will be the sole judges of what sureties are to be accepted on this bond. If, therefore, the construction company should also in time see its way clear to become a surety company as well, it could not alone underwrite the five-million-dollar bond of Mr. McDonald, but the bonds of the various sub-contractors. This would also add to the profits of the construction company, at the current rate, if these bonds should amount to $7,500,000, about $75,000 a year, and would go far toward figuring up the profits that are to be derived from all sources.

STATEMENT OF MR. ORR.

President Orr first made known the construction company project. He said yesterday that Mr. McDonald and Mr. Nicoll had called on him and had asked for an extension of ten days, which had been freely granted. He said that Mr. McDonald had told him then of the plan to form the construction company, the formation of which would do away with any difficulty in the bonding question.

"I do not know of any of the details of the proposed construction company," said Mr. Orr, "but I believe that Mr. McDonald will be able to adjust matters before his time has expired and that he will qualify and proceed with the work in good order."

Controller Coler was not surprised that Mr. McDonald had asked for more time. He said that the contractor was a thoroughly responsible man and that in all his dealings with the city there had been never a hitch. "I am positive that he will be able to qualify," said Mr. Coler. "There have been difficulties about the bonds, but this is only natural when the enormous nature of the contract is understood. The city is ready to do anything it can to help Mr. McDonald, but he has asked for no quarter or favor."

"It is true," said Mr. McDonald yesterday, "that there have been some unexpected hitches in the negotiations with the surety companies. I think that the immense amount of business given to them should call for consideration from them in the form of a special rate. That is one of the points of difference. But there are matters under way which I am sure will do away with every difficulty. I am sorry that I had to ask for the extension of time, and I saw no necessity for it before this question of bonds arose. I'll build the road, however, you can be sure of that."

CONFIRMS COMPANY PLAN.

On the question of the construction company, Mr. McDonald refused to talk, and his attorney, Mr. Nicoll, was equally reticent, except that he admitted that such a company was to be formed. He said that he and Mr. McDonald had late yesterday afternoon met representatives of the three surety companies and that he expected fully to have the matter settled within a few days. He refused to state who were the persons who were to form the construction company.

President Lyman of the American Surety Company said that his company was still engaged in examining the contract made by Mr. McDonald and the law relating to the construction of the road, and until the officers had examined it thoroughly he was not in a position to state just what the American Surety Company would do in the matter. "You can say," he said, "that we have not refused to go on Mr. McDonald's bond for our share of the $5,000,000, nor has the question of rate been fully considered. So far as we are concerned, the whole matter is yet under consideration."

Henry B. Platt, Vice President of the Fidelity and Deposit Company, said: "This company does not care to write any part of the bond except under conditions that will protect the stockholders, and the conditions so far presented to Mr. McDonald have not been satisfactory to him. As to the rate, I would rather say nothing. We would be quite as well satisfied if Mr. McDonald were able to get individual bondsmen or even other companies. I want to say positively that politics cuts no figure in the matter. No one has been keener for rapid transit than Mr. Boardman, but the Fidelity and Deposit Company is not made up of philanthropists."

SURETY COMPANIES' MOTIVES.

Edward M. Shepard of counsel to the commission said that he had heard about the construction company and said he had no doubt that the members of it would be able to give the securities desired, and thus be independent of the surety companies. "That," he said, "would seem to be the logical reason for the formation of such a company. The commission has never said that it wanted surety company bonds, and will accept personal security if it is satisfactory. It is not that the surety companies are in doubt as to the value of the contract or the ability of the contractor to carry it through, but that they see the profits and want a share of them."

The formation of the construction company has brought again to the surface the question, Who is behind Mr. McDonald? At the outset he said that he intended to handle the matter alone, but he did not then see the difficulties which now beset him and make the project too large, it is said, for one man to handle. It was thought that Gen. Samuel Thomas might have been asked to join the company. Gen. Thomas said that no such offer had been made to him, but added that he would consider it when it was made. It was said after the meeting between the contractor, his lawyer, and the surety company representatives that a number of wealthy men had become interested in the scheme and that there was not a doubt that all difficulties in the way of building the tunnel would be soon removed

SURFACE LINES' ATTITUDE.

There was a rumor afloat yesterday to the effect that the attitude of the surety companies—at least the two that are known to be holding out more strongly, the American Surety and the Fidelity and Deposit—was caused by the street railroad interests, which are said to be opposed to the building of the tunnel. The Metropolitan Street Railway Company is credited with a wish to have the building of the tunnel postponed until the law should be modified so as to make it more advantageous for a corporation to operate it. The Directorate of the Metropolitan is strongly represented in the Directorate of the American Surety, and it was said yesterday that if it chose the street railway company could at any time bring such pressure to bear as would take the American Surety out of consideration. The same condition, practically, exists, it is pointed out, between the powers in the Fidelity and Casualty and the Third Avenue Railroad Company, and the latter can bring quite as much influence to bear on the former as can the Metropolitan toward the American Surety Company.

BIG BRIDGE OPPOSED.

West End and Real Estate Associations Declare It May Cost $25,000,000—Queens's Fight.

The Committee on Bridges and Tunnels of the Council yesterday gave a hearing to those opposed to the proposed bridge across the East River at Blackwell's Island, between Sixtieth Street, in the Borough of Manhattan and Charles Street, in Long Island City.

Representatives were present from the Real Estate Owners' Associations of the Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-second, and Twenty-third Wards; the West End Association, and other organizations. They presented a communication stating that a bridge at the point proposed was unnecessary; that five or six blocks of tenements on Manhattan Island, worth $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, would have to be taken; that the bridge might cost anywhere from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000, and that the location was not of such importance as to warrant such a heavy expenditure.

Speeches in opposition to the bridge were made by Adolph Bloch and G. T. Lorenz. The former presented figures showing the ultimate cost of the structure and the latter emphatically declared that Manhattan Island could not stand the expense, except at the risk of confiscating the property of residents of the Bronx.

Councilman Cassidy of Queens questioned both speakers and declared that the proposed bridge would not cost over $9,000,000, though the Bridge Department estimates its cost at $13,500,000. He also said that the rapid transit tunnel would cost $100,000,000. Several property owners of the Borough of Queens spoke in favor of the bridge. The hearing closed without a decision being reached.

LONG ISLAND WATER PLANT.

Mr. Coler Will Ask the Amount Due Mercantile Trust Company.

The purchase by the city of the plant of the Long Island Water Company, for which the Municipal Assembly in September last adopted a resolution authorizing an issue of $570,000 in bonds, will probably be completed within a short time. The bonds were sold on Oct. 3, but the money has remained in the Controller's office because of confusion in the company's financial condition.

Controller Coler wrote to the Corporation Counsel some time ago for an opinion directing him how to liquidate the indebtedness. The Corporation Counsel replied Thursday that the vital point appeared to be the rights of the Mercantile Trust Company as Trustee of the water company, to which the latter had executed in 1881 and 1885 two mortgages to secure the payment of its bonds. This obligation has been decided by the Supreme Court of Kings County to be $530,000 and accrued interest.

The Corporation Counsel advises that the best plan for the Controller is to communicate with the President of the Mercantile Trust Company regarding the amount due, with the understanding that it is the intent of the city to tender the amount to the trust company as the Trustee of the water company. The Controller will conform with Mr. Whalen's advice, and if the Mercantile Trust Company makes adequate reply will take immediate steps to conclude the purchase of the plant.

AGAINST SUFFOLK WATER PLAN.

Mr. Dalton Gets Letters of Protest—Mr. Coler Accused.

Commissioner Dalton of the Department of Water Supply yesterday announced that he had received a number of letters protesting against the passage of Senate Bill No. 24, introduced by Senator McCarren, and providing for the repeal of the Burr act of 1896, which prohibits the former City of Brooklyn from going into Suffolk County for a water supply. At its meeting last week the Board of Public Improvements indorsed the McCarren bill, and Commissioner Dalton said yesterday that at its next meeting an effort would be made to rescind that action.

In the letters which he has received, Mr. Dalton says, the charge is made that certain leaders of the Brooklyn Democratic organization have taken options on Suffolk County lands, and have thus acquired the water rights entailed. One of Mr. Dalton's correspondents accuses Controller Coler and Bridge Commissioner Shea, who were most active in killing the Ramapo job, of being in the combination to secure these rights in Suffolk County. The writer alleges that their purpose was not so much to save the city from a $200,000,000 contract as to fill their own pockets by "cornering" the supply upon which Brooklyn must in the future depend.

Both Mr. Coler and Mr. Shea yesterday denied any connection with such a scheme, if one exists, and also the existence of such a combination. The repeal of the Burr act, they said, was the only feasible way to provide against a water famine in Brooklyn, and no matter who owns the land, the city could get it by condemnation at reasonable cost.

LIQUOR DEALER SUES ORDER.

Suspended When He Changed Business, He Demands Reinstatement.

Members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and other fraternal insurance societies will watch with interest a case which will come up for trial in the Supreme Court of this county next month to test the right of such associations to enact retroactive laws under which a member, otherwise in good standing, may be deprived of the benefits of the order for engaging in a particular business.

The case is that of John Goett, formerly a member of Tremont Lodge, No. 238, A. O. U. W., against the order. At the annual session of the Grand Lodge of the order held in 1898 an amendment to the general laws was passed whereby all members who had engaged in the retail liquor trade after March of the previous year were suspended from the beneficiary agreements of the order. Mr. Goett, who joined Tremont Lodge as a hatter in March, 1896, was thus suspended last November, when it was learned that he had entered the retail liquor business. He has obtained a writ requiring the order to show cause why he should not be reinstated.

Park District Protective League.

A meeting of the property owners of the Hudson River District above the Harlem Ship Canal was held Thursday evening, and resulted in a vote to incorporate a regular association to be known as "The Park District Protective League," for the purpose of the preservation of this suburban district as a park residence district and for the further purpose of taking united action with reference to any proposed improvements. The district referred to includes the localities known as Spuyten Duyvil, Hudson Park, and Riverdale.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT

Directorate Strengthened by Election of Six New Members.

MR. ROSSITER'S POLICY UPHELD

No Direct Presence of Either Standard Oil or Vanderbilt Interests in the Board.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company's Directorate was strengthened at a stockholders' meeting in the company's offices yesterday by the election of the following board: Anthony N. Brady, Clinton L. Rossiter, Henry Siebert, John G. Jenkins, D. H. Valentine, T. S. Williams, H. C. Du Val, F. P. Olcott, Walter G. Oakman, Anson R. Flower, E. H. Harriman, August Belmont, and H. H. Porter. The last six mentioned are the new members of the board, and take the places of Theodore F. Jackson, W. C. Bryant, Seth L. Keeney, John D. Kelly, John Englis, and Charles D. Meneely.

At the meeting 434,304 out of a total of the 450,000 shares of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company were voted either personally or by proxy, the ticket being elected without opposition. The same board was selected for the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company, the total of 2,000 shares being cast. Contrary to expectation, Wall Street could not trace, in the influx of new blood, the presence of either Standard Oil or Vanderbilt interests except perhaps remotely indirect.

It is held in some quarters that the addition of H. H. Porter to the new board is perhaps the most important. Mr. Porter has been largely instrumental in the development of the Chicago and Northwestern, the Omaha and Rock Island systems, and has long been a factor in the Rock Island, and is now Chairman of the board in the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad. He was also prominent in the organization of the Federal Steel Company and other large enterprises, and is a warm friend of John D. Rockefeller.

Like President Rossiter and Vice President Du Val of the company, E. H. Harriman has been mentioned as a representative of the Vanderbilts, but this was denied. Mr. Harriman was one of the big security holders in the old Nassau system taken over by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, and his election confirms the rumor that he has been a recent heavy buyer of Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock. Mr. Harriman is Chairman of the Union Pacific Executive Committee.

August Belmont is regarded specially as a factor of the banking interests, but principally representing himself. Frederic P. Olcott, President of the Central Trust Company, was one of the members of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit voting Trust during its continuance, and his company was the depository of the securities. Messrs. Belmont, Olcott, and Oakman, together with A. R. Flower, represent large holdings.

A belief was expressed during the afternoon, when the result became known, that Mr. Oakman's election foreshadows a possible union of interests of Brooklyn Rapid Transit with the Long Island Railroad. Mr. Oakman is President of the Guaranty Trust Company, known as a Mutual Life institution, and is a factor in the Long Island Company, wherein the Mutual holdings are said to be large. Mr. Oakman was at the head of the syndicate which over two years ago bought the Austin Corbin estate's holdings in Long Island Railroad stock. Many expect to see in his election to the Directorate important traffic developments between the two companies in relation to the proposed Long Island Railroad tunnel under the East River.

Said one of the Directors yesterday: "There is no truth in all this talk about Vanderbilt, Rockefeller, or Whitney-Elkins-Widener interests being specially represented in this board. One might surmise that, because A. N. Brady is a member of the board, he represents the latter syndicate, but the surmise would have no more foundation in fact than any other of the baseless rumors floating about. The whole thing in a nutshell is that six heavy financial men have just come into the company, and their standing has added greatly to the confidence that the Street will have in the road. I do not think there will be any change in the officers at the election to take place next week."

Vice President Du Val, who will now serve his third term as a Director, was asked in view of the opposition that has been heard to President Rossiter's policy whether Mr. Rossiter would likely be superseded. "The vote to-day," said he, "is a vote of confidence in Mr. Rossiter in re-electing him a Director. He has developed into one of the best railroad men in the United States. It is more difficult to run a street railroad than a steam railroad. Mr. Rossiter has had countless problems to solve, conflicting interests to reconcile, local competition to confront and overcome, and now you see he has come out with flying colors."

President Rossiter said he felt gratified at the result of the election. "I do not care to say anything about our plans," he added, "except to mention that 97 per cent. of the stockholders voted as a unit, and this would seem to show faith in the present management."

Pending the announcement of the result of the meeting, the dealings in Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock on the Stock Exchange were conducted on a rather more cautious basis than for some time heretofore, though a drive at the stock shortly after noon by a few bear operators resulted in depressing the quotation several points, until it touched 70¾, as compared with the previous highest figure of 72.

When the change in the Directorate was announced another drive against the stock was made, but with little success, as Wall Street was inclined much to believe that the new members of the board added to the strength of the system. The closing quotation for the day was 71¾, a net loss from the previous day of a half point. Considering the general weakness of the market, friends of the company considered this slight recession of no consequence.

WRANGLE IN PULLAR CASE.

Bankruptcy Records of Alfred R. Page Admitted as Evidence.

Proceedings in the suit brought against ex-Gov. Waller of Connecticut and others, by Joseph W. Pullar, to set aside a contract by which he transferred to them a $50,000 interest in the will of his second wife, Johanna, opened before Justice Bischoff, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, with a wrangle between counsel over the admission of court records in the bankruptcy of Alfred R. Page, one of the defendants. These records were offered by W. D. Benjamin, counsel for Mr. Pullar, to prove he said, Mr. Page's character. He alleged that they showed that he had converted to his own use money which he had collected for clients. Justice Bischoff finally admitted the record, conditionally, to show that Mr. Page was insolvent at the time the Pullar contract was signed.

Mr. Benjamin then read from the schedules to show that Mr. Page swore that his liabilities were more than $15,000 while his assets were but $625.

William G. Leonard, a commercial traveler, then testified that he had known Pullar for a long time, and that at about the time of his wife's death he had not been sober for a year. "He drank as much as five ordinary men." He said that Pullar was irrational, and that at about the same time, he had expressed his intention of opening a hat store, an English chop house, and of erecting a big office building.

Agnes E. Bell of 193 West One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, corroborated the first Mrs. Pullar's testimony of the day before, concerning visits to ex-Gov. Waller at his office, and to a visit which they had paid to the second Mrs. Pullar. Mrs. Pullar then told Mrs. Johanna Pullar that Pullar was her husband, and that she was the mother of his children. Mrs. Johanna Pullar answered that she didn't care, that she was also his wife.

Jacob Hinrichs, a bartender in a saloon in West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, which Pullar frequented, testified that at about the time of the signing of the contract Pullar would often remain in the saloon drinking whisky from noon until evening. The bartender said he did not consider Pullar in his right mind.

James T. Farrell of Hartford then told of various legal measures preceding the signing of the contract, and an adjournment was taken until Monday.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"Of the interest we manufacturers take in the proposition to establish a Department of Commerce by the Government, with a Cabinet officer at the head of it, the public has no adequate idea," said the head of one of the largest malleable iron manufactories in this country yesterday. "Publication by the Bureau of Foreign Commerce of the reports of the Consuls in various parts of the world have perhaps led up to it. The manufacturer who would be up to date reads these as carefully as he does the reports of his own agents abroad, who sometimes miss the points the Consular Agent makes. If we manufacturers are not the backbone of the country, we are certainly one of the important vertebrae in it, as the agriculturists are another, and the miners still another. The farmer may not admit it, but it is a fact, all the same. All that we ask is that the Government, which is very paternal to the wheat and corn and cotton and tea grower, shall do as much for us at the public expense as it does for them. We want no more. Where is there a department with chemists and technical experts aiming to improve industrial processes as the experts of the Agricultural Department are doing in their experimentation for the farmer and wool grower and fruit raiser? I don't know of any. We do all that at our own expense in our factory laboratories. No one aims to instruct us as to what is best to do to increase our trade abroad in any such intelligent fashion as the Agricultural Department is doing for the farmers. We should have trained men—not demagogues or politicians—studying the labor problem in its many phases, in order to prevent strikes and block that contest between labor and capital that the demagogues are striving to bring about for their own ends. We should have experiment stations for original investigation into the problems that are constantly facing manufacturers, so that we may meet competition from abroad. We have no textile schools supported by the Government, as agricultural schools are supported and coddled. No one looks intelligently after the demands of foreign markets for us except in the accidental sort of fashion which the Consuls undertake without any Governmental suggestion and supervision. This desultory work that has been done is good, as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. What we want is the same sort of thing that the Agricultural Department is giving to the farmer, and we shall keep at it until we get it, for I have little hope that Congress will do anything for us this session. When we get that the tariff question, about which a lot of people are worrying unnecessarily, will take care of itself."

How thoroughly the war spirit pervades the community is very well indicated by a daily sight on Fifth Avenue. One of the art stores there has its large show window pretty well filled with war pictures, chief of which is that of the charge of the Collis Zouaves at Gettysburg, painted by a German artist. There are a half-dozen colored prints, mainly of cavalry charges. From earliest morning as long as light lasts there is a crowd in front of that window. Men and women of all social grades stand and study the pictures as if entranced by them. Better paintings, perhaps, are prominently shown in other windows, but these are ignored in favor of the pictures of carnage, which make them so timely now that every one is talking about the war in the Transvaal.

The limit seems to have been reached in its line at one of the continuous performance theatres, where there are a couple of performers, a man and woman, who vary the demand for that sort of entertainment by presenting a Yiddish cakewalk, making up like a couple from the east side ghetto. The performers are of the sort used as "fillers-in" between the more pretentious features. They sing and dance badly, yet their act seems to "go" tremendously with the occupants of the gallery.

"It seems rather strange to me," said a teacher in the public schools yesterday, "that no official action has been taken by either the Board of Education or the School Board concerning the death of James De Milt, who was for fifty-eight years continuously a teacher in the schools on the east side, and latterly in his career Principal of the Rivington Street School. Of French and Dutch Colonial ancestry, he was one of the most earnest as well as most modest men ever connected with our public school system. When he went on the east side to teach it was a semi-fashionable quarter, with a population almost wholly native American. He lived to see that character change entirely, so that when he retired, in 1895, the population was almost wholly foreign. If he had a particular abhorrence it was the mispronunciation of New York names, and there were none of his pupils who did not at least know how to pronounce them aright. Many of the residents would pronounce Goerck Street Garrick Street, and he was perpetually correcting students for that fault. He was averse to newspaper notoriety, and when the fiftieth anniversary of his service as a teacher was celebrated, in 1887, he said the only objection he had to it was that he would have to be paraded in the newspapers. The children of the east side lost a good friend when Mr. De Milt passed away."

"I wonder if the death of John P. Stockton will also mean the death of Edward Clifford," mused a New Jersey lawyer, yesterday. "Clifford was charged with the murder of Superintendent Wattson of the West Shore Railroad some years ago, and his defense was the last case in which Mr. Stockton figured in court, I believe. Mr. Stockton's defense was that the accused was insane at the time that the murder was committed, and that therefore the State had no right to hang him. Clifford was convicted and sentenced in spite of the very able presentation of the case. But in some way or other he has escaped paying the penalty up to this. Execution is now set for February, however, and I am wondering if the same powerful influences that have saved him will operate now that Mr. Stockton is dead."

John B. Bromley of Boston, who is just back from a visit to Costa Rica, was a visitor to Central Park yesterday and swapped stories for a time with "Jake" Cook, who has charge of the monkeys at the menagerie. "Do you know they make mighty good eating?" asked Bromley. Cook was horrified, and did not hesitate to express his disgust at the thought of eating one of the simians. "It was this way," explained the traveler. "Beef in any form, and beefsteaks in particular, are a scarce commodity down in the Central American States, and if you want flesh food you must take what you can get. Roasted monkey is a common item on the bill of fare in consequence, and take one properly cooked by a native who is an adept at cooking and it is better than even possum or coon, such as we do not hesitate to eat here in the States. It went against me at first, just as it did to eat skunk at a hunting dinner in New England a few years ago, but when the prejudice is overcome, any of these go all right. Monkeys are better than any rabbit I ever tasted, at all events." Then Cook went on to tell all about the intelligence of the monkeys, winding up with the declaration that most of his charges knew more than many of the visitors to the cages, and that he "would as soon think of eating the roasted body of a child as that of a monkey." That was a bit too much for Mr. Bromley, who when telling of his chat declared that what Cook had told him had impressed him so much that hereafter monkey will be eliminated from his bill of fare when he visits the Central American countries.

Stories of the destruction of the peach crop have not found their way into circulation to any extent as yet, though there was a dispatch recently published as coming from Maryland that was decidedly pessimistic in tone. But J. H. Hale of Connecticut, who is the owner of the largest peach orchard in Georgia, comes from that State with a story that the crop of peaches there the coming year promises to more than make amends for the failure of last year, unless, of course, there should be such another late frost as that of last Spring that blighted all the peach buds. Mr. Hale thinks there will be a late blossoming this Spring, and that therefore there is a better chance for the fruit than at any time since he has become familiar with the peach-growing of that State.

"I heartily wish there was some place in this country where they could raise grape fruit besides Florida," said a physician who was purchasing a few of the fruit that are now held at such fancy prices. "I believe in the fruit myself, and whenever I can get it always preface my breakfast with one. It seems to be the best fruit grown to correct minor stomach troubles. Before that freeze of 1895 I used to tell my patients to eat grape fruit with their breakfasts and I do it now with such as I know can afford to buy the fruit. Until that unfortunate freeze came and killed off the thousands of trees in Northern and Central Florida that had been grafted to this fruit, it was plenty. Now there is little to be had from that State, and what we get comes from the West Indian Islands, and is so expensive that it has been converted from a necessity to a luxury. Nor is it so good as was the Florida fruit, for it lacks something of the bitterness that made that fruit so tasty and helpful as a stomach tonic. The more of the quinine taste to the bitterness of the fruit the better it is, and the better the effects produced from a medicinal point of view."

FOCHT WILL CONTROVERSY.

Master in Chancery to Take Testimony in Jersey City.

Special Master in Chancery George T. Werts sat in Jersey City yesterday to hear testimony in the case of Carrie Buddington Focht, who asserts that she was the common-law wife of the late George Focht. Mr. Focht was the owner of the George Focht Iron Works, Hoboken, and died in that city June 20, 1898, leaving an estate valued at $500,000. His will was admitted to probate July 1, 1898. The bulk of the estate was divided among Focht's six adult children by his first wife, who died in 1893. Then came this clause:

"I give to my friend, Mrs. Carrie Buddington Focht, all my household furniture, wearing apparel, and jewelry; also $500 in cash, and an annuity of $100 a month during her life; besides the use of certain parts of the house at 102 Adams Street, Hoboken, during her natural life, or so long as she remains a widow."

This provision, the will stated, was to be in lieu of any dower right she might claim. The children accepted the terms, but after they had probated the will, Mrs. Focht refused to waive her dower right and brought suit to establish her claim that she was Focht's common-law wife. The children filed an answer to the effect that while Mrs. Focht presided over their father's house after the death of their mother, she was never his wife.

In the absence of the witnesses summoned yesterday, the will was read by Mrs. Focht's counsel, and the hearing was then adjourned until next Wednesday.

AGAINST SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Riverside Park Taxpayers Begin Suits to Restrain the Commission.

Two suits have been brought in the Supreme Court to restrain the erection of the proposed Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial in Riverside Park or its vicinity.

Mary Llewellyn Parsons, a taxpayer, has, through her attorneys, Young, Ver Planck & Prince of 149 Broadway, begun an action for an injunction against Mayor Van Wyck, the President of the Park Board, Recorder Goff, Controller Coler, and Joseph A. Goulden, the Chairman of the Memorial Committee of the Grand Army.

Mrs. Parsons says that the erection of the monument is contemplated at Riverside Park or near the foot of East Eighty-ninth Street, and asks that the defendants be enjoined from accepting any contract for its erection or from expending any money belonging to the city for such a monument.

Mrs. Elizabeth S. Clark of Cooperstown, Otsego County, another taxpayer, has brought a similar suit against the city to enjoin it from accepting bids for the erection of the monument and from awarding a contract.

The three members of the Monument Commission forming the sub-committee assembled at the Arsenal yesterday afternoon, and they were at once served with the injunctions. The members of the committee are President Clausen, Recorder Goff, and Joseph A. Goulden. The other members of the Monument Commission received notices of the injunction.

The sub-committee opened the bids for the erection of the monument. The bids in order, beginning with the lowest, were as follows: John H. Deeves, $210,826; James D. Murphy, $211,[illegible]4; Norcross Brothers, $230,370; Eugene [illegible]tilhon, $239,134; United Engineering and Contracting Company, $253,420; National Contracting Company, $285,000.

In Mrs. Clark's affidavit she declares that the monument is to be so constructed that it will interfere with the flow of light and air and obstruct the view and prospect from her home. She says, also, that it will constitute a breach of the trust under which Riverside Park and Riverside Drive are held.

Prayer Meeting Anniversary.

During the religious interest awakened in New York by the visit of Moody and Sankey in 1875, the West Side Noonday Prayer Meeting was organized at 281 Greenwich Street. The first meeting was held Jan. 26, 1876. The twenty-fourth anniversary of the prayer meeting was celebrated yesterday. Among the speakers were William P. Hall, known as the "millionaire evangelist"; the Rev. D. V. Gwillym, the Rev. Walter A. A. Gardner of the Church of the Holy Comforter for Seamen, the Rev. Dr. J. F. Morgan of the Park Reformed Church, Jersey City, and Joseph B. Maxfield, who led the meeting. Mr. Maxfield said that the service had been conducted daily, except Sundays and holidays, without an exception during the whole twenty-four years.

Molineux Juror Brown Improving.

Manheim Brown, the tenth juror in the Molineux trial, whose illness has kept the trial at a standstill for the last three days, was announced yesterday to be in a fair way to recovery. His physician, Dr. Sigmund Tynberg, says that he is resting easily, and that he will probably be able to resume his seat in the jury box on Monday.

The Baking Powder Story

may be told in a few words. A prevalent idea among manufacturers and producers recently has been that it was a fine thing for them to get together, mark up prices and force enormous profits at the expense of the consumer. It was a fine idea—for the combines; that is, the trusts; but there has been mighty little fun in it for the consumer.

As it was in many other industries so it was in the baking powder industry. A baking powder trust was formed, and it has been a fine thing for the members of the trust, but the consumer pays the fiddler.

SOLAR BAKING POWDER

is NOT made by a trust. The manufacturers of this absolutely pure cream of tartar powder think that the trust business has been overdone. They are content with the ordinary profits of the business world. They want to make money—everybody does who has any sense; but they do not want and they do not try to make extortionate profits. So they make an absolutely PURE cream of tartar baking powder, and they sell it for EIGHT CENTS A POUND LESS than the Baking Powder Trust asks for powders which do not cost so much to make.

Here is the whole story. What is YOUR idea?

MANHATTAN TAX HEARING.

Arguments on the Appeal from Justice Nash's Order.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court was occupied during its entire session yesterday in hearing argument upon the appeal of the Manhattan Railway Company from an order made by Justice Nash quashing a writ of certiorari and affirming the action of the Commissioners of Taxes in assessing the company's capital stock for taxation for 1894 at $15,526,800.

The company, which was represented by ex-Judge John F. Dillon, Julien T. Davies, and Brainard Tolles, contended that the actual value of the Manhattan's capital stock was to be ascertained by a direct valuation of its assets and liabilities, and not by presumptions or intricate theories founded upon the payment of dividends or the market value of its shares. The sums paid to abutting owners as land damages and costs, it was asserted, did not represent any existing taxable property of the company, and no part of its bonded indebtedness was contracted or incurred in the purchase of non-taxable property or securities. All this indebtedness was, therefore, legally deductible in determining the actual value of the capital stock. It was contended that the company's capital stock, after deducting the assessed value of its real estate, and the shares of other corporations owned by it and taxable on their capital stock, had no value for the purpose of assessment and taxation in 1894.

It was contended on behalf of the Tax Commissioners, represented by Corporation Counsel Whalen and William L. Turner and James M. Ward, that the decision of the Special Term presented an equitable solution of the questions raised in the litigation.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The Brokerage Committee of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange, at its meeting yesterday confined itself chiefly to details of the work of revising the list of licensed brokers. Several charges against brokers for alleged violation of the rules of the Exchange were taken up, and one brokerage certificate was revoked.

A petition from fire insurance agents in Staten Island is being prepared for presentation to the New York Fire Insurance Exchange at its next meeting, asking that the Borough of Richmond be added to the territory now under the jurisdiction of the Exchange. It is thought doubtful whether the Jersey City agents, who wish to obtain the separation Hudson County, N. J., from the Exchange, will endeavor at that time to get the subject before the Exchange.

James H. Brewster, assistant United States manager of the Lion Fire Insurance Company of London and the Scottisch Union and the National Insurance Company of Edinburgh, and J. Hugh Middleton of Holitcher & Middleton of London, who has been in this country in connection with the entrance of the Moscow Fire Insurance Company and the St. Petehsburg Insurance Company of Russia, will sail for England to-day on the Campania. It is understood that the Russian Reinsurance Company, which was considering the advisability of coming into this country with one of the other Russian companies, will take no further steps in this direction at the present time.

The heavy fire losses of 1899, together with the present unregulated condition of suburban fire insurance rates, which were discussed Thursday by members of the Fire Underwriters' Eastern Union, may, according to a number of prominent underwriters yesterday, lead to the issuance of a call for the companies to consider the possibility of re-establishing a suburban rating compact. The question as to issuing such a call will probably be determined by the degree of success experienced in obtaining, within the next few days, assurances of support from companies, which stand outside of the membership of the old Suburban Fire Underwriters' Association.

THE GREATEST QUESTION.

The violation of the Constitution involved in the vote to exclude Congressman ROBERTS from his seat is a matter of grave interest, but it is not the most momentous of the questions raised by the reckless action of the House.

The real question—the greatest question—is, What possible defense have we against the overslaughing of the law and the lawmakers by a public opinion perfectly uninstructed, half mad, generated by that psychical contagion that carries thoughtless impulses through crowds and rising in the end to a menace that only the well-balanced Congressional mind could resist?

Law, justice, and the "sanctity of the home" would have been faithfully conserved and regarded had the House admitted ROBERTS to take the oath and his seat and then expelled him. By that course, too, the Constitution would have been respected. But the vast mob bawled for the shutting out of ROBERTS, and he was shut out. The women of America who largely made up the mob were for the most part absolutely incapable of understanding why the Constitution should be permitted to stand in the way of inflicting immediate and exemplary disgrace upon a man who had married several wives.

Occasions of this nature are unlikely to arise, fortunately, but when they do arise, where is the safeguard?

ATTEMPTING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

One of the reforms recommended by the Joint Committee on Taxation is salutary and worthy of support. There is a well-nigh universal agreement, we suppose, that it would be wise to provide means for raising all the revenue needed by the State by indirect taxation, in order to do away with the scandals of the State Board of Equalization. When the taxes raised on assessed valuations are devoted wholly to local purposes and the State gets its revenues from inheritance taxes, corporation taxes, excise taxes, and the like, no county will have reason to complain that property is assessed at a lower rate in other counties to its detriment. The only persons who will oppose this reform are the predatory rural statesmen who are always devising ways to take the burden of taxation off the farming counties and put it on New York.

So, too, the recommendation that mortgages be relieved of taxation for local purposes finds many supporters, who are well pleased with a project of law that offers to take off the high local tax on mortgages and substitute a State tax of only one-half of 1 per cent. It is argued that the declaration that it is the established policy of the State of New York to tax mortgages at the fixed and known amount of one-half of 1 per cent. and no more will attract investment money to the State which would not have come here under the present law. The easy reply to this, of course, is that a declaration that it is the policy and determination of the State of New York not to tax mortgages at all would attract still more foreign capital for bond and mortgage investment.

The discussion of the proposed mortgage tax reveals not only wide difference of opinion, but also the unpreparedness of the legislative mind for the consideration of the difficult and exceedingly complex subject of taxation. This has been exhibited in many ways, among others by Mr. STRANAHAN'S effort to prove that the mortgage tax will be paid by the lender of the money, not by the borrower. We have already shown by references to the actual experience of other States under similar laws, as well as to our own experience, that this theory is delusive. Yet somebody has induced Assemblyman ROBERTS to introduce "by request" a bill to make the mortgagee pay the tax in spite of himself. This is to be done by the ingenious device of a provision of law permitting the borrower, or mortgageor, to deduct from his payments of principal or interest whatever sum he may have paid for taxes "more than should have been paid on account of indebtedness upon such estate." This is an attempt to tax the borrower upon his equity in the estate and the lender on the mortgage, which would be a fair arrangement if it were practicable.

The objection to it is that it is trying to override natural law by statute law. The 16 to 1 delusion is of the same nature. It can be laid down as a fundamental proposition that the lender will not pay the tax if he can avoid it; in the vast majority of cases he can avoid it, the law to the contrary notwithstanding. The reason of this is that in loan transactions it is usually the borrower who is the more anxious of the two. The money lender commonly has a great many loans outstanding. It makes no very great difference to him whether he concludes any particular transaction; accordingly, he can afford to hold out for a high rate and for a stipulation that the borrower shall pay all taxes. It is easy to make stipulations of that nature that will evade any law. The borrower, on the other hand, is generally in urgent need of the money. Often he must have it to prevent the loss of what he already has or to increase his gains by new enterprises. He is generally willing to give the market rate, and that is what the owner of the money thinks he can get at that time. Experience proves that the borrower will assume the tax if the lender insists on it. He is not independent; the lender is much more nearly so.

Again, Mr. STRANAHAN argues that in the rural districts the lender of money on farm mortgages will doubtless be willing to assume the tax because the prevailing rate in such transactions is 6 per cent. The farmer, he says, even at that rate borrows money only "with extreme difficulty." This difficulty, of course, is the measure of the reluctance of the lender to let the farmer have his money. The high rate also measures this reluctance. Does Mr. STRANAHAN suppose that there is any virtue in his tax bill which will make the reluctant lender glad to assume the one-half of 1 per cent. tax, thereby getting only 5½ per cent. interest on his farm loan where he now readily gets 6 per cent.?

The general purpose of the Joint Committee's bill is commendable. Some of its specific provisions are sound. But it is impossible to discuss such a measure, general in its nature, without having some regard to its underlying principles, and the principles of taxation which have been followed in this bill are not sound and cannot be made sound by ignoring them.

PRESIDENT CALLAWAY'S VIEW.

The President of the New York Central Railroad is quite justified in coming to the defense of the policy of his company against the "frontal attack" of the Schieren commission, and he shows more tactical intelligence than the commission in seeking, as recommended by the American Attaché to Gen. METHUEN a "way round."

It is true that he practically concedes about all that can be alleged against the policy of the company as to differentials when he says that "they were the outgrowth of competitive conditions which they were expected to modify, and were agreed to on no other basis." But most persons would hardly recognize that this is a concession of the essential fact, and Mr. CALLAWAY proceeds promptly to execute his flank movement by calling attention to the figures which show that the trade of New York in cereals has not fallen off within the past few years in proportion to the general total, and by attempting to show that the grain trade can be handled by the railroads at less than the cost of the interest and maintenance of the proposed enlarged canals.

This is a movement by the flank, but by no means around the flank, of his opponents. He bases his argument solely on the grain trade, which is only about one-sixth of the present traffic of the canal and one-tenth of that of the railroads, and may well be a much smaller fraction in the future. Moreover, the traffic with reference to which the plan of the Greene committee is proposed is that of the future as it can fairly be estimated according to known facts. Of this traffic the railroads will always get their share, but the total will be far greater if the canal is fitted as proposed by the committee to do its work under modern conditions.

We do not agree with the Schieren commission in its recommendations, and we are persuaded that the Central Railroad would gladly abolish the differentials if it could. But we are also convinced that the canal can be made to put the State of New York in a position enormously to increase its trade independently of what the railroads can or will do.

THE RECEPTION OF THE CANAL REPORT

The report of the Canal Committee sent to the Legislature by Gov. ROOSEVELT on Thursday is very favorably received by the press of this city, and as this city would have to bear the greater part of the expenditure recommended this is an important fact.

A significant point in the comments of the New York papers is that there is in them almost no trace of political feeling. The World, for instance, says:

> To regain the lost ground and insure the future $60,000,000 are necessary. That is a large sum of money, but it is a trifle in comparison with the mighty stake of commercial supremacy that turns with its withholding or putting out.
>
> This cannot be made a party question. It too nearly affects the prosperity of every citizen of the Empire State.

The Journal, which is more aggressively partisan than any other paper on the Democratic side, says:

> The purpose is laudable. The canals should be deepened and widened, and our commerce should be protected. But how does Gov. ROOSEVELT propose to protect the people's money?
>
> Can he give a better guarantee than was offered in 1896 that the hard-won taxes of the people given into the hands of ALDRIDGE will not be passed through the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel later on?
>
> It will be a serious matter if Gov. ROOSEVELT does not take note of the fact that, while ALDRIDGE has been deposed from the head of the Canal Department, the rest of the same old crowd that scattered the people's money broadcast are still on the pay rolls of the State, holding practically their former positions.
>
> Let us have the canal improvements. Sixty million dollars is an enormous sum, but it will not be begrudged if it is honestly spent. But turn out the thieves first.

The Evening Post, frankly revising its "preconceived opinion," declares the recommendations of the committee "wise and proper." It thus sums up "the great question" presented to the people of the State:

> Will you avail yourselves of the advantages that nature bestowed upon you; will you preserve the supremacy that your fathers bought for you when they opened the great waterway to the West; will you keep what you have got; or will you let all these things pass away, lose half your property, and sink into decrepitude and decay? To these questions there should be only one answer. The cost of the work seems large. It rises to $60,000,000, but the losses that confront us if we do nothing are obviously much greater. They cannot be computed in exact figures, but they must be many times the cost of the proposed work on the canal.

The Commercial Advertiser, which, we suppose, may be taken to represent partisan Republicanism, slightly sweetened and diluted, is unqualified in its indorsement:

> The Governor, in the brief and luminous message which he sends with it to the Legislature, gives these recommendations his cordial approval. Whether the people of the State, who are to pass judgment upon them, will do the same is a debatable question, but we are confident that if all the facts in the case are brought home to their minds they will give their approval by a decisive majority.

The Sun is kindly but philosophic, after its fashion with matters of large import in their earlier stages:

> The subject is one of such great importance, and the facts which must serve as the basis for action upon it are so many and so intricate, that the public attitude in the matter should be one of careful reflection rather than hasty judgment. The matter will, of course, be fully debated in the Legislature, and if action favorable to the proposed improvement is there taken it must be thrashed out thoroughly by the people on the stump and at the polls.

The Tribune lays especial stress on the absolute necessity of placing work of this sort and magnitude firmly on the basis of the merit system, and this position is clearly and emphatically taken also by The Post and The Commercial. It must be remembered that the committee makes this a condition precedent to any action whatever. It is not that Gen. GREENE and his associates are particularly interested in the civil service reform or have any especial fondness for its theories. They are simply business men with great experience and of great ability, and they see and say that if a work of this sort is not done on the business principle underlying the merit system it cannot be done at all.

THE INVASION OF FRANKFORT.

It is not pleasant for any American to read that a contested election in any State of the Union is followed by the appearance of "the people," in their primary capacity, to the number of a thousand, with arms in their hands and a willingness to use them.

The notion that this uprising is spontaneous is of course absurd. It has evidently been carefully prepared as part of a political scheme for the purpose of influencing the action of the Legislature. The pretense that men who have "come up" from half a dozen counties to the capital have been persuaded by "the Republican leaders" to go down again without making any progress toward their object is also not easily credible.

It does not follow that either the men themselves or the political managers who arranged their coming are in the wrong. The only way of meeting fraud which has managed to intrench itself in the control of the machinery of government may be by force. That there has been a deliberate attempt to take possession of the State of Kentucky against the vote of its people is believed by a great number of people outside of the State as well as within it. There is not a Kentuckian who is not absolutely crazed by partisanship who has any doubt that GOEBEL and his gang were beaten at the polls. If such a gang, under the lead of the most desperate of all the bosses, has control of machinery by which it can nullify the will of the people and falsify the results of the election, it is a fair presumption that nothing but physical fear will prevent it from trying to do it. To infuse that fear is the object of the gathering of armed men at Frankfort.

Those who are really responsible for this deplorable result are the men who have undertaken to do by fraud what they can be prevented from doing only by force. If that is really the political condition of Kentucky, it is a condition very shameful to the Commonwealth which has allowed it to come about that there is no choice but between fraud and force. In that case it would be difficult to blame men who took the only means in their power to prevent the triumph of fraud. But it seems out of the question that there should not be in Kentucky enough of honesty and reason and civilization to prevent the people from being shut up to such a choice.

BULLER AND LADYSMITH.

The exploit of Gen. WARREN in capturing and then abandoning Spion Kop recalls the tactics of that King of France who "marched up a hill and then marched down again." Gen. BULLER is "sorry to say" that WARREN has abandoned the position, as he may well be. Because Gen. BULLER had already given Gen. WARREN'S authority for believing that the capture of the hill had rendered the Boer position untenable.

Not only must this flattering unction be removed from the British mind, but it is proved that the position thus boasted of is untenable for the British. Why this should not have been ascertained before taking it, instead of afterward, is an addition to the puzzles of the war. So far as the reports go it does not seem that the British have been beaten out of it. The list of casualties forwarded by Gen. BULLER does not seem to refer to those suffered either in taking or holding the hill, but to those of the previous engagement. What seems to have happened is that the British General, after he had taken the hill with a surprisingly and suspiciously slight resistance, found that he had altogether overestimated the strategical value of it, that he could not effectively use his own artillery from it, while the Boers could effectively use theirs against it. In that case, after undergoing one day's shelling, to which he could not reply, undoubtedly he acted judiciously in withdrawing from it, as he had taken it, under cover of darkness. But the wording of Gen. BULLER'S dispatch may be taken to indicate that he does not agree with the judgment of Gen. WARREN nor approve his action.

It is quite certain that, if the abandonment of the position was not a blunder, the capture of it was, and vice versa. Why should the British commanders keep on making such blunders? Their best excuse must be that they are ignorant of the country they are operating in, and can obtain no trustworthy information. There is probably a good deal in that. The farmers of Natal seem to be in as complete sympathy with the Boers as the farmers of the northern part of Cape Colony and as willing to mislead them, so far as they can do so without risking their own necks. This is one of the disadvantages against which the British have had all along to contend, and will still have to contend.

The relation of this latest failure to the fate of Ladysmith is what gives it its chief importance. For the present Gen. BULLER is baffled and disabled from doing anything for the relief of the place. On the other hand Dr. LEYDS, the very capable agent of the Transvaal in Europe, expressed the belief a fortnight ago that the Boers did not want Ladysmith, that the garrison, if captured, would be an elephant on their hands, since they would have to subsist it, and that to "immobilize" Gen. WHITE'S force was much better business than to capture it. There is force in this suggestion, although it was taken in England to be a cry of "sour grapes." There is still more force in it if we assume that Gen. BULLER has been taken out of his way by the necessity of trying to relieve Ladysmith, and that he is moving along a line of greater resistance than he would meet if his problem were simply the invasion of the Transvaal. But, however it may be on purely military grounds, the capture of Ladysmith and its garrison would be by far the heaviest blow at British prestige which has been dealt, even in a war which has dealt so many. The effect on Europe of the surrender of Sir GEORGE WHITE would be comparable, if not equal, to the effect of the surrender of BURGOYNE.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—There is a common impression that fast trains are run by the railways at a cost considerably greater than the revenues they bring in, and that though it is done chiefly under the compulsion of reluctantly cruel competitors, yet there is an element of corporate generosity in it, and the traveling public, since they profit materially in convenience and otherwise by something for which they do not fully pay, owe a very appreciable debt of gratitude to the roads that maintain these trains. It is more than a little surprising that the first manifestation of doubt as to the truth of this theory about fast trains—the first, that is, which we have ever noticed—appears on the editorial page of The Railroad Gazette, a paper not much given, naturally enough, to the promulgation of heretical doctrines in regard to the business of transportation. The Gazette does not go so far as to deny that slow passenger trains are more profitable than very rapid ones, but it does assert that the difference is considerably less than is frequently declared, and still more frequently assumed to be the case. Commenting on some statistics presented at the last meeting of the Western Railway Club, as proof of the extravagance of a high-speed passenger service, The Gazette says that a number of the items "may really be offset in one way and another, so that the net saving attending a reduction in passenger speeds from sixty to thirty miles an hour might not result in any very important difference in the actual cost of hauling trains." There can be no question, the writer adds, "that the first cost and maintenance charges for track, bridges, and rolling stock are greater for fast passenger service than for trains run at moderate speeds, but the risk of accidents and greater chances for delays may be offset largely by the greater vigilance of all departments, better materials and construction and increased efficiency of operating officers. It is a question whether a good deal is not gained by a few fast trains in the way of keeping every one awake."

—A thrilling episode of the Philippine war is well described by Lieut. G. R. D. MACGREGOR of the Twenty-sixth Volunteers in a letter published by The Boston Journal. It seems that the Lieutenant, while at the head of thirty men near the town of Jaro, wherever that may be, unexpectedly came upon an intrenched body of 500 insurgents. After the absurd but very charming fashion of American officers, he immediately ordered a charge. "I led my men," he writes, "under a tremendous fire from the enemy across an open field and through a rice field up near their position, and did not lose a man. Bullets cut our sleeves, went through our blouses, stuck in our blanket rolls, cut leggin strings, broke bayonet scabbards, and yet only one of the men got wounded, and he was shot through the foot." And the Filipinos? The Lieutenant noticed them, too. "They were surprised and excited, and I determined to keep on in a series of short rushes, just as though the rest of our men were close at hand and not miles away. So I yelled 'Forward!' and on we went and dropped fifteen or twenty yards nearer; then, after watching our movements twice or thrice and seeing we were on the aggressive, they suddenly put a white flag out over their earthwork, and the whole outfit scampered away." In explanation of the absence of casualties among men who had charged a much superior force of well-armed enemies, the Lieutenant says: "It was one of God's miracles." From which one can safely infer that he didn't get his name by act of Legislature, and that he will never be a member of the Anti-Imperialist League.

—That ingenious resident of Long Island to whom credit was given yesterday for having constructed in 1866 "the first automobile that was successfully run as a public conveyance" will apparently have to be content with whatever fame there is in recognition as not the first to demonstrate the practicability of this kind of vehicle, but the first to do it in America. A Brooklyn reader of THE TIMES has sent us a page from The Mechanics' Magazine and Register of Inventions, published at 35 Wall Street in 1834, and containing an illustrated description of a steam omnibus which for some time before had been conveying passengers between Finsbury Square and Pentonville, London. The picture shows a far from ill-looking covered conveyance, with the machinery resting on the rear wheels, well out of the way, and the accompanying text declares that the contrivance had not only done its work safely, but had been a source of considerable profit to its inventor. Painted on the side of this—perhaps—oldest of automobiles was the curious name "Autopsy." That was a title hardly likely to inspire possible passengers with cheerful thoughts, and why it was chosen is certainly a mystery. But "autopsy" is a queer word, anyhow, and rarely, indeed, finds itself employed in service for which its etymology fits it. A steam carriage comes about as near to being an "autopsy" as does the dismemberment of a dead body.

—It is not less painful than surprising to find in The Boston Transcript a question which more than hints at lack of a kind of knowledge hitherto supposed to be almost superabundant in every Bostonian brain. The Transcript first inquires why "front" is not as good a word as "frontal." That is a question to which we haven't the slightest objection, though the idea that there is any difference in the merits of the two words had never suggested itself to us. They often mean much the same thing, and so far as we are aware the choice between them in such cases can be safely left to the dictation of euphony. But our indifference vanishes when The Transcript asks: "We do not say a 'rearal' attack; then why a 'frontal'?" Can it possibly be that our enormously esteemed contemporary doesn't know why? With all the culture of an Athens but recently modern to draw upon, was there nobody to tell it why the termination "al" blends harmoniously with "front" and makes a brutal and barbaric discord with "rear"? Why, even in Chicago there are lots and lots of men who wouldn't have to think a minute more than half an hour to evolve a correct solution of the problem which The Transcript seems to regard as unanswerable, and in Brooklyn, Hoboken, and Kokomo even the kindergartners would blush if they couldn't give offhand a good reason for condemning "rearal." We are really worried about The Transcript—yes, and about Boston, too. Both of them are evidently in a bad way.

THE TAXATION OF MORTGAGES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As counsel to Senator Stranahan's Joint Committee on Taxation, and in the interest of open and fair discussion, I have the honor to request your assistance in bringing sharply and clearly before the public the true issues involved in the recommendation of the committee as to the taxation of mortgages.

By much the larger part of the comments which thus far have been made are the sort of criticism which would be appropriate if property in mortgages had heretofore been exempt from taxation, and it were now proposed to tax mortgages as a new subject. This is not the fact. Mortgages are now, and always have been, taxable in this State, and they must continue so until there is a marked change in public opinion throughout the State. It is open to anybody who pleases to argue that mortgages ought not to be taxed at all, but his arguments would not be germane to a decision upon the committee's recommendation unless he goes further and shows (1) that the abolition of mortgage taxation is feasible in the present state of public sentiment, and (2) that the evils due to the necessity of equalizing assessments of realty between the counties can be done away with, the onerous burdens now pressing upon real estate owners lightened, and the revenue needed by the State supplied by some other tax.

Under the present law mortgages are taxable at a cruelly high rate, equivalent to from 40 to 60 per cent. of the income, but the methods of collection are so lax that very little revenue is realized. The committee's proposition is to change the rate so as to make it low, and to change the methods of collection so as to make them certain.

What will be the result if this recommendation is adopted? Will existing conditions be changed for the better? Will the classes of the people who are now overburdened by taxation be relieved? Will the classes of the people who do not now bear their fair share be compelled to yield some part of their unjust advantage? It would seem that these are the questions to which the discussion ought to be narrowed by everybody who is not prepared to advocate the entire abolition of the mortgage tax.

Who are the overburdened classes of the people, and how does the committee suppose they will be benefited so that their condition under the law proposed would be better than it is now?

Widows and orphans and other beneficiaries of trust estates invested in mortgages are one overburdened class. They have to pay the present high tax. It is plain that the proposed law would afford them great and instantaneous relief. Instead of losing half of their income, they would have to give up only a comparatively small part of it—on the average probably less than 10 per cent. To be sure, the members of this class are relatively few, but it is a shame for a civilized State to neglect them as New York has done hitherto.

Another overburdened class is made up of the owners of real estate. Plainly, the proposed law will benefit them by relieving them from about $10,000,000 which they pay under the present law for State purposes.

Another overburdened class is made up of the borrowers on real estate security. The committee believes that such borrowers, in addition to the benefit which they will enjoy in common with all other real estate owners, will receive a peculiar benefit, arising out of the fact, which is established by satisfactory evidence, that the liability to heavy taxation under the present law affects the average interest rate on mortgage loans to an extent of over one-half of 1 per cent. The influx of capital into mortgage investments, which holds aloof because of the present onerous tax liability, will reduce the average interest rate more than one-half of 1 per cent., so that, notwithstanding Brundage contracts and other similar stipulations, borrowers will be benfited.

Who are the classes who, under the present law, do not bear their just share of the burden, and how will the proposed change compel them to give up their unjust advantage? They are, first, those who, under the present law, are exempt from taxation, and, second, those who are willing to take the risk of being taxed, relying upon the defective machinery for enforcing personal property taxation, and taking advantage of many modes of legal evasion. The advantages which these people possess over other citizens are measured by that element in the interest rate which is due to the liability to tax under the present law. On the evidence that element is more than one-half of 1 per cent. To this extent the present law, while ineffective as a revenue raiser, makes the whole community pay tribute to particular classes. If the committee's bill becomes law, there will be no exemptions and no opportunity for evasion, and there will therefore be no element of compensation for risk or special privilege value in the interest rate, and the whole effect of the law will be to raise revenue for the common benefit of all the people.

These are the true issues. Upon them attention ought to be concentrated. Nobody having at heart the interests of the whole people, rather than the interests of privileged classes, will evade them or seek to darken counsel in regard to them.

An attentive consideration of what has been said will show that one of the most important questions is as to the effect of the present law. That is largely a question of evidence and of expert opinion. Inclosed herewith is a memorandum of some of the evidence on this subject which ought to be spread before the people, so that they may be able to judge of its weight.

MEMORANDUM.

I.—Mr. J. Harsen Rhoades and the Presidents of four New York City savings banks appeared before the committee, and all of them concurred in the following statements by Mr. McMahon and Mr. Rhoades:

(Question by Committee's Counsel)—I want to get your estimate of the effect of the present law. I construe your answers to be, gentlemen, this: That the present law, which makes these mortgages liable to 2½ per cent., while it is not executed so as to catch all mortgages, but only catches a few, yet the liability to the tax has an effect on the rate of interest of over half of 1 per cent.

(Answer by Mr. McMahon)—I believe that to be thoroughly truthful and correct.

(Answer by Mr. Rhoades)—I think if you were to ask a hundred men accustomed to dealing in securities, active in financial affairs, I think you would get that as an answer.

II.—Mr. Frank Bailey, Vice President of the Title Guaranty and Trust Company, testified to the committee that since the abolition of a mortgage tax in Massachusetts, it has been found, from the savings banks records, that the bulk of investments on bond and mortgage are at 3½ per cent., and that in Pennsylvania the result of putting a single tax of four mills on mortgages was that the tax and the interest rate together were less than the interest rate had been before.

III.—It is matter of common knowledge that bonds which are exempt from taxation sell at prices which give a net interest return on the investment fully 1 per cent. lower than taxable bonds which are equally secure. It was shown to the committee that when State bonds were offered for sale there was a difference in the bids equal to nine-tenths of 1 per cent. in the interest rate, according as the bonds were or were not to be exempt from taxation.

IV.—Since the presentation of the committee's report to the Legislature, Mr. Morgenthau of the Central Realty Bond and Trust Company and Mr. Loew of the German-American Real Estate Title Guaranty Company are reported to have expressed the following opinions:

My Mr. Morgenthau—I believe that if it were distinctly understood to-day that such a tax would be all the tax to be imposed on mortgages they would take the same position in the eyes of investors as city bonds or United States bonds, which are selling on a basis of less than 3 per cent.

By Mr. Loew—The more I study it, the better I like it. I believe it would be a good thing for real estate, because it would bring in millions now withheld from bond and mortgage investments through fear of the present uncertain taxation. With a fixed low rate like the one proposed, and the assurance that it would be the only tax, vast sums of money would be set free in loans on real property. I believe that the result would be a reduction of the rate of interest to 3½ per cent. on gilt-edged loans. I don't think the rate would in any event exceed 4 per cent. Real property would be relieved and benefited. I do not accord with the view that the passage of the proposed bill would result in a general calling of mortgages held by savings banks and trust companies. Neither do I believe that it would cause a general insertion into mortgages of the Brundage clause providing that the mortgagor should pay the tax. If the trust companies and banks called in their mortgage loans as the result of this law, what would they do with their money? If they cannot get 5 per cent., they will take 4 per cent.; if they cannot get 4 per cent., they will take 3½ per cent., and they will be glad to get it. All this, in my opinion, will benefit real estate in a far-reaching way.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. BRYAN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was with astonishment bordering upon amazement that the writer saw an editorial in this morning's issue of THE TIMES charging Mr. Bryan with silence on the money question and calling him a political trimmer. This charge is puerile and unfounded, altogether unworthy of so valuable a paper as THE TIMES. Mr. Bryan, if I am rightly informed, made no public speeches while in New York, but never ceased to reiterate again and again to newspaper correspondents and others his unchanged and unchangeable views on the money question. Many of the papers are even now bewailing the fact that Mr. Bryan refused to be silent. If THE TIMES is really anxious to find an example of political trimming, why not go back to the historic silence of Mr. McKinley on bimetallism, just prior to his election? Mr. Bryan is not obliging enough to furnish such an example. We know he ought to, but he won't, and what is THE TIMES going to do about it? It is Mr. Bryan's magnificent fearlessness of purpose and integrity of character that are rallying around him devoted adherents in support of his ideas and ideals, adherents who have never before been interested in politics. He has lifted politics into the region of ethics, where high-minded men and women can follow him. This is to do a good service to humanity. It is really immaterial whether such a man is President or not. The ordinary man can rise no higher in his ideals. The great man will sink no lower.

The writer finds it difficult to understand THE TIMES'S hostility to Mr. Bryan. Has it allowed its prejudice to obscure its clarity of vision? Nothing is ever gained by injustice or misrepresentation. Turn as strong a light upon Mr. Bryan as you will—the stronger the better—for his nobility stands out in higher relief against a background of misrepresentation. Magnificent in soul and purpose, unselfish and with a wonderful capacity for sacrifice, with a magnetic temperament that draws men to him and a simple yet overawing dignity of character, Mr. Bryan stands the foremost American of to-day, and the noblest of Democrats.

Every age brings forward just such men to do its noblest work for humanity. Happy the age that receives them.

ROBERTS'S EXPULSION AS VIEWED IN UTAH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Bearing in mind the fate that befell Señor de Lome for expressing an honest opinion of President McKinley in a private letter to a friend, I have suppressed the name of the correspondent from whom I have just received the inclosed letter. I have only to say that no man stands higher in the estimation of his fellow-citizens in Salt Lake City. I may remark that Bishop Tuttle, formerly of Utah, had said in his note to a respected clergyman of this city that Mr. Roberts, aside from his polygamy, was an honest and reliable man, but still that he hoped he would be expelled, as a warning to the Mormon people. My correspondent would not have expressed his belief that the President purposely appointed the polygamous Postmasters if it had not been well grounded. His action was in keeping with his "ear-to-the-ground" policy and his desire for re-election which prompt everything he says or does.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 21, 1900.

I think Bishop Tuttle touches the Roberts matter just on the spot. None of us cares a continental for Roberts's polygamy or his unlawful cohabitation. But none of us likes to know that a man living is he lives sits in Congress. The example isn't good, nor is the fact relishabe to people who don't think that polygamy is right or divine. I am not grieving in the least because they are making it warm for Roberts. I do think, however, that he should have been sworn in, his credentials being regular, and then bounced bodily. There was no occasion for violating law in order to achieve an end. My observation has been that the practice of irregular and improper methods, no matter how praiseworthy the object, results injuriously. Precedents thus established come back to plague those who make them. It is not improbable that one of these days a majority in Congress will be forced to turn aside somebody it does not want to turn down. However, let Roberts go. His rejection may prove a valuable lesson to the Saints, and teach them that they must not try to take advantage of the toleration and goodness of heart of those who are willing to let bygones be bygones.

I am not mourning because McKinley is being dressed down for appointing polygamists to Postmasterships. The Administration may deny it, but the fact cannot be changed that these appointments were made for the purpose of encouraging the Mormons to stand in with the Republicans. It has been the boast here for two or three years that McKinley was the friend of the Mormons, and these polygamous appointments are pointed at as proof that he is 'their friend.' The appointments have also had the effect of leading many Saints into the Republican fold. McKinley is a coward. He knew that he was appointing polygamists, but now he hasn't the courage to face the music.

ANGLO-BOER WAR OPINIONS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Capt. Mahan's letter was most interesting and timely. It reminds one of another danger of which we shall speak here. Before coming to the main point let us note two broad propositions, namely:

1. Of any given matter opinion is of two classes, noisy opinion and public opinion, the former of the nervous, eccentric, and restless people and the latter of the quiet and well disposed of all social classes.

2. The price not only of liberty but of National principle is eternal vigilance. As a rule, noisy opinion is pro-Boer, and public opinion is either pro-British, a prey to conflicting emotions, or neutral. The latter shades are sometimes mistaken for Boer sympathy by many here and in England. Again, it is said that half or more of the American newspapers are pro-Boer, upon which fact are based such misleading estimates of our people's opinion. The tendency to mistake noisy for public opinion, and cater thereto, by the politicians is too well known to be dwelt upon here. As so much of the press represents political faction, it very largely shares the same weakness, and is thus very misleading. Now we come to the point. The danger of this condition at present is that some of the party conventions—National as well as local—to assemble later, or platform committees thereof, may be so composed as to have the very men who will fish for votes by pro-Boer declarations. More stress is laid upon the danger of these rather than pro-British ones, partly because the British advocates, or the neutrals, are not the kind to seek such a violation of our neutrality as party resolutions for or against either power are, and partly for a reason of which we shall presently speak. Any one who has noticed from whom come pro-Boer resolutions of meetings can clearly see that too many such people are the very kind who will make every effort to get their ideas expressed in a party platform by even a Presidential convention.

This dishonor of anything of the kind is obvious. The moral effect upon our relations with the British Empire may be mischief of a far-reaching kind. I have already pointed out in your columns a strong stimulus to Canadian jingoism in this country. The jingo north of us has long tried to estrange Britain and America for his own selfish ends. What but the tact of Col. Hay prevented his success during the Alaska boundary dispute? May he not be successful in the future if we are falsely represented this year in the manner spoken of in this letter? Would he not have powerful allies in the British faction and press, especially in view of colonial loyalty now? Would not such be as much against our interest as it is wrong in principle to give cause for it?

The "eternal vigilance" alluded to alone can prevent such contingencies. The danger is that well-disposed people may not realize this sufficiently to exert the proper influence to prevent either cause we here speak of. I here beg you to exert yourself to the utmost to duly enlighten them before it is too late. JAMES H. BATES.

Firemen and Electric Currents.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the heading of "Topics of the Times" in your issue of Jan. 25 you speak of the danger to the firemen from electric currents through the stream of water from the hose while playing on a fire where there are exposed electric wires. It seems to me the danger is great in the heart of the city as well as in the suburbs. Why not put all the wires under ground and have a shut-off from the house, as we now have for the water supply? Our streets and roads should not be disfigured by unsightly poles; our trees should not be trimmed and destroyed.

Our streets and roads are lined with trees—dead trees—adorned with wires in place of leaves. In London they have a subway under the sidewalks for wires. The streets are clear of all obstructions. Nothing interferes with clear sidewalks except lamp-posts and mail boxes. The water supply for fire purposes and flushing is connected from a nozzle in the middle of the roadway, on a level with the surface, and is covered with a plate screwed on. It is a good arrangement, for when the hose is attached one-half of the road is free for traffic. An iron plate on the railing or side of the house opposite is marked "H," so many feet and inches. The location can always be found. W. T. BRUNDAGE.

The Lamp-post Street Signs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is quite a while since I have seen any communication in regard to the abomination of the lamp-post street signs. I think this ball should be kept a-rolling and this utterly senseless system persistently and vigorously fought against by every person of reason. It has already offended too long against the patience and taste of nearly every citizen of the metropolis, and it is to be hoped that the signs will soon be replaced in intelligent accord with the requirements of municipal life. I don't know who is the author of the outrage, but it is to be hoped that the evil genius who is responsible for it will be heavily sat down upon and not be permitted to inflict any further atrocities of the kind.

THE CARRIER PIGEON OF LADYSMITH.

(By courtesy of the Funk & Wagnalls Company.)

A carrier dove from the cage they bring,
The keenest of vision and fleetest of wing.

Of love and peace once the avatar,
Now held for the grim, sad service of war.

They write a message of hope and cheer
Tho' the vengeful shells are bursting near,

Beneath her wing it is bound with care,
And they set her free with a silent prayer.

She stands at gaze for a moment's space,
And warily poises with airy grace.

Then, lightly leaping, a gleam of white
Goes flashing upward in pulsing flight.

Up, up, to the freedom of God's blue sky,
In widening circles she mounts on high,

Till, far beneath her, she gazes down
On Natal's green veldts and the kopjes brown.

The boom of cannon and shriek of shell
Of the grisly tumult of war still tell.

Still flame the hilltops with fitful red,
And the slopes and summit are strewn with dead.

But a scene more joyous in vision bright,
Allures the dove in her strenuous flight.

There's a cote in Durban, beside the sea,
Where home and her own dear nestlings be.

And tho' an empire may rock below,
On the lurid tides that ebb and flow,

She sees beyond to the peaceful nest,
And the heart is singing within her breast.

I too o'er the green veldt sweep along,
On the pinions of fancy, swift and strong.

I see the flashes and battle gleams,
The stiffening forms and thin red streams;

And I too, looking beyond the strife,
See a fairer vision of peaceful life:—

One great republic that stretches free
From Cape to desert, from sea to sea;

Where crown and sceptre shall find no rule,
And freedom brightens o'er church and school;

Where class and privilege fade from sight,
And the Right of Man is the sovereign right;

MORE FIGHTING IN LUZON

Insurgents Make Stubborn Resistance at Hemp Ports.

THE ENEMY'S LOSS IS LARGE

Twenty-eight Killed in Hand-to-Hand Encounter — Ports Will Be Open Jan. 30.

MANILA, Jan. 26.—A dispatch from Sorsogon, dated Thursday, Jan. 25, says Brig. Gen. Kobbé's expedition occupied Sorsogon, Dunsol, Bulan, Logaspi, and Virac. The only resistance was at Legaspi, where five Americans were wounded, and forty-five dead and fifteen wounded Filipinos were found.

It is estimated that there are 125,000 bales of hemp in these provinces, and 16,000 bales in the ports of Sorsogon and Legaspi. The United States gunboat Nashville's shrapnel burned 8,000 bales in Legaspi.

The expedition arrived off Sorsogon Jan. 20, and the town displayed white flags. Gen. Kobbé and Col. Howe, with a battalion of the Forty-seventh Infantry, landed and raised the United States flag. The insurgent force, numbering 300 men, evacuated the place. The natives were passive.

During the morning of Jan. 23, the Nashville and Venus, with four companies of the Forty-seventh Regiment, under Major Shipton, approached Legaspi. Filipino flags were flying, and the trenches were crowded. A detachment of 150 picked men, led by Major Shipton, landed on the beach about a mile north of the town, the Nashville bombarded the trenches, and the enemy retreated to Albay, whence they were easily dispersed to the hills.

About two hundred insurgents, armed with rifles, forced 600 unwilling villagers, armed with bows and arrows, to serve in the trenches in the close range street fighting before the enemy fled. The Filipino dead were mostly villagers, who were attempting to flee.

The expedition will proceed to Samar and Leyte, where the Forty-third Infantry and a battalion of the Third Artillery will be distributed.

The natives complain of lack of food, resulting from the blockade. They are strongly opposed to the return of the friars. Native priests are officiating in the churches.

Lieut. Col. Webb C. Hayes has defeated an entrenched force of the enemy at Sariago. One American was killed and five were wounded. A record of eleven American prisoners was found.

Capt. Casteel, while scouting near Báras with his company encountered 400 insurgents. He was reinforced by Capt. Gracie and the enemy was driven to Tanay. One American was killed and one was wounded.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Gen. Otis cabled the War Department to-day, as follows:

Manila, Jan. 26.

Kobbe's troops occupy the hemp ports of Sorsogon, Dunsol, Bulan, Albay, and Legaspi, Southeastern Luzon, Virac Island, Catanduanes; will probably occupy the ports of Calbayec, Cathbalogan, and Tacloban on the islands of Samar and of Leyte before to-morrow evening. No opposition except at Legaspi, where 800 insurgents, strongly entrenched, under Chinese Gen. Powah, made stubborn resistance, troops landed under protection of guns of Nashville, which severely bombarded fortifications at close range.

Enemy's loss over fifty killed or mortally wounded, twenty-eight killed at bridge head in hand-to-hand encounter, refusing to surrender; our casualties, Capt. Bradley Hancock, Quartermaster Volunteers, aide to Kobbé, wounded in hand, six men, including one sailor on Nashville, slightly wounded.

These ports contain great quantities of hemp ready for shipment, and will be open on 13th instant."

NAVY ASSISTS THE ARMY.

In the Southern Luzon Campaign—News of Prisoners Found.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Admiral Watson has cabled the Navy Department an account of the part taken by the navy in the campaign now being made in Southern Luzon by Gen. Schwan. The Admiral's dispatch refers to the engagement, or rather series of engagements, which took place along the eastern and southern shores of Lake Taal a week ago. There is no outlet from Lake Taal into the sea navigable for warships, but the Marietta took up a position close to the narrow neck of land which separated the lake from the sea, and threw shells across into the insurgents' defenses. The Admiral's account of the affair is as follows:

"'The Marietta, with Gheen commanding, on the 19th co-operated with the army in the capture of Taal. Embarked the insurgent trenches at about 1,630 yards. Lieut. Price landed with Colt gun. Gheen reports that a battalion of the Forty-sixth, under Major Johnston, carried the bridge and town very gallantly, facing artillery and rifle fire."

Gen. Otis's report of yesterday's movements in the campaign in Luzon is as follows:

"Hayes's cavalry reported at Santa Cruz, drove enemy out of Luzona, Tayabas, and adjacent towns, rescuing twenty Spanish prisoners and five women; other Spanish prisoners moved back in small detachments into mountains; enemy dispersed, and greater part believed to be seeking homes at Tayabas; found record dated 15th inst. saying eleven American prisoners leave tomorrow; know not to what place; Hayes's casualties, one killed, three mortally wounded, two slightly wounded."

SPANIARDS HOMEWARD BOUND.

Gen. Otis Furnishes Transportation to Released Prisoners.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The progress of the movement inaugurated about three months ago toward the return to Spain of the prisoners released from the Filipinos is reported by Gen. Otis in the following cablegram received at the War Department to-day:

"Released Spanish prisoners, 74 officers, 1,000 enlisted men, 22 civilian officials, 21 wives, and 35 children, were furnished transportation to Spain yesterday."

ALL FILIPINOS ARE NOT BAD.

So Says Prof. Worcester in Endeavoring to Correct Misleading Reports of His Remarks.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Prof. Worcester of the Philippine Commission to-night gave out the following statement:

"I have been greatly annoyed by misleading reports of remarks which I have recently made in public concerning the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. There are three very distinct races in the archipelago, and the races are again subdivided into numerous tribes, the total being no less than eighty-four. These tribes vary in social development from the most abject savagery to a relatively high degree of civilization. Among certain of the wild tribes such customs as head hunting, the sacrificing of human beings to heathen divinities, child marriage, polygamy, infanticide, and slavery are to be found, although some of the wild tribes are very pacific and indulge in none of the objectionable practices above enumerated.

"The remarks, which I have made concerning one or two of the head-hunting tribes have been taken as applicable to the entire population, which is, of course, absurd. Furthermore, I note with regret that after my address before the Commercial Club of Boston, in which I discussed the pros and cons of the Tagalog character, the undesirable characteristics which I mentioned were quite fully enumerated, but the good qualities which I was especially careful to discuss have been entirely omitted.

"In my books on the Philippines as well as in a magazine article and in numerous public lectures and addresses, I have repeatedly expressed my opinion of the civilized native, and I wish now to repeat that, while I consider him quite unfit to establish and maintain an independent national government at the present time, I nevertheless believe that his good qualities far outweigh his bad ones, and I have great hope for his future.

"As the customs, manners, and laws of the civilized as well as the wild tribes are fully discussed in the second volume of the forthcoming report of the commission, it is to be hoped that public opinion may eventually be set right and that the confusion which, perhaps not unnaturally, results from attempts to describe separately certain ones of the numerous tribes may be avoided when all are discussed within the limits of a single volume."

GOMEZ OBJECTS TO SBARETTI.

The General Says Church Dignitaries Should Be Cubans.

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—Gen. Maximo Gomez said to-day, regarding the appointment of Mgr. Sbaretti as Bishop of Havana:

"The Cubans have shed their blood in order that everything in the island might be born again. When Cuba was a Spanish colony her officials and clergy were Spaniards. Now that she is a free country, such dignitaries should be Cubans. Cuba needs independence in matters religious as well as political. If Mgr. Sbaretti does not take into account the opposition Cubans feel in this respect, but accepts the Bishopric, he will be indeed the genuine representative of an irritating usurpation."

Employment Bureau for Havana.

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—Gen. Ludlow is arranging to open an employment information bureau, his idea being to relieve Havana of vagrants and also to help immigrants in getting work. In his opinion such an office will save the city much more than the cost of keeping it up by elliminating the extra expenditure now made for the unemployed, while it will also act as an educational influence.

Growth of Schools in Cuba.

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—Mr. Frye, Superintendent of Public Schools, is in receipt of reports showing that 879 schools have already been organized. Reports are coming in at the rate of seventy-five a day, and it is expected that the number will reach 2,000, representing 100,000 children.

PUERTO RICO AND FREE TRADE.

Rice Grower Says Both the Island and This Country Would Benefit.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Dr. S. O. Knapp, a rice producer of Lake Charles, La., was heard to-day by the Insular Committee of the House as to the advantage of free trade with Puerto Rico in giving a market on the island for American rice. He said there was a large surplus of our crop of "broken rice." The lower grade was just what the Puerto Ricans desired. Enormous quantities are imported annually into Puerto Rico and the Philippines.

Dr. Knapp held therefore that free trade would not alone be beneficial in giving their products a market here, but also in giving a market for the surplus of American rice of lower grades.

PARIS CARPENTERS STRIKE.

Five Thousand at Work on Exposition Buildings Ask More Pay.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—A great strike of carpenters employed on the Exposition buildings, involving 5,000 men, has been inaugurated.

The strike is due to a demand for an increase from eighteen sous to one franc per hour. All the workyards are now guarded by strong forces of police. Officials do not consider the strike serious, and believe it will be settled in two or three days.

A BLOW TO THE MAFIA.

King of Italy Dissolves the Palermo Municipal Council.

ROME, Jan. 26.—The Government has struck the Mafia another blow. A royal decree dissolves the Palermo Municipal Council, which was composed, mostly, of friends of Signor Palizzolo. The Council almost caused a riot recently by increasing the octroi.

As cabled Dec. 8 last, a great sensation was caused throughout Italy by the trial of two railroad men on the charge of murder and robbery in a railroad car near Palermo, the victim being Signor Notarbartolo, a former Director of the Bank of Sicily, and one of the most prominent citizens of Palermo. The trial was attended with a number of dramatic incidents, the murdered man's son accusing Signor Palizzolo, a Member of the Chamber of Deputies from Palermo, of giving the order for the murder of Signor Notarbartolo.

As a result of this accusation the Chamber of Deputies met in special session and authorized the prosecution of Signor Palizzolo, who was arrested in Palermo on the evening of Dec. 8.

KAISERIN'S MOTHER'S FUNERAL.

Body Will Be Placed in the Family Vault at Primkenau Sunday.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The funeral of the Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein, mother of the Empress of Germany, will take place Sunday at Primkenau, a town of Silesia, in the Liegnitz district.

The body of the Dowager Duchess left Dresden at 11 o'clock this evening for Primkenau, where it will be placed in the family vault beside that of her husband.

The Court will go into mourning until Feb. 15.

Their Majesties started for Berlin immediately after the mourning services, which were held at 5 o'clock this afternoon at the King of Saxony's château, at Strehlon.

KAISER'S BIRTHDAY TO-DAY.

No Court Fetes, but People and Military Will Celebrate.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—While the orders of Emperor William to omit all Court fêtes, owing to the death of the mother of the Empress, will be carried out rigorously, the military and popular celebration of his Majesty's birthday to-morrow will not be omitted. At 8 o'clock in the morning military bands will perform the so-called "waking" along the Unter den Linden to Brandenburg Gate. Simultaneously trumpeters from the castle cupola will play several chorals.

At noon there will be a parole at the arsenal, at which all the Generals and Admirals will be present. On his Majesty's appearance a salute of 101 guns will be fired. The parole is "Long Life to the Emperor-King."

The Bundesrath, Reichstag, and Diet will give banquets, omitting their usual sessions; the Municipal Council will present an address to the Emperor, the schools and universities will celebrate, and all Berlin will be illuminated in the evening.

British Win in Borneo.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The British expedition against the rebellious Tagas, under Mat Salleh, in British North Borneo, has been entirely successful. Capt. Harrington, with 100 Sikhs, after two days' fighting, Jan. 8 and 9, against 1,000 rebels, captured two forts and two villages, blew up the rebels' magazine and killed or wounded sixty Tagas. The British had four men wounded. The remaining villages of the disturbed district submitted.

Political Changes in Brazil.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 26.—Senhor Severino Vieira, the Minister of the Interior, has resigned and Senhor Maia has been nominated to succeed him. Senhor Silveira, Director of the Central Railroad; Judge Galvao, Chief of Police, and all the District Delegates have been changed. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. de Magalhaes, remains until the return of the President from Argentina.

Andrade Will Be a Farmer.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Jan. 26.—The family of former President Andrade of Venezuela, consisting of ten persons, arrived here from Venezuela yesterday. Andrade has been residing in the suburbs of this city for several months. It is rumored that he will engage in agriculture, now that he has been joined by his family, and that Puerto Rico will probably be his permanent home.

B. Kiralfy Arrested in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—As a result of charges brought by shareholders of the Columbia Theatre against Bolossy Kiralfy, the latter has been arrested, and the books of the theatre have been seized at his home. The shareholders claim he fails to give a proper accounting.

Expedition to Search for Andree.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—Herr Vaze, the Polar explorer, announces that he will lead an expedition next Summer into Arctic regions in the hope of finding Andree, the missing aeronaut, or his remains.

CHINESE ASK INTERVENTION.

Beg American, British, and Japanese Ministers to Restore the Emperor to Power.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—An official communication received here from Peking says:

"Pu Chun, who has been appointed heir apparent to the throne, has been given the status of a son of the last Emperor. The statement that a new Emperor has ascended the throne is premature, although it is believed the appointment is preparatory thereto."

The Dowager Empress has dismissed Jung Lu, Generalissimo of the Chinese forces, on account of his supposed disapproval of the coup d'etat. Other high officials have been superseded. Extraordinary precautions have been taken at the vice-regal capitals to prevent risings. The troops have been served with ball cartridges.

The interior of China is greatly excited, and progressive Chinese are begging the American, British, and Japanese Ministers to intervene and restore the Emperor to power.

A special dispatch from Shanghai says the report of the abdication of the Chinese Emperor has caused a tremendous sensation in Japan, where a strong desire is expressed to adopt stringent measures, as it is believed Russia is the leading hand in the coup d'etat.

The Shanghai correspondent of The Times says: "A petition was forwarded by telegram to Peking, signed by 1,200 representatives of local Chinese merchants and gentry, begging the Princes and Ministers of the Tsung-li-Yamen to urge the Emperor to reconsider his abdication and to revoke the edict."

The Hong Kong correspondent of The Times says he has received a dispatch intimating the dethronement and death of Emperor Kwangsu.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Nothing further has been heard from United States Minister Conger at Peking since his cablegram yesterday announcing the selection of an heir apparent to the Chinese throne. Hence it is concluded that the action taken by the convocation of Chinese notables was technically limited to the naming of Pu Chun as heir apparent.

OPPOSES MERCIER'S CANDIDACY.

Figaro Says the General Was Negligent and Incapable.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—The Figaro to-day publishes a bitter article against Gen. Mercier on his arrival at Nantes in support of his candidacy for the Senate in next Sunday's election. It says:

"There is something terrifying and lugubrious in the idea that representatives of the French aristocracy can descend to the level of putting forward a General, not for military merits or victories—since Mercier's negligence and incapacity cost France the lives of 5,756 of her sons in Madagascar—but merely because he deceived a court-martial by sending it forged documents in order to secure the conviction of an innocent Jewish Captain, who barely missed becoming his five thousand seven hundred and fifty-seventh victim."

TROUBLE BREWING IN SAMOA.

It Is Said Mataafa Natives Contemplate an Outbreak.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 26.—Recent reports from Samoa are to the effect that its annexation by Germany is regarded with increasing disfavor by both American and British residents and by the natives themselves. The natives, it is said, are exceedingly dissatisfied at the turn affairs have taken, the Mataafa followers particularly so, as they had understood that a protectorate was contemplated by the powers and that they would be allowed to select their own King.

The Mataafa natives never recognized the provisional Government in Samoa, but have continued to collect taxes on their own account. It is believed by many in the islands that the new arrangements will simply mark the beginning of fresh troubles with the natives, an early uprising of whom is feared. English and Americans are leaving Upolu and Savau to take up their residence in Fiji and Tonga, and the more wealthy of the Malietoan natives are also leaving the country for the present or until matters appear more settled.

It is predicted in the advices that nothing short of the presence at Samoa of several German cruisers will prevent a native outbreak.

THE GOVERNMENT OF TUTUILA.

Admirals Crowninshield and Kautz Will Confer Regarding It.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 26.—Instead of going to Florida for his health, as reported from Washington, Rear Admiral Crowninshield, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, passed through here to-day en route to California on two important missions. He goes to inspect the new naval station at Yerba Buena Island, thirty miles below Mare Island, and to confer with Admiral Kautz at Santiago, Southern California, who is in command of the Pacific Station, regarding the establishment of the Federal Government over the Island of Tutuila, the new possession in the Samoan group.

This mission has been intrusted to Admiral Kautz. Admiral Crowninshield says Tutuila will prove a great boon to America, as it is one of the finest harbors in the Pacific.

Left $1,600,000 to London Hospitals.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Prof. David Edward Hughes, the electrician and inventor, who died on Tuesday, left numerous benevolent bequests. To each of four leading London hospitals he bequeathed £80,000. He had an income of £40,000 ($200,000) a year.

GLOUCESTER FISHERS MISSING.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 26.—No fewer than four American herring vessels supply many of the conditions necessary to identify them with the large unknown vessel which went ashore Wednesday, Jan. 17, on Foxtail Point, in Bay St. George. These are the Oliver Wendell Holmes, the Essex, and the Phomha, which left Bay of Islands a few days before the disaster with cargoes of frozen herring, and the Harvard, which was going there for cargo from Placentia Bay.

Quite likely other vessels in the same category may have left Gloucester and Boston for the same waters which are from ten to fourteen days out. Any and all such would increase the number of suspects. Thus far nothing has been recovered near the wreck that would help to identify her.

A BICYCLE TIRE TRUST.

Two Companies Abandon a Fight and Prices Will Advance.

AKRON, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Announcement was made to-day of an agreement on the Tillinghast bicycle tire patents which amounts to the forming of a tire trust that will include every manufacturer.

The Diamond and Goodyear Companies in Akron, which have fought the Tillinghast patents, have been won over, and have taken out a license issued by Theodore A. Dodge of New York, owner of the patents, whereby they are allowed to use them. Dodge made concessions to secure the Diamond and Goodyear people. They will pay only half the amount in royalties at first demanded of them. The license the companies take out binds them to maintain a fixed scale of prices.

The effect of the agreement will be an advance of the price of tires of all grades. Although retailers may fix their own prices, all must pay the same for their goods, and the general result will be, it is said, that bicycle tires will cost the consumer 50 per cent. more this year than last. By the new arrangement bicycle dealers will be largely prevented from making a profit on tires in addition to that on the bicycles without the tires.

Suicide in a Small Hotel.

William E. Squire, whose address is unknown to the police, committed suicide some time Thursday at a small hotel at 328 Fourth Avenue, where he had registered Wednesday as "J. D. Haderson, New York City." The body was found lying fully dressed on the bed in his room yesterday morning. On a card on the table near by was "William E. Squire, with Ruggles Brothers, brokers, 52 Broadway." Henry F. Holbrook of the firm of Ruggles Brothers said that the man had applied to the firm for work some time ago, but had not been regularly employed.

MUSIC HEARD YESTERDAY.

Fourth Public Rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society at Carnegie Hall.

The fourth public rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society took place at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The programme consisted of the overture to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," Louis Saar's dramatic scena for contralto and orchestra, entitled "Ganymed," Beethoven's fourth symphony, three songs with piano accompaniment—Schubert's "Der Kreuzsug," Schumann's "Der arme Peter," and Franz's "Er ists gekommen"—and Goldmark's overture to "Prometheus." The singer was Mme. Schumann-Heink. The B flat symphony of Beethoven has not been heard in so long that it was a treat to listen to it yesterday. The clearness of the form is a lesson which some recent composers might study with profit to themselves and happy results to the progress of music in the twentieth century.

Especialy in the fascinating scherzo does the easy method of Beethoven show how far it overtops the straining after effect and the instrumental contortions of some of his successors. The music is so simple, so spontaneous, and withal so lovely, that one wonders constantly at the remarkable results attained by the employment of such elementary means. But it all goes to show that the principal thing a composer needs is ideas. The symphony was beautifully read by Mr. Paur, who showed a fine insight into its nature, and a complete mastery of the means needed to produce the right effects. That the wood wind did not play in tune was not his fault. He cannot make the wood players of the Philharmonic other than they are. But for the excellence of the ensemble, which gives constant evidence of improvement under his direction, he must be praised.

Mr. Saar's new vocal piece pleased the audience, and with reason. The text is thoroughly favorable to musical embodiment, and Mr. Saar has undertaken his task in a sincere spirit. He has written a fine piece of introductory recitative, melodious in its character and dramatic in its significance. His andante and allegro which follow, are conceived on broad lines and written with skill. The orchestral accompaniment is well devised and the composition as a whole is sufficiently dignified and meritorious to have deserved thoroughly a place on a Philharmonic programme. Mme. Schumann-Heink was altogether out of sorts yesterday. Indeed, to those who know the strain under which she is laboring at the present time, it is wonderful that she appears at all. In such circumstances she is not to be held accountable for any shortcomings, but to be praised for the sincerity which characterizes all her efforts.

Especial commendation must be given to the beautiful and impressive reading of the Wagner overture by Mr. Paur, and to the way in which the fathers played it. The Goldmark work was not so well done. One is often led to fancy that the works on the Philharmonic programmes are taken up for rehearsal in the order in which they stand, and that the last one gets the smallest amount of study. But it was a good performance, taking it all in all, and we should be thankful for it.

METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE.

"Don Pasquale" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" Once More.

An audience of very large size was present in the Metropolitan Opera House last night when "Don Pasquale" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" were repeated. The attractiveness of this combination of operas is due not only to the fact that it affords an opportunity to the public to hear two such singers as Mme. Sembrich and Mme Calvé in the same evening, but to the agreeable contrast of the two works themselves. After the bright and sparkling comedy of Donizetti's work the tragedy of the Mascagni piece comes with redoubled force. Both works are among the best of their kinds, and both kinds have their merits. Some considerable comment has already been made in this place on the delights of "Don Pasquale," but there is no harm in once more calling the attention of the readers of THE TIMES to this admirable musical comedy. The play itself is most amusing. Three of the four characters are excellently drawn and are well characterized in the music, and the good old-fashioned plot is based on an idea which never grows old. As for the music, it is bright, spirited, tuneful, and thoroughly in keeping with the mood of the story.

Mme. Sembrich, who repeated her impersonation of Norina, was in splendid voice last night, and her singing was a glorious exhibition of the good old art of bel canto, so much abused, but so invaluable. As before, she acted with consummate skill, and showed herself in every way a mistress of her art. At the end of the opera she again interpolated the "Luce quest' anima" from "Linda di Chamounix." Signor Scotti repeated his admirable singing and acting as Dr. Malatesta, and Signor Pini-Corsi was once more a capital Don Pasquale. Ernesto is not one of M. Saligniac's happiest parts, but he sings the serenade well.

In "Cavalleria Rusticana," the audience was permitted once more to be moved and thrilled by the superb Santuzza of Mme. Calvé, an impersonation which will be remembered as one of the operatic masterpieces of our time. Her associates last night were Mr. Dippel as Turiddu, Signor Campanari as Alfio, Mme. Mantelli as Lola, and Mlle. Bauermeister as Lola.

MISS CLAUDE MAKES TROUBLE.

Casino Actress Insists on Having a Dressing Room by Herself.

A delay in the performance of "The Belle of New York" at the Casino Thursday night and last night was only avoided through the manner in which Stage Manager Gerald Coventry handled a request coming from Miss Toby Claude, the young English actress who plays the part of Fifi Fricot and who received such favorable comment on her appearance here. The first indication that she was dissatisfied came on Thursday, when she told the stage manager that she desired a dressing room alone, notwithstanding the fact that when she selected her room Sunday she expressed her willingness to share it with Miss Ella Snyder, who plays the part of Mamie Clancy. Mr. Coventry said he could not attend to the matter at once, but would try to do everything possible to make things agreeable for every one.

Miss Claude decided last night she would wait no longer for matters to be arranged as she desired, and shortly before the orchestra began to play the overture her husband, William P. Carleton, who is also a member of the company, went up to Mr. Coventry and insisted upon an improvement in his wife's dressing room. He said he would not let her enter the theatre unless she could have a room by herself. As this demand came but a short time before the curtain was to go up, Mr. Coventry saw he could do nothing but ask Miss Snyder to vacate the room, which she did willingly, thereby avoiding considerable delay in the beginning of the performance.

It was said at the Casino that Mr. Lederer would not tolerate any further trouble from Miss Claude, and that any more extraordinary demands coming from her would result in the return of Miss Phyllis Rankin to the role of Fifi Fricot, which she created, and the retirement of Miss Claude from the cast.

Kate Claxton a Bankrupt.

Kate Claxton, the actress, filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday under the name of Kate E. Stevenson, giving her residence as 288 West Seventieth Street. Her husband, Charles A. Stevenson, filed a petition in bankruptcy on Dec. 2 last. In her schedules she gives the liabilities at $10,739, due to the following creditors: Rose Eytinge, London, $3,481; Edgar Bruce, London, $2,211; Gillin Printing Company, $985; A. Hoen & Co., Baltimore, $2,797, balance due for printing; Union Advertiser Job and Printing Company, Rochester $81; W. J. Jennings, Hartford, $80; Calvert Lithographing Company, Detroit, $1,000, and Winters Lithographing Company, Springfield, Ohio $101. Her assets consist of clothing, $100, which is exempt, and an accident insurance policy for $12,000, which expires on Feb. 4 next.

Miss Nethersole in the City.

After an illness of almost a week's duration in Washington, which prevented the opening of her season at Wallack's Theatre in "Sapho" last Monday night, Miss Olga Nethersole returned to this city yesterday. She went direct to the Hoffman House, accompanied by her brother, Louis Nethersole. She was met there by Dr. Holbrook Curtis, who, after making a thorough examination of Miss Nethersole's throat, announced that unless something unforeseen should happen she would be able to appear Monday night.

Lecture by Garrett P. Serviss.

Garrett P. Serviss will deliver the sixth and last lecture of the course on the "Romance of Travel and History" at the Berkeley Lyceum to-day at 11 o'clock. His subject will be "William Tell and the Romance of the Alps."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Yesterday, as is usually the case on a Friday during the season, did not bring much of incident or event in the social world of New York. The cold and blustering weather, which was all the more disagreeable as it followed so abruptly on the unseasonably warm weather of the past fortnight, kept people of leisure within doors, and the avenue and uptown fashionable districts were deserted until the afternoon. The fatigue consequent upon the Assembly ball of Thursday night, which did not close until after 3 o'clock yesterday morning, also had something to do with society's apparent retirement from view during the morning. Even the fashionable restaurants were comparatively deserted at the luncheon hour, and the few "at homes" of the afternoon were slimly attended. It was decidedly an "off day" in society. The evening brought the fourth meeting of Mrs. Church's dancing class at Sherry's, the third meeting of Mrs. Sneeker's class at the same place, but in the small ball room, and the third meeting of Mrs. O'Connor's class at Delmonico's. Mr. Hermann Oelrichs gave a stag dinner of sixteen covers at his residence, and Mrs. Eugene Schieffelin gave a dinner in honor of her niece, Miss Katherine Hall a debutanté of the season. The double bill of "Don Pasquale" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" at the opera brought out a large house.

***

To-day will bring a few informal receptions, the third meeting of Mrs. Pratt's evening class at Sherry's, and the third and last of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish's "Saturday nights," at which a cotillion will be danced, and in which some handsome and novel favors will be given out.

The Campania, which sails to-day for Liverpool, has booked, among other passengers, Count de la Chesnaye and Countess de la Chesnaye of Paris; Rear Admiral Penrose Fitzgerald, Capt. the Honorable Cecil Colville, R. N., and Lieut. C. R. Crosby, R. N., all of England; Julius Moeller, Lieut. Romanoff, Mr. Charles P. Vaughn, United States Deputy Consul General at Frankfort, Germany, and Mrs. Vaughn, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Wendell, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Atkinson, two daughters and son, of Quebec.

The Kaiser Wilhelm II., which sails today for Genoa, via Gibraltar and Naples, has an exceedingly long passenger list, which, like that of the Augusta Victoria on Thursday, contains comparatively few well-known New York names. Among the New Yorkers booked to sail on this steamer are Mrs. Neilson and her daughter, Miss L. Hebbard Neilson; W. L. Clark, and Mrs. Moses T. Campbell. On the same ship there are booked to sail Prof. J. H. Westcott, Mrs. J. H. Westcott and children of Princeton, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. John Price Wetherill, and the Misses Florence, Isabel, and Gertrude Wetherill of Philadelphia, and Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Joly de Lotbiniere and Mr. and Mrs. William Molson MacPherson of Quebec, Canada. These last two families are among the most prominent in the old Canadian city.

Gen. E. Burd Grubb of Edgewater, N. J., has almost entirely recovered from the severe illness which prostrated him last Autumn. He will soon go South for the rest of the Winter. Mrs. Grubb's sister, Miss Sopworth of England, has been visiting her this Winter, and Mrs. Grubb gave a luncheon in honor of Miss Sopworth at the Bellevue in Philadelphia, on Thursday. Among the guests at this luncheon were Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, Mrs. Alfred Whelen, and Mrs. Thomas Leaming.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kelso Cassatt, who were married in Philadelphia last week, are now on their honeymoon tour in Florida. They are traveling in Mr. Cassatt's private car, and will make a tour of Florida before their return. Yesterday they were at the Ponce de Leon, in St. Augustine.

The engagement has been announced in Baltimore of Mr. George Howard Elder and Miss Anita Mactavish. Miss Mactavish is the great-great-granddaughter of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and her family is one of the most prominent, socially, in Maryland. Baltimore continues to be very gay, and its society is evidently as novelty mad as that of New York. Miss Champe Robinson gave a tea in honor of Miss Ethel Barrymore on a recent day. The publication of a small volume of poems by Miss Hannah Norris has made quite a sensation in Baltimore society, as some of the verses, while clever, have a decided personal bearing, and the young poetess has not spared her friends.

Philadelphia seems to have suffered this season, as the following wail in The Times of that city would seem to show, from the depredations of society thieves:

"The wind-up of the social season," it says, "generally finds many hostesses in arrears for such things as silver-backed brushes, scent bottles, and other trinkets usually found on the toilet tables of dressing rooms. A woman who entertains a great deal was bewailing her losses yesterday afternoon over her luncheon coffee in a restaurant. What she said about society kleptomaniacs was forceful, if not too elegant, from such a charming source. Last Winter, she said, she lost at least $250 worth of ornaments of one kind or another, and 'what was hardest to bear,' she went on, 'was the discovery of one of my favorite scent bottles on the dressing table of an intimate friend.' Many expedients have been resorted to to stop the disappearances, though so far nothing but the locking up of all articles in the least likely to attract a covetous eye has to any extent sufficed. But at that point the vanity of the hostess is touched usually, and she dislikes the notion of hiding from sight all of the pretty things that she would like to show on such occasions. The course of one woman who gave a luncheon one day not so long ago, and afterward missed a small gold mirror, was a little crude, perhaps, but it answered the purpose. She sent to each of the women who had been her guests a postal card, upon which was written: 'Dear Madame, a gold mirror was stolen from my dressing table yesterday. Have you got it?' The mirror was returned, but whence it came its owner up to the present has never been able to find out."

A large house party will be given by Mr. and Mrs. George Gould over Sunday at Georgian Court. The Count and Countess de Castellane, Mr. Harry Lehr, and Mr. James De W. The party will return on Monday, as some of them are to be guests at Mrs. Astor's ball on the same date.

Mr. George Keppel has sailed for Europe. He was in this country for several weeks, and was entertained by Mr. William C. Whitney, and was also the guest at several dinners given in Philadelphia and Washington. Mrs. Keppel, his wife, is one of the leaders in the set of the Prince of Wales. She has recently been on a long visit to the Princess of Wales at Sandringham. On the same ship was the Hon. Mrs. Eric Barrington, who had been visiting Miss Ada Rehan. Mrs. Barrington is the wife of the private Secretary of the Marquis of Salisbury. She has a handsome London house at 62 Cadogan Place.

They will remain for a short time on the Riviera.

Prince Henri de Croy, who has been some time in this country, sails this coming week for Europe. He was at Newport in the Summer, and afterward went to Chicago as the guest of the Potter Palmers. RUSSELL SAGE RESIGNS

Standard Gas Prepares a Way for His Retirement.

HIS STOCK SALE THE CAUSE

Directors Give Him a Vote of Thanks —Effect on the Local Gas Situation.

A special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Standard Gas Light Company was held yesterday afternoon to receive the resignation of Russell Sage as President. The retirement of Mr. Sage was the direct result of his recent action in disposing of nearly all of his stock in the company, which was declared by other Directors and stockholders to be an act of bad faith. At a meeting of the Directors held soon after it became known that Mr. Sage had sold his stock some of the members of the board told him with emphasis that it was manifestly improper that he should continue to hold the office of President. Mr. Sage flatly refused to resign, and declared in a published statement that he had no intention of retiring until the expiration of his term. He soon found, however, that his position was untenable, it is alleged, and, it is understood, informed the other Directors that he was ready to resign. A way was found for him to do so without loss of dignity, and yesterday's meeting was the result.

The meeting was held at 2 o'clock in the offices of the company, at 31 Nassau Street. All the members of the board were present, except Charles Dana, who is ill. Mr. Sage left the meeting almost immediately after calling it to order, Vice President Frank Tilford taking the chair, and retired to his own offices across the corridor. The resignation of Mr. Sage as President was then presented, and was immediately accepted. In his letter, which was brief, Mr. Sage said that he recognized the right of those holding the larger interests in the company to control its policy and administration, and therefore he had concluded to place his resignation in the hands of the board, to take effect Feb. 1.

Mr. Sage did not resign as a Director of the company, and was not asked to do so. His fellow-Directors showed a disposition to treat the retiring President with the utmost courtesy, and did not neglect to pass a resolution expressing regret at his retirement and thanks for his services to the company.

The only other business transacted at the meeting was the election of Oliver S. Carter, President of the National Bank of the Republic, as a member of the Executive Committee in place of Charles Dana. This change was not connected in any way with the retirement of Mr. Sage, and was due solely to the illness of Mr. Dana, it being desired to have some one in the position who could devote attention to the affairs of the company in the present disturbed situation of the gas business.

Mr. Sage declined to see a reporter after the meeting of the Board of Directors, or to make any statement in regard to his resignation.

When W. Greeley Hoyt, Secretary of the company, was asked if anything had been said at the meeting reflecting upon Mr. Sage, he replied: "Quite the contrary. The best of feeling was manifested all around, and the board adopted a very cordial vote of regret upon Mr. Sage's retirement."

Charles E. Orvis of Orvis Brothers & Co., a Director of the company, who has sympathized actively with the efforts of the Protective Committee of stockholders to prevent Standard Gas stock from falling into hands unfriendly to the policy of the company in the gas war, was asked what had been learned with reference to the sale of stock which led to Mr. Sage's retirement and how the latter had been prevailed upon to resign after having declared his intention to hold on until the expiration of his term.

"We are not certain," he replied, "who are the actual holders of the stock that Mr. Sage sold, but we have pretty well-founded suspicions on the subject. Of course, we know the 'dummies' in whose name the was purchased. Mr. Sage sold 5,600 —nearly all his holdings. He still has a few shares, and so is qualified to continue as a Director. His interest in the company was never as large as was popularly supposed. He got a good price for his stock, but no more than it would have been worth under ordinary conditions, with gas selling at a fair price. By the sale of his stock under the existing circumstances it was considered that he had broken faith with the other Directors and stockholders. We told him what we thought of his action in plain terms at a previous meeting of the board, but there was no disposition to-day to make his retirement difficult or unpleasant. He was entitled to the vote of thanks which he received, for he had been a good President for the company. Perhaps he was a little too conservative at times, but there was no real fault found with his management up to the time he sold his stock, when the other Directors felt that they had a right to expect him to stand by them in the war with the other companies."

Mr. Orvis said that no action had been taken thus far toward choosing Mr. Sage's successor. "Mr. Sage will be President until Feb. 1," he added, "and it is not certain when a new President will be chosen. None but a first-class man will be elected."

In reply to a question as to the possible effect of the retirement of Mr. Sage upon the gas war situation, Mr. Orvis said: "The only effect it will have, so far as the Standard Company is concerned, is to be to establish more firmly the policy that has been pursued throughout the fight. The company's affairs are in good condition. Instead of being $400,000 in debt, as has been reported, it has no debts, and has $700,000 in the treasury. Of course, it is not making money, and cannot as long as the war continues. But the Protective Committee has control of a large majority of the stock, which is in strong hands, and there will be no weakening on the part of this company."

Mr. Sage had about two months more to serve as President of the company, and by his resignation will lose his salary for that period. It is understood that his salary was $5,000 a year.

MORE GAS RUMORS.

Consolidated Reported as Securing Sage Holdings of New Amsterdam—Explanation About Consolidated Bonds.

The report was current in Wall Street yesterday that the Consolidated Gas Company had acquired control of the New Amsterdam Company. It is not a new rumor. Yesterday its reappearance had a pleasant effect for people long of New Amsterdam Gas. The common and preferred stock each advanced about 2½ points in the outside securities market, while the bonds were strong.

One of the Trustees of the Consolidated Gas Company said that, to the best of his knowledge, there was no truth in the report. An officer of the New Amsterdam Company was inclined to admit that some large holdings in New Amsterdam had recently changed hands, but to doubt that Consolidated interests had acquired them. In some quarters the story was freely described as a mere stockjobbing scheme.

There was some talk in Wall Street yesterday about a paragraph in a recent statement by President Johnston of the State Trust Company, in which he gave $2,000,000 bonds of the Consolidated Gas Company as being partial collateral for the two-million-dollar loan to the Whitney syndicate. It had been popularly supposed that the only Consolidated bonds out were $1,500,000 in 5 per cent debentures, besides the $695,000 in Mutual Gas Light Company 6s, for which the Consolidated people are also responsible. The matter was explained by a Consolidated Trustee as follows:

"When we bought the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company we gave in exchange an obligation of our company—an interest-bearing note. That is what they call a bond in this case. The full details of the transaction will be made public to our stockholders soon."

George A. Lamb has completed his papers in his action to procure a new election of Consolidated Trustees. The papers will probably be served to-day, and he will take the case into court, he expects, on Monday. Felix Jellenik said yesterday that he would not bring a suit if Mr. Lamb brought one.

"What I think can be established by an action for a new election," said he, "is the serving of substantial notice on the Consolidated Trustees that they must be honest with the stockholders."

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD ON TRUSTS.

Tells Alumni of Syracuse University They Are a Necessary Evolution of the Times.

The ninth annual dinner of the New York Association of Alumni of Syracuse University was held at the St. Denis Hotel last evening. Chancellor James R. Day, who spoke on the future of the university, said that the only thing needed by Syracuse in order to "secure the most magnificent opportunity of any university in America is a million dollars of endowments at once."

John D Archbold, President of the Board of Trustees of the university and a Director of the Standard Oil Company, responded to a toast on "Trusts." He said in part:

"Trusts, or, to speak correctly, large corporations, are a necessary evolution of the times. They represent a tremendous step of progress. The year 1900 will be marked in the history of our country for its great events in many ways affecting our National life, but in no one respect with more pronounced importance than in this commercial or corporate evolution.

"The outcry against these developments does not come from the great busy industrial classes, but from impractical sentimentalists, yellow journals, and political demagogues—from the latter perhaps more than any other. It is impossible to imagine in our National life any more pitiful object than that presented in the conceded representative head of one of the great political parties finding the principal topic for his demagogic harangues in attacks on our National thrift and financial stability.

"The remedy for the unrest on this question undoubtedly lies in the direction of National or Federal corporations. If such corporations should be made possible under such fair restrictions and provisions as should rightfully attach to them, any branch of business could be freely entered upon by all comers, and the talk of monopoly would be done away with.

"Our present system of State corporations, almost as varied in their provisions as the number of States, is vexatious alike to the business community and to the authorities of the several States. Such Federal action need not take away from the State its right to taxation or police regulation, but would make it possible for business organizations to know the general terms, on which they could conduct their business in the country at large."

The other speakers were Dean Albert Leonard of the College of Liberal Arts, George H. Bond, Arthur Copeland, and Miss Austiana E. Taylor. The following officers of the association were elected for the ensuing year: President—Charles O. Dewey; First Vice President—J. Frank Tallman; Second Vice President—The Rev. E. L. Fox; Secretary—Lincoln E. Rowley; Treasurer—F. Z. Lewis; Corresponding Secretary—Miss Florence Hermans.

HONORS HIS OWN MEMORY.

Brady for Years Bedecks Monument Bearing His Name with Those of Known Soldier Dead.

In the public park at Flushing, L. I., is a monument erected by the citizens of that place. The inscription on the monument is as follows:

"Erected in honor of the patriotic volunteers from Flushing who sacrificed their lives in the war for the preservation of our Union, 1861-1865."

On four tablets are inscribed the names of the men who fell in battle. On the north tablet of the monument the third name is that of John Brady. For more than thirty years the people of Flushing have supposed him to be dead. It now appears that Brady is alive and that he has known of the mistake for a number of years. Once a year, on Memorial Day, he has gone to the monument and placed flowers thereon in honor of himself and his fallen comrades.

Brady lives at Corona, L. I. He is sexton of the Methodist church there. He has raised a family of five children. On Oct. 21, 1861, he enlisted at Palace Garden on Fourteenth Street as a member of Company H, Eighty-seventh New York Volunteers His Captain was John Betts, and Col. Dodge commanded the regiment. Brady went first to Washington with the regiment. He was afterward in the Peninsular campaign, and was at the battle of Gettysburg. He was wounded four times. He was discharged at Bundy Station, Va., on Dec. 28, 1863.

Brady returned to Flishing, and after a short rest decided to re-enlist. Just before his regiment, the Fortieth New York, left for the seat of war he injured his hand Before the injury got well the fighting was over. Brady's name appeared on the list of the men who went to the front, but it did not appear among those mustered out. Hence the impression got abroad that he was among the dead. He dropped out of sight, and did not appear until after the monument was erected. When Brady discovered that his name was on the monument he said nothing about it until within the past few days.

WOULD BOYCOTT MRS. BOOTH.

Flushing Residents Asked to Remain Away from a Lecture.

Mrs. Ballington Booth is scheduled to lecture in Flushing next Monday night. Mrs. Booth recently established her home for ex-convicts there, and has caused considerable indignation among the residents of the place. Walter B. Lawrence, one of the most prominent men of the village, has issued a public statement in which he requests all residents of the place to stay away from Mrs. Booth's lecture.

Mr. Lawrence says: "I hope there is enough public spirit in Flushing to induce all good people to stay away from Mrs. Booth's lecture. Here is a woman—however good her intentions—whose fanatical disregard of private rights has put a stigma upon our town which will cling to us for years."

Mrs. Booth's lecture is to be given under the auspices of the Good Citizenship League, in which are most of the prominent women of the town.

MILLER AGAIN INDICTED.

Kings Grand Jury's Reported Findings Against Franklin Syndicate.

The Kings County Grand Jury yesterday handed to Judge Aspinall three indictments which are alleged to be against members of the Franklin Syndicate. The indictments were placed in the court safe by direction of the Judge, and nothing concerning them was made public.

It is asserted that one of the indictments has been found against William F. Miller, the missing manager of the syndicate. Miller is said to be in Canada, and under the new indictment, which is alleged to be for a felony, he can be extradited. One of the other indictments presented yesterday is declared to be against a man who backed the syndicate. The third indictment was reported to be against a man who aided Miller to escape. It was said about the Court House late yesterday afternoon, however, that this indictment had no connection with the Miller case.

District Attorney Clarke refused to disclose the nature of the indictments.

MONTREAL, Jan. 26.—The Associated Press is authorized to announce on the very highest authority that the Dominion police have no knowledge of the whereabouts of Miller, the Franklin Syndicate manager, and that no representations have been made to them by any of the United States authorities in the matter.

Steamer Herman Winter Arrives.

The Metropolitan Line steamer Herman Winter, which ran down and sank the steamer Ardandhu off Vineyard Haven early in the week, arrived here yesterday. Officers of the Metropolitan Line gave out a statement yesterday in which they said the accident was caused by the Ardandhu crossing the Herman Winter's bow, apparently through a misunderstanding of signals.

Crew of Sinking Schooner Rescued.

The Captain and crew of the schooner Allan A. McIntyre, which was abandoned last Tuesday in latitude 30.55 and longitude 67.29, arrived here yesterday by the Red Cross steamer Lisbouense. The schooner, which hailed from St. John, N. B., left Pensacola, Fla., about three weeks ago with a cargo of lumber. She encountered rough weather and became water-logged.

WINTER COMES TO TOWN.

Borne on the Wings of a Seventy-six-Mile Breeze—Thermometer Takes a Slump.

Winter, which has been lingering for several months somewhere out in the wilds of the Northwest until New Yorkers got the impression that they were going to be neglected this year, got into town yesterday morning with a full assortment of plumbers' luxuries ready to do business at the old stand.

The cold wave arrived shortly after midnight on the Dakota Limited seventy-six mile-an-hour zephyr, and as soon as it had flanked the greater city began to whoop things up in lively fashion. It was raining at midnight on Thursday, and two hours later the gentle breeze from the Northwest took a hand, and the mercury from that time forward began to crawl back down toward the bulb.

At 3 o'clock the thermometer registered 39 degrees, and by 6 o'clock the mercury showed but 28 degrees. At 6:30 o'clock the northwest wind was howling through the street at the rate of seventy-six miles an hour. Three hours later this speed had lessened to sixty-six miles an hour, and at noon the dust-filled breeze was only drifting along at the rate of a mile a minute. The thermometer at this hour registered 21 degrees and the mercury was still retreating in disorder.

Throughout the entire afternoon and evening the wind rarely decreased its speed below sixty miles an hour, and occasionally spurted to seventy miles, which, with the increasing cold, caused such good old-fashioned annoyance and misery as have not been enjoyed by New Yorkers this season As the breezes swept around corners signboards were torn loose from their fastenings and hurled to the street, where they were shunted along at alarming rates. Pedestrians held their hats on with one benumbed hand, while with the other they held together their overcoats or skirts.

At frequent intervals angry men were seen frantically chasing their hats down the streets. In the clouds of dust and whistling wind it was exceedingly difficult to dodge trolley cars, and several serious accidents in this respect were narrowly averted. For a woman to walk anywhere was a serious undertaking, and there were few of them on the street. The wind burst in a plate-glass window in a drug store at Eighty-second Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

All this time the thermometer was retiring modestly. At 6 o'clock in the evening it showed 18 degrees. It lost another degree by 9 o'clock, and at 10:15 o'clock 15 degrees was the figure, with the mercury still bounding downward.

The Weather Bureau people stated that this cold wave was what was left of a genuine northwest blizzard on its way to the sea. The storm centre was off Eastport, Me., last night.

AMERICAN COLLIER WRECKED.

Struck a Reef Off Vancouver While in Charge of Canadian Pilot.

SEATTLE, Washington, Jan. 26.—The steel collier Miami, belonging to the Pacific Coast Company, was wrecked on a reef near Oyster Bay, on the east shore of Vancouver Island. She is a total loss, as she broke in two and went to the bottom. Her entire crew were saved.

The Miami was on her way to San Francisco with 4,000 tons of coal when the accident occurred. She struck amidships, and when the tide receded the weight of her cargo broke her back. Underwriters and agents have gone to the scene of the wreck. The loss is estimated at $250,000, with $10,000 additional for the cargo.

The ship was in charge of a Canadian pilot at the time, in accordance with the Dominion regulations requiring an American vessel to have a Canadian pilot in Canadian waters. The Miami has been in service between Puget Sound and British Columbia ports and San Francisco as a collier for less than a year.

PATRIA'S CAPTAIN CENSURED.

Investigators Say He Should Have Run Burning Ship Ashore.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The report of the official investigators at Hamburg into the causes of the loss of the Hamburg-American liner Patria, which took fire at sea Nov. 15 last, was deserted by her crew, then taken in tow, and after varying fortunes ultimately sank off the English coast, concludes with a censure of Capt. Froelich for not running the burning vessel ashore, expressing the belief that the fire was due to the self-ignition of clover seed stored near the engine room.

Dominion Liner Jamestown Aground.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 26.—The Old Dominion liner Jamestown was driven ashore in a heavy gale off Lambert's Point to-day. She was coming from Newport News to Norfolk, and in trying to avoid collision with a coal fleet off the point was run aground. No passengers were on board. Tugs are trying to float her.

WOMAN CATCHES ALLEGED THIEF

Recognizes Him on the Street and Holds Him Until Help Comes.

A man thought to be a sneakthief implicated in several recent boarding house robberies, was caught by the police yesterday through the pluck of Mrs. E. J. Kimball, who keeps a boarding house at 24 Irving Place. Mrs. Kimball, whose house, it is alleged, was robbed by the man several days ago, after he had engaged a room from her under the name of Gilbert Mantell, caught sight of him in Irving Place. She seized him and screamed, holding him in spite of his struggles, until Detectives Kelly and Cain had rushed to the spot.

Mrs. Kimball charged the man with theft, and he was taken to the police station. On him were found a bunch of skeleton keys and a note addressed to a lawyer, which said: "I am going to take your advice and skip the town." Mantell was arraigned before Magistrate Pool in the Yorkville Police Court, and held until this morning without bail.

Mantell, who is a good-looking man about thirty years old, is thought to be the man who robbed a boarding house in the Bronx several weeks ago. He was also recognized in court as the man who was arraigned on Dec. 28, charged with stealing a bicycle, a suit of clothes, and an umbrella under the name of Judah T. Schinisky. He furnished $1,000 bail at that time and jumped the bond.

COUNSELOR NOLAN ANNOYED.

Complains of Policeman Boyle's Habit of Dropping Paperweights.

Thomas Nolan, Junior Assistant Corporation Counsel, has a grievance against Policeman Boyle, who is detailed at the Corporation Counsel's office. He says that Boyle has been annoying him for some time, and announced several days ago that he would stand it no longer. Two days ago he notified Chief Devery of his trouble, and the Chief, in turn, notified Inspector Cross.

When the counselor was summoned to appear before the Inspector, at Police Headquarters yesterday, however, he sent back word that he had decided not to make any formal complaint against Boyle.

Boyle has a desk in a room through which the junior Assistant Corporation Counsel is frequently obliged to pass. To assist him in his clerical duties, he has assembled a large collection of paperweights, of various shapes and sizes on his desk.

Counselor Nolan, who has been extremely nervous ever since his accident on a street car some time ago, says that Boyle has collected the paperweights just to annoy him, and drops several of them on the floor with a crash whenever he enters the room.

Several attendants in the Corporation Counsel's office think that the policeman has caught the nervous contagion from the counselor. At any rate, it is certain that he is careless in handling his stack of paperweights, and at times fills the room with a sound like the rattle of musketry.

Mr. Nolan says the dropping of an occasional paperweight would not bother him in the least, but that the constant succession of crashes which he is obliged to listen to is gradually wearing away his nervous system.

RELIGIOUS NEWS AND VIEWS

President McKinley Will Attend Foreign Missions Conference.

TO BE HELD HERE NEXT APRIL

He Expresses His Interest in the Work and Is Gratified So Many Delegates Will Be Present.

President McKinley will attend the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions in this city in April, and preside on one of the ten days of the meeting, unless something unforeseen prevents. To a committee, consisting of Bishop Satterlee, Morris K. Jesup, Henry W. Grant, and others, which called upon him in Washington this week, he expressed warm interest in the conference, and was gratified when told that already the number of delegates to be in attendance reaches about 1,200. Continental Europe and some other foreign societies are to be heard from, and it is now anticipated that the total number of delegates will reach 2,000.

Gratifying success has attended the efforts of the Committee on Entertainment. Originally it was planned to raise a large fund to pay the cost of entertaining foreign delegates. By asking Methodist families to take Methodist delegates to their homes, Congregational families to take Congregational delegates, and so on, it is found that the necessary entertainment fund is lessened, and the probabilities of benefit from the conference enhanced. It is now planned to have union meetings in adjacent towns both in advance of the conference and on the Sundays which its dates cover.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Notes on the International Series Selection for Feb. 4, 1900.

Copyright, 1900, by John R. Whitney.

SUBJECT—The First Disciples of Jesus. John, i., 35-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—They followed Jesus. John, i., 37.

Exactly when the incident brought before us in this lesson occurred is by no means clear. Neither is its relation to the temptation in the wilderness. The time and relationship are therefore evidently of not much practical importance, except to the critic and the harmonist. To the humble believer the facts themselves are sufficient to satisfy his faith and to awaken his devout thanksgiving, no matter when or under what circumstances they occurred.

It is not unreasonable, however, to suppose, from the records as they stand, that immediately after "the temptation," if that was an isolated and specific event, Jesus "returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee," as stated by St. Luke. There His ministrations and His teaching, whatever they were, excited great attention. (Luke, iv., 14, 15.) How long they were continued we are not told. Probably, as we shall see later on, it was during this visit that the memorable scene in the synagogue of Nazareth took place. (Luke, iv., 16-30.)

While Jesus was thus in Galilee, John the Baptist continued his ministry near the banks of the Jordan, at a place called "Bethabara." (John i., 28.) While he baptized at Bethabara his fame had so greatly spread abroad that "the Jews"—that is, the great council of the Jews, the Sanhedrin—"sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, 'Who art thou?'" Faithfully and clearly he gave his testimony that he was "not the Christ," but only "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias." (vv., 19-27.)

"The next day," after John had given this testimony to the deputation from Jerusalem, Jesus appeared again before him as suddenly and as unexpectedly as He did at His baptism. He had come from Galilee, but He came alone as He did before. His ministry there had awakened curiosity, and anger and opposition, but apparently it had not drawn to Him any disciples. John, however, knew Him now as he did not at His baptism. So as he saw "Jesus coming unto him," he called the attention of all about him to His presence, but it was by a new and very significant title. He did not say, Behold Him who baptized with the Holy Ghost, or even, Behold the Son of God, but "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (v. 29.)

Probably those who heard this strange announcement thought that all that was required of them was to live better lives, and that all that they needed was care to resist and overcome temptation, which would daily assail them. This is the thought of very many in our own day, and knowing of Jesus's temptation, as the men who stood before John did not know, they look upon it not as an experience necessary in His work of redemption in order that He might "be made like unto His brethren," (Hebrew. ii., 17,) but as an example by the copying of which His brethren might be made like unto Him. If they "resist the devil," as He did, they are assured that "he will flee from" them. (James, iv., 7,) and so they satisfy themselves that this is all that is needed to make them acceptable to God as well as to men. For then they will be without reproach. This is the logic of human reason, but it is not the teaching of the Holy Ghost. If it were then repentance, prayer and watchfulness without any atonement would be sufficient to give peace to the troubled conscience, and acceptance with God.

WHAT JOHN TAUGHT.

But John taught very differently from this. When he pointed out Jesus as "The Lamb of God," he went on to tell his hearers more fully concerning him. A portion of what he said is recorded in John, i., 26-34, and another portion in John iii., 28-36. Putting them together, the testimony is, This is He of whom I said—After me cometh a Man which was before me. He must increase, but I must decrease, for He was before me. He that cometh from above is above all; he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth; He that cometh from heaven is above all. I knew Him not. "But He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me: Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost, and I saw, and bare record, that this is the Son of God. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." For He is the "Lamb of God"; the only One "Which taketh away the sin of the world."

According to this testimony of John the Baptist, therefore, Jesus of Nazareth was One who had come down from Heaven. He was the very Son of God. By his baptism it had been declared that He would meet every demand of the law of righteousness, and by this testimony that He would also meet all its demands for penalty. As "the Son of God" in the flesh He would live a life of obedience to the law to be imputed to the sinner, and as "the Lamb of God" in the flesh He would die as a sacrifice acceptable to God, to atone for the sinner's disobedience. And all this was to be made available to the sinner by faith, for "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." Thus John the Baptist gave "knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins," (Luke, i., 77,) through an acceptable sacrifice. Evidently he had a very deep spiritual insight into the grace of God.

But John also testified of this God-Man, "What He hath seen and heard, that He testifieth; and no man receiveth His testimony." (John iii., 32.) Neither did the multitude receive John's testimony concerning Him. When he said "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world," the whole multitude probably turned and looked after Jesus, as many do to-day as an object worthy of a moment's attention, but not as an object for their faith, and that because of their idea of sin. That idea was that it could be washed away by water and overcome by good resolutions. It was far beyond their comprehension that it was of such a character that only the sacrifice of the Son of God "as a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter, i., 19,) could at all atone for it. So there is no record that a single one of all of John's hearers that day followed Jesus. They heard of His origin and of His work, they saw His very person, they were told plainly by one in whom they had every confidence "he that believeth not on the Son shall not see life," and yet they were satisfied with the baptism of repentance, and felt no need of that of the Holy Ghost, or of the cleansing blood of "The Lamb of God."

"THE LAMB OF GOD."

On "the next day" (v. 35) John was engaged in conversation with two of his disciples. They, probably, were not present when he pointed out Jesus to the multitude, and it was, probably, in an interval between his public preaching services. They were fishermen from the neighborhood of the Sea of Galilee. They were evidently earnest, thoughtful men. As they plied their trade on the sea, they had heard of his preaching. It at once made a strong appeal to them, for they were evidently not satisfied with themselves or with their prospects. So they left their nets to sit at John's feet and learn how they could be delivered from the power and the penalty of sin.

They were Andrew and John, but John is careful to conceal his name in telling the story. They were accompanied by Simon, the brother of Andrew, and probably by James, the brother of John. These two brothers, however, were not with them on this day, when they were enjoying the private and personal instructions of their teacher. He had undoubtedly told them, as he had told the multitude the day before, that "he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," (iii., 36,) but who "the Son" was and how He could take away sin must have been very obscure to their minds. They had never seen Him, and they knew nothing of His work. But as John endeavor to instruct them, and as they listened, eager to be instructed, suddenly Jesus Himself walked by them. Evidently He had had no communication with John since His arrival; the day before He had come suddenly into the neighborhood and had then as suddenly disappeared. But John at once recognized Him again, and, turning to his disciples, he said: "Behold the Lamb of God." (v. 36.) They immediately left John and "they followed Jesus."

The peculiar and important part a lamb took in their religious services they well understood. Every day, morning and evening, (Exodus, xxix., 39,) a lamb "without blemish" was offered as a whole burnt offering on the great altar in the Temple as an atonement for the sins of the people. Once every year, on the great day of the Atonement, they also knew that the high priest took two lambs of the goats and, offering one of them upon the altar, he sprinkled its blood upon the other, and then, laying "both his hands upon the head of the live goat," he confessed "over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel and all their transgressions in all their sins," putting them "upon the head of the goat," or "imputing" them to him. Then he sent "him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness." (Leviticus, xvi.,) and they were taken away, to be remembered no more forever.

They also knew that the great feast of "The Passover"—to which as devout Jews they had gone up to Jerusalem every year since they were fifteen years old—was instituted expressly to keep them in mind of the deliverance of their forefathers from the bondage of Egypt, through the blood of a lamb sprinkled in faith upon the doors of their houses. (Exodus, xii.) But all of these lambs were selected by men. They had probably often selected such themselves, and they knew from sad experience that "it is not possible that the blood of bulls, and of goats, should take away sins." (Hebrews, x., 4.) Here, however, in the person of the living man, they were told to "behold the Lamb" selected by God Himself, and who could take away "the sin of the world."

Leaving, therefore, John the Baptist, Andrew and John drew near to Jesus of Nazareth. As soon as He saw them He turned—as He always does to those who truly seek Him—and inquired: "What seek ye?"

"Master," they said, "where dwellest Thou?"

"Come and see," was His gracious reply. So they went in with Him into the place where He lodged, "and abode with Him that day." "It was about the tenth hour." (v. 39.) If the time was reckoned according to the Roman day—as probably it was—it was 10 o'clock in the morning, and nearly the whole day was spent "with Him." If, however, the time was Jewish time, it was 4 in the afternoon, and only two hours yet remained before night. But even this was long enough to make a complete change in the purposes and hopes of these two men. Those few hours of personal communion with "The Lamb of God" must have been very precious hours. They were men who were deeply conscious that they were sinners. It was that which had sent them to John the Baptist. But now they had sat at the feet of Him who could take away sin—"the sin of the world"—by the atoning sacrifice of Himself. They must have come away with a gladness of heart to which they had long been strangers.

SPREADING THE GOOD NEWS.

But when they went out from His presence it was not to keep their joy to themselves. No one who has ever had the experiences which they had that day ever did. Although they were not called immediately to follow Jesus as His recognized disciples, yet they were ready to respond to His call to be so enrolled whenever He should make it. But they did not wait for that. Immediately Andrew found his brother Simon, and probably John his brother James, although with characteristic modesty he never tells us of what he did himself. As soon as they found them they told them the good news which had filled their own hearts with so much joy. "We have found the Messias," they said.

Evidently this was the great fact made known to them by Jesus Himself just as He afterward revealed it to the woman of Sychar. (John, iv., 25, 26.) It said to them in some dim, perhaps, but no uncertain way that this man of Nazareth was none other than the long-expected Messiah of whom "Moses in the law, and the prophets did write." (v. 45,) and of whom the Psalmist had sung, the very Son of God, and the Lamb of God.

So they brought their brothers to Jesus. As soon as He saw Simon, He welcomed him to Himself, and gave him a new name. He would not know him simply as "the son of Jona," but uniting him to Himself, the living "Rock," (I Cor., x., 4,) He said: "Thou shalt be called Cephas;" Cephas in Syriac meaning rock, or a stone, the same as Petros in Greek.

The next day Jesus returned to Galilee. (v. 43.) Probably Andrew and Peter, and John and James accompanied Him. (ii., 2.) On His arrival there He did not wait for some one to bring new disciples to Him, but Himself "findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow Me." So He often deals with the sons of men even yet; some are called by the zeal of those who have found Him, and some are called by Himself directly. Probably Philip had attended His ministry when in Galilee before, but had not joined himself to Him. Now, however, he was ready to be called into His fellowship and service.

But as soon as he was joined to Jesus Himself, like Andrew and John, he sought out his friend Nathaniel. At first his friend was staggered at the idea of the Messiah coming out of Nazareth, but all of his objections were stilled by Philip's simple request, "Come and see." This is the only way to know Him, whom to know is eternal life. (John, xvii., 3.) It was the way by which each one of these first six disciples were taught. It has been the way by which all have learned since then, and probably will be the only way until the end of time. It is the silencer of doubt and the strengthener of faith.

DEPOSITORS DEMAND MONEY

Closing of the Canajoharie Bank Causes Run in Fort Plain.

Institution in That Place, However, Meets the Emergency—Richmond's Death Doubted.

FORT PLAIN, N. Y., Jan. 26.—Owing to the closing of the Canajoharie National Bank yesterday by order of the Controller of the Currency at Washington on account of the condition of affairs left by the late President A. G. Richmond, the run continued here to-day on the Farmers and Mechanics', Bank, of which Richmond was also President. The Farmers and Mechanics', however, was equal to the emergency, having received assistance from the Fort Plain National Bank, and proffers of assistance from National banks at Little Falls and St. Johnsville.

All day long the Farmers and Mechanics' was filled with more or less nervous men and women holding certificates of deposit, but as fast as the money was demanded it was handed out, the force being doubled for the occasion, and big piles of currency being conspicuously and conveniently displayed. Toward the close of banking hours the excitement subsided, while the stacks of money apparently had not decreased.

Considerable distress has been caused by the closing of the Canajoharie National Bank. Many men, both of large and small means, are tied up financially. It now appears that Richmond traveled extensively, lived and entertained ostentatiously, and was supposed to be worth at least $250,000. It is now believed that he was not worth more than $35,000. His paper is coming to the front on all sides. An Albany bank recently filed a judgment against his estate for $7,000.

It is now believed that the Clark Fabric Company, at Sydney, N. Y., was the cause of Richmond's trouble.

Richmond is said to have been found dead at his sister's home in an obscure hamlet in Madison County, far from his town residence, and at the time, and more so lately, there were various rumors of suicide. But now there are those of the opinion that he is not dead at all, but that he is traveling abroad. It is known that he carried big life insurance policies, over $50,000 in all, $10,000 having been taken out only a few months prior to his reported death. It is said that only one payment was ever made on the $10,000 policy before Richmond's death or disappearance.

EX-MAYOR OF COLUMBUS DEAD.

Cotton Hayden Allen Expires in St. Louis After a Long Illness.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 26.—After an illness of several months, Cotton Hayden Allen, ex-Mayor of Columbus, died to-day at the Southern Hotel, aged sixty-five years. The body will be taken to Columbus for interment.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 26.—There was rpofound regret manifested here on the announcement of the death of former Mayor Allen, who was one of the foremost business men of Columbus. He was the general manager of the vast Hayden interests in this city. The City Council and the Board of Trade have called special meetings to take action on his death.

PHILADELPHIA FACTORY BURNS.

Twelve Employes Hurt and One Reported Missing.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—The Angora Manufacturing Company's plant was destroyed by fire to-day and one employe, Lizzie Blackburn, aged seventeen, is missing. Her body is believed to be in the ruins. The factory was located at Angora, in the southwestern extremity of the city, and employed 130 hands in the manufacture of cotton yarns.

The fire started in the "mule room," and is believed to have originated from an overheated bearing on one of the machines. The flames spread rapidly, and soon the entire mill, a four-story brick structure, was levelled to the ground. The male employes who worked on the first floor escaped without difficulty, but there was a panic among the upper floors, twelve of the employes being injured. The loss is about $150,000, partly covered by insurance.

"HYPNOTIC" CRIMINAL DEAD.

Joseph Lamb, the Toledo Peddler, Who Was Accused of Forgery.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Joseph Lamb, for many years an express agent here, died of heart disease in the house of strangers this afternoon, where he went to peddle brooms.

Lamb acquired notoriety ten years ago through his connection with Mme. Lydia Devere, for whom he negotiated a note for $5,000, to which the name of C. F. Brown, a wealthy Youngstown iron manufacturer, was forged. This was one of several similar cases, and both were arrested and tried.

Irving Belford, now Clerk of the Federal Court here, defended Lamb and astonished the bar and jurors by admitting all charges but pleading that Lamb had acted while under hypnotic influence.

It was the first time this defense was ever made in an American court, but it was established to the satisfaction of the jury, and the express agent was acquitted. He lost his position, and has since been making and peddling brooms.

PRAIRIE FIRE NEAR TARRYTOWN

Big Marsh Burned Over, Flames Leaping Twenty Feet Into the Air.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 26.—This village had an illustration to-night of what a fire on the prairies is like. A big marsh, eight acres in extent, north of the village, was burned over. During the Summer the grass and weeds grew to a height of four or five feet. This was uncut, and in some manner took fire.

Flames twenty to thirty feet high rolled in the air and the roar could be heard for a mile. Several large residences are situated not far from the swamp, and there was danger that the high winds would carry the flames to them.

The firemen were called out to fight back the flames, and despite the great heat they suffered severely. Close to the fire the heat was great enough to blister their faces, but further back the wind cut through them and their wet clothing froze stiff. The fire presented a fine sight and, unmindful of the weather, a large crowd turned out to see the sight.

The marsh was formerly owned by William Rockefeller. He sold it some time ago to J. B. Walker of The Cosmopolitan, and it is said that a large automobile factory is to be built upon it.

Preferences in Bankruptcy Cases.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Ruling was made in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals to-day by Judges Jenkins, Wood, and Bunn that a creditor who within four months of his debtors' bankruptcy has innocently received a payment on his debt cannot be permitted to prove his debt in the bankruptcy proceedings nor receive from the estate of the bankrupt a dividend thereon without surrendering the preference allowed. The ruling is said to establish a new precedent for creditors under the National bankruptcy law. The decision was handed down in the appeal of the Columbus Electric Company against Charles H. Worden, Trustee of the Fort Wayne Electric Corporation.

War Department Orders.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The War Department has issued an order providing for the filling of vacancies in the Signal Corps by transfer from the line of the army of officers less than thirty years of age, who have served at least two years, and passed a satisfactory examination. The order provides that exception be made in the case of officers with distinguished war service, when the age limit may be increased to forty years.

Another order allows thirty cents for every twenty miles of travel to discharged soldiers making their way home.

Mite of Human Kind Dead.

John Murray, ten days old, died last night at 457 West Fiftieth Street. When little John came into this world he weighed but twenty ounces, and was one of the smallest children ever born in this city. The mite of humanity attracted much notice, and the tenants of the big house, as well as his parents, sincerely mourn his death.

LYNCHING IN COLORADO.

One of the Convicts Who Murdered the Night Captain of Canyon City Penitentiary Hanged by a Mob.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 26.—A man named Reynolds was taken from the officers of the law at Canyon City to-night and hanged to a telegraph pole just outside the penitentiary walls.

Reynolds and a companion named Wagner escaped from the Colorado penitentiary after killing Night Captain Rooney. Wagner is said to have held Rooney, while Reynolds stabbed him. The men were subsequently captured, but Wagner escaped.

Immediately on receipt of the news that Reynolds was in custody the fire bells at Canyon City were rung and the town turned out en masse for the lynching.

TONS OF MAIL MATTER HELD.

Stacked Up on the British Columbia Border on Account of Dispute as to Smallpox Disinfection.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Jan. 26.—International authorities have clashed over the quarantine declared by British Columbia against Eastern Washington mails on account of smallpox. Since Tuesday night all American mail over the Spokane Falls and Northern Railway has been tied up at Northport, Washington, at the boundary line. Canadian officials insist that Americans fumigate the mails. Americans insist that Canadians disinfect it. The matter was referred to Washington, and the Postmaster General refuses to give orders to disinfect the mail on this side. The Canadians referred the matter to Ottawa, and the dispute is now being waged between the Canadian and American postal authorities. Meanwhile tons of mail are being stacked up at Northport.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Superintendent White of the Railway Mail Service said to-day that the United States officials, when they learned of the prevalence of smallpox at Spokane, had directed that all mail leaving that place should be disinfected, but as the disease has not appeared between Spokane and the Canadian border, it has not been deemed necessary to fumigate the mail after it leaves the infected city.

But few Post Offices on the Gulf coast are permenently provided with disinfecting apparatus, so the order could not be put into effect immediately. It was also directed that any mail which may have left Spokane for British Columbia, which is suspected of being infected, shall be returned to Spokane for fumigation.

Post Office officials here are of opinion that if the British Columbian officials desire to have the mails disinfected at the border they should attend to that duty themselves. All the mail in question is addressed to residents of British Columbia, and some of it originated in Canada. It has been the custom of this Government to disinfect mails from infected countries as soon as they cross the borders.

MRS. BOWMAN'S DIAMONDS FOUND

Mrs. G. A. Bowman of the St. Cloud Hotel, who caused the arrest Sunday night of her nurse girl, Viola Moore, a mulatto, thirteen years old, on the charge of taking diamonds valued at $600, sent word to the police yesterday that she had found her diamonds. Before leaving the hotel Sunday afternoon she had put her jewels in a chamois bag, which she placed in her corsage. Upon her return she disrobed and lay down in a wrapper to take a nap. When she awoke the diamonds were missing and could not be found. Yesterday Mrs. Bowman found the bag of jewels caught in the torn lining of a skirt she was about to put on.

When arrested the girl was so frightened that she told the police that she had found the diamonds on the floor, and had thrown them out of the window. At another time she said she had placed them in the Sixth Avenue trolley slot. She was placed in the custody of the Gerry society. Her mother now threatens to bring a suit for damages against Mrs. Bowman.

HOBOKEN'S NEW LIGHT CONCERN.

Mayor Fagan Said to be Interested in the Company.

The Municipal Light, Heat, and Power Company, which on Wednesday applied to the Hoboken Common Council for a franchise, yesterday filed articles of incorporation with County Clerk Fisher, at Jersey City. The capital stock is $300,000. The incorporators are John Bruning, 2,000 shares, and Joseph Walsh and Mr. Wallenstein, 500 shares each.

It was reported in Hoboken yesterday that Mayor Fagan was interested in the new company, but he refused to confirm or deny the statement or to discuss the matter in any way. Mr. Bruning, the principal stockholder, said Mayor Fagan had no interest in the company, direct or indirect.

It was also reported that Mayor Fagan had purchased the property recently owned by the defunct North River Light and Power Company. This the Mayor denied positively.

James F. Minturn, Corporation Attorney, has given an opinion informally to Councilmen Steil and Frommel to the effect that the present contract with the North Hudson Light, Heat, and Power Company for lighting the streets and public buildings of Hoboken is invalid and may be set aside at any time.

CHURCH-GOING CARD PLAYERS.

Evangelist Compares Them with Darky Crap Shooters.

The Rev. L. G. Broughton, the Atlanta evangelist, who is leading the revival in Brooklyn, made an attack upon euchre players at the meeting in Association Hall yesterday.

"These society folks," said Dr. Broughton, "go about playing euchre for prizes, and it is advertised in the society columns that Mrs. So and So won a box of candy or something else, but they don't call it gambling.

"Why, down my way, if they catch two or three little darkies in the back alley shooting craps they'll arrest them and put them in jail. Are they doing anything worse than these churchgoing card players?

"What's the difference between them and regular gamblers? Only the difference between a streak of green and a streak of red."

Mr. Shearman on Revival Movement.

Much criticism of the present revival movement in Brooklyn was made at the regular weekly prayer meeting at Plymouth Church last night. Thomas G. Shearman declared that the present movement had developed into a tirade against Unitarianism rather than a fight against sin, and his opinion was echoed by many others present. The present revivals were complained of as unlike in spirit and tone the revivals which had been conducted by Plymouth Church.

Could Remember It.

"Is it the grip that ails me, doctor?"

"It's the grip. Take this powder three times a day. As soon as you go home have your wife mix you some hot whisky and lemon juice—wait a moment. I'll write it down."

"That won't be necessary, doctor. I can remember the hot whisky and lemon juice."—Chicago Tribune.

POLITICIANS IN A DISPUTE.

S. M. Brice and Jocelyn Johnson Bring Cab Driver to Terms.

Councilman Stewart M. Brice and Jocelyn Johnson, President Guggenheimer's secretary, had a lively discussion with a cab driver last night over an alleged overcharge, which was finally submitted to the arbitration of the Night Sergeant at the West Thirtieth Street Police Station.

Mr. Brice and Mr. Johnson hired a cab at the Holland House early in the evening and drove to the Democratic Club. The driver was Martin Hedron of 419 West Fifty-third Street. About two hours and a half were spent at the Democratic Club. At the end of that time they drove to Thirtieth Street and Sixth Avenue. Here they alighted and offered to pay the fare.

The whole time occupied had been 3½ hours, which, according to the city ordinance, fixing cab rates at $1 per hour, made the fare $3.50. Hedron, however, demanded $4.50, and said he had never heard of the ordinance.

The argument had begun to draw a crowd, so the disputants agreed to submit the question to the Sergeant of the police station near by. Hedron was instructed in the law and accepted $3.50.

Asked Col. Gardiner Too High a Fare.

A cab driver who gave his name as James Bengough of 99 Perry Street, was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday, charged with refusing to get out of line at the Old Guard ball when ordered to do so. The policeman who made the arrest told Magistrate Hogan that the prisoner had been called by Col. Asa Bird Gardiner, and had demanded $2 to go from the Opera House to the Waldorf-Astoria. This Col. Gardiner refused to pay, and when the driver refused to get out of the line and give place to another driver, he had arrested him. Magistrate Hogan said it was wrong to try to extort $2 from the Colonel, and discharged the prisoner.

A BURGLAR'S HUMOROUS PRANK.

Took Long Risk to Collect Valuables and Then Left Them Behind.

A burglar visited the flat of Morris Iselbacker, at 871 Third Avenue, Wednesday afternoon. As a gentle intimation of his sense of humor, he removed a pillow case from a bed upon which Mrs. Iselbacker was taking a nap at the time. Then carefully avoiding the five other members of the family who were in the other rooms, he slipped into each room as it was temporarily vacated, collecting altogether $200 worth of clothing and jewelry. This he appropriately placed in the pillow case. Then his sense of humor, or his nerve, or both, failed him, and from the heap of plunder he selected a dress suit, with proper cuff, collar, and shirt accompaniments, and then, throwing a light overcoat over his arm, walked out.

Mrs. Iselbacker had gone into the front room to lie down. The other members of the family, two children, a cousin, a nurse, and a servant, were in other parts of the flat when five-year-old Elsie found the hall door open. She thought this was queer, as she had locked it half an hour before. She alarmed the household and a search was begun. In the parlor they found the missing articles packed in the pillow case, among them a sealskin jacket. Only the overcoat and dress suit were gone.

PRESIDENT EBBETS HOME.

Says Cleveland and Louisville Have Agreed to Leave the League.

Charles H. Ebbets, President of the Brooklyn Baseball Club and part owner of the Baltimore Club, returned yesterday from Cleveland, where he attended the meeting of the Circuit Committee of the National League. Mr. Ebbets said that the question of reducing the circuit to eight clubs this season was thoroughly discussed, but no definite action was taken.

As the question now stands the committee has decided to go along on a ten-club basis, the Cleveland and Louisville clubs having accepted the offer of the League to drop out. It is not known, however, whether the League will adopt a circuit of ten clubs. If it decides against a ten-club circuit two other cities will have to be added, and the twelve-club agreement carried cut until its expiration in 1902.

Mr. Ebbets announced that the Baltimore Club would proceed to send contracts to the Baltimore players despite the reports that McGraw, Robinson, and others of the team will join the American Association. He did not believe the report that the new association had secured the lease of the grounds of the Baltimore Club, as the present lease covers the season of 1900.

BASEBALL IN BALTIMORE.

McGraw Is Trying to Get Old Players for the New Association.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 26.—Fourteen men met in the Eutaw House to-night, and formally organized the Baltimore Club of the American Association of Baseball Players. Officers were elected as follows: President—Philip Peterson; Secretary and Treasurer—Harry Goldman; General Manager—John J. McGraw.

Messrs. Peterson, McGraw, and Conway, with W. Sams, counsel for the club, will attend the meeting of the association members at Philadelphia Tuesday.

Ned Hanlon's loss by his star players like McGraw and Robinson casting their fortunes with the new association will amount to $50,000. He valued the releases of McGraw and Robinson alone at $20,000.

It is apparent here that there will be a big bolt of players from the League to the association. Robinson, McGraw, and "Bill" Clarke say the blacklisting threats of the National League are a joke. All declared that they welcomed an organization which would treat them like men, and not sell them around like slaves.

McGraw sent letters to every member of the old Baltimore team asking them to sign with the new association. "Bill" Clarke says that he knows a number of good players now with league teams who will go with the association if the salary offered them is reasonable.

GOLF CONTESTS AT TAMPA.

Rawlins Defeats Low and Will Meet Smith To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 26.—Harry Rawlins beat out all new-comers to-day in a game of almost perfect golf. He was matched against George Low in the semi-finals, 18 holes, and beat him by 5 up and 4 to play. In addition to this, he beat bogey one stroke, making the course in 75. His opponent to-morrow will be Willie Smith, who met Launcelot Servos to-day and defeated him 2 up and 1 to play.

Both matches were strongly contested. Smith and Low were somewhat handicapped by playing over a new course against men accustomed to the lay of the land. The first three holes in their match were halved, the fourth went to Rawlins, the fifth halved, the sixth to Rawlins. This made them even. Then the seventh and eighth were halved. Rawlins made the ninth and was three up. After this Low could do no better than halve holes.

After warm work between Smith and Servos, they were even on the fifteenth hole, and Smith won the sixteenth and seventeenth, where Servos's ball fell in the sand road, and he lost the match in lifting it out. Smith scored 2 up and 1 to play.

Tom Dunn beat Col. Dick, 9 up, and W. E. Burlock, Jr., defeated Col. Gillespie, 2 up and 1 to play. This will bring Dunn and Burlock together in the finals to-morrow, 36 holes.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

News of British war disappointment cut as little figure in yesterday's stock market as on the day previous did favorable news. The market continued narrow and fluctuations were largely confined within the bounds of a single point.

Professional speculative interests alone show in the market—public activity having disappeared utterly. Even those pools which recently have been most aggressive show now disposition to be quiet and wait for opportunities which may promise something like fair response to their manipulative efforts to attract attention and customers.

It is probably within reasonable bounds to estimate that over 75 per cent. of transactions executed on the Stock Exchange originate upon the Stock Exchange floor, representing bets upon the part of the participating brokers and representing nothing else. Of any movement suggestive of intelligent appreciation of the country's business condition no sign is discernible anywhere.

To-day's bank statement will suggest some of the reasons which are warranting money market ease. Generally in banking circles the view obtains that cheap money will rule for some months to come—providing nothing disturbing intervenes. This sort of a forecast is not, however, inducing conservative users of capital to hesitate in arranging loans on time. Call funds are tending to figure so low that speculators are urging that such cheapness of funds assures security market activity, that lenders of money will be unable elsewhere to obtain fair returns. This view, though, is not so much underwritten by bankers of first importance as the chatter of Wall Street might suggest. Inquiring customers are being pretty uniformly advised by their bankers that it is wise to rely upon accommodation beyond call loan limits.

One uncertain factor of consequence has to do with the British Government's war loan programme. Advices from London have till this week been representing that such a loan would not be brought out before midsummer, but the cables of the last few days have named much earlier dates; and the rapid way in which the Bank of England has been reducing its discount rate is referred to by English financial authorities as indicative of a change in the loan plan, in so far, at least, as regards the date of its issue. Involved in this war loan's appearance is the question of effect upon international exchange, the question of the international gold movement. If to help out England the United States sends much gold abroad, money will hardly rule here at rates as low as Wall Street is predicting.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—There was a general collapse in the stock market to-day, especially in Kafirs, following the announcement of Gen. Warren's abandonment of Spion Kop.

The market for American securities, which was rather better than that for home securities, opened lower on unfavorable advices from South Africa. Later prices rallied slightly and the market ruled quiet, with a hardening tendency to the close. Business was limited to professional trading. The final tone was steady.

Consols for both money and the account, 100⅞; Canadian, 99½; Erie, 11⅞; Erie first preferred, 33⅛; Illinois Central, 115 ex dividend; Union Pacific preferred, 77; St. Paul, 121; New York Central, 136½; Pennsylvania, 66; Reading, 9; Northern Pacific preferred, 75⅞; Atchison, 19⅝; Louisville, 80⅝, ex dividend; Grand Trunk, 7⅝; Anaconda, 8⅝.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 131; Madrid, 28.40; Lisbon, 43.50; Rome, 7.17½. Bar gold, 77s. 9½d.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—Prices were weak at the opening on the Bourse to-day, owing to the announcement of the abandonment of Spion Kop by the British troops, and during the day international securities were quiet. Kafirs were greatly agitated, closing decidedly weaker. Other departments were dull. Rio Tintos were adversely affected, owing to large realizations on Darline Copper and the lack of confirmation of a rumor that a dividend was to be paid. Three per cent. rentes, 100f 25c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 18c for checks. Spanish 4s closed at 68.27½.

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—Prices opened firm on the Boerse to-day, owing to the ease of money, but on the receipt of the unfavorable war news they relapsed. Exchange on London, 20 marks 453 pfennigs for checks. Rate of discount for short bills, 3¾ per cent., and for three months' bills, 3⅞ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows the following changes: Cash in hand increased 41,880,000 marks, Treasury notes increased 1,940,000 marks, other securities decreased 90,040,000 marks, and notes in circulation decreased 69,140,000 marks.

Chicago Wheat Advances.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—The wheat market, inspired by higher Liverpool and Paris cables, cold weather, and confirmation of Roumania plague rumors, was active, and closed very strong at 1½ over yesterday.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Very few stocks showed much activity in yesterday's market for outside securities. New Amsterdam Gas and one or two other issues supplied business in excess of recent averages, but the extreme dullness that prevailed in the majority of outside stocks made the day's total a small one. In some cases large net changes were recorded, some stocks being offered down without sales, while others showed considerable net gains, but important changes were few and in proportion with the general inactivity. Good demand was had for Standard Oil and for some other issues, but no general disposition to buy was shown, those interested in the market preferring still to follow a waiting policy. A few forced sales are made evident, but as a rule holders of stocks have shown willingness to await the future development of the market.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was the object of much attention, owing to a sharp advance which occurred in both the common and preferred stocks, following immediately upon the marked weakness in these issues on the previous day. No explanation appeared for the suddenly assumed strength, the only reason for the advances being the presence of large buying orders. What brought about the greater demand for the stocks was not made evident. In some quarters it is said that interests allied with the Consolidated Gas Company have recently been large buyers of the New Amsterdam stocks, and the intimation is that an effort is being made by those interests to secure control of the company by purchases of stock in the open market. Persons well informed as to the local gas situation say that conditions are practically the same as they were many weeks ago; that the cut just made by the New Amsterdam Company is an admission of failure in its effort to advance the price of gas, and that a settlement is seemingly no nearer now than it was several months ago. Recent developments have not served to strengthen the belief that was current at the beginning of the year that the gas war was practically over, and doubt is now felt if any real progress toward a settlement has been made or not.

STANDARD OIL continued to advance point after point, and on no very heavy transactions it got as high as 518, and closed at 517 bid, showing a net gain of 3 points. Rumor in regard to the reason for the continuing advance in the stock is to the effect that the earnings of the company have increased so much of late that dividends even much in excess of those already paid may be expected in the near future. Insiders continue to buy practically all the stock that comes on the market, but the supply at present figures seems much smaller than it was around 500.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE was notably weak, particularly in the preferred stock, which was offered down to 60, without a sale. The best bid for this issue was 52. The last sale of a full lot was made in the neighborhood of 90, and the last sale of odd lots is said to have been made at 85. Yesterday's offer showed a decline of more than 25 points since the last sale. In the common stock, which has been more active, sales of small lots were made as high as 43. It closed at 40 bid, showing a net loss of 2 points for the day.

AMALGAMATED COPPER sold to the extent of 200 shares at 83. This was the first sale of full lots in several days. It closed at 82⅝ bid, showing a net gain of three-eighths of a point.

BAY STATE GAS was fairly active, most of the sales being made at 1⅞. It closed unchanged at 1⅞ bid.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—There was continued pressure on several stocks in the market to-day, the list including United Gas, Marsden, Asphalt, Cambria Steel, Consolidated Lake Superior and Electric Storage Battery. Lower prices were made in this group extending from small fractions to a point in Consolidated Lake Superior and Electric Storage Battery. Later in the day the demand for Asphalt exceeded the supply and the stock made partial recovery, while the bonds moved up two points to 83. The only other feature was the persistent buying of Western New York and Pennsylvania, although it produced no effect on the price.

The close was steady at these bid and asked prices:

FOR CANAL IMPROVEMENT

Shipping Men Heartily Indorse the Report of the Commission.

CITY'S SUPREMACY AT STAKE

The report of the Canal Commission and the message of Gov. Roosevelt found hearty approval yesterday among shipping men and those who, as members of the Produce Exchange and Maritime Exchange Canal Committees, had sought action favorable to canal improvement. While the Maritime Exchange committee had advocated only such measure of improvement as that provided in the act of 1895, yet the broader scheme outlined by the State Commission and approved by the Governor was regarded only as looking to so much greater an improvement than they had thought it expedient to ask.

Thus, Lester W. Beasley, Chairman of that committee, said: "I at one time favored a canal of less capacity than that now proposed, but only because I feared that the necessary funds would not be forthcoming for anything better. It was then a matter of expediency, and I supported the lesser scheme for that reason, and not because I thought it the wisest thing to do."

Of the present project Mr. Beasley said: "I favor the largest canal the State can afford. For many years it has been apparent that a large canal was necessary, and when we had a convention of commercial bodies here, five or six years ago, I expressed the opinion that such a canal must eventually be built. The supremacy of New York City depends more upon such a canal than upon any other thing. All this talk of discrimination against New York will pass away with the improvement of the canal as advocated by the Governor.

"One thing which seems not to have been put to the front in the discussion is this—that freight carried by the canal is so much more easily exported about the harbor and placed aboard the ocean steamships than that brought here by rail. One thousand tons of freight by canalboat can be put alongside any ocean vessel for $5 or $6, while the transfer from railroads costs from $400 to $500.

"For my part I would advocate that the Counties of New York, Kings, and Erie, if there was no other way, should submit to the necessary taxation to bring about the improvement of the canal. The State can, however, afford such expense as may be necessary to-day better than it could in the day the Erie Canal was built."

VIEWS OF EMIL L. BOAS.

Emil L. Boas of the Hamburg-American Line, who is a member of the Produce Exchange Canal Committee, said: "I am much pleased with the Governor's message and the decision of the State Canal Commission. This result is just what we have been contending for all along. It will give us a canal accommodating ships of proper size to bring grain from Buffalo to New York at a cost that will enable New York to compete with the so-called outports.

"A curious coincidence is presented by the canal situation in Prussia. The German Emperor, as King of Prussia, has been trying to have a canal bill passed. It failed last year, but will be submitted again to the Prussian Diet. This canal would connect the Rhine and Elbe, and it is to cost 261,000,000 marks. The Elbe is already connected with the Oder.

"Now, the curious feature about it is that the Agrarians of Prussia object to this canal for the same reason that our Western farmers favor a cheap waterway to the seaboard. It would give cheap transportation. But the Prussian Agrarian fears cheap transportation because it would bring foreign grain to his home market cheaply, and therefore underbid him. The Western farmer wants cheap transportation in order to be able to compete in the foreign market.

"How much he is interested in this canalway is proved in the fact that the world's grain rate is fixed in Liverpool, and the Liverpool price means the price a bushel at which it can be put down at Liverpool, the producer and his agent being compelled to pay the price of transportation. The cheaper this is the more the farmer will get for his grain.

"You all know that the lowest freight rates are those of railroads paralelling waterways, as, for instance, the route from Chicago to New York, or the route down the Mississippi Valley. The influence of the waterway, however, is not confined alone to places along those routes, but extends to points in the interior.

INFLUENCE ON INTERIOR POINTS.

"Thus, if there is a cheap freight rate by the waterway from Chicago to New York, the railroad rate cannot be higher from St. Louis or Cincinnati than the cheap water route freight from Chicago to New York, plus the freight from St. Louis or Cincinnati to Chicago.

"Again, when we consider the canal question, we generally think of the freight movement from the West to the East; we do not always consider the importance which a proper waterway may have for the trade and traffic of New York in the westbound movement. It must be of great importance for the large and bulky manufactures sent West.

"Of the talked-of discrimination by the railroads, it is a fact that the Erie Canal has not proved a sufficient check, and that a great deal of grain has gone to the so-called outports, such as Portland, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and even Montreal. Steamers, in consequence, are sent to those ports to get cargoes.

"Our own company was compelled, in consequence of this, to open regular services with Montreal, and to the other outports named, from Hamburg, and it is unnecessary to add that the fact that these services are maintained brings west-bound freight from Europe to these same ports, while the favorable railway rates from those ports to the West also attract ocean freight to them.

"Ours and other lines would much prefer to concentrate our business in this city for purposes of economy, but we are compelled to get it where it offers. The canal, improved, will offer such cheap through rates as to minimize the competition of the outports."

Gustav H. Schwab of the North German Lloyd Line, who is a member of the Maritime Exchange Canal Committee, said: "The Governor's message, accompanying the report of the Canal Commission, is a document that should be read by every citizen of this State. It shows a thorough knowledge of the situation which now confronts the citizens of the State, and it shows a remarkable mastery of the problems presented, stated in the Governor's terse style.

NEW YORK'S SUPREMACY AT STAKE.

"The report displays a most thorough and careful study of the subject by men who are peculiarly fitted for the task that was allotted to them by the Governor, and I do not see how any one, after careful consideration of the premises and the conclusions arrived at by the commission, can fail to heartily indorse the recommendations made by the commission, namely, that to maintain the supremacy of New York and to recover what has been lost, the modernization of the chief waterway of this State is absolutely indispensable, and that, to enable this waterway, to which New York owes its present position in the world's commerce, to continue its function, a canal will be needed equal to the latest improved waterways completed by the Canadians.

"The railroad discriminations against New York, furthermore, which have done so much to divert New York's commerce, can only be met by the construction of a large canal which will reduce the cost of transportation from Buffalo to tidewater to less than 1 cent a bushel.

"The work of securing the approval of the people to the far-seeing and wise plan arrived at by the Canal Commission and so emphatically indorsed by the Governor will require the united efforts of all business men who realize what New York City has at stake."

Superintendent Haughton of the Maritime Exchange said: "I am glad to see that the view we have taken has been approved by both the Canal and State Commerce Commissions. It is substantially what we have always sought, and there should be only one opinion as to the desirability and necessity of immediate favorable action."

MR. CALLAWAY ON NEW YORK'S TRADE.

Says City Is Not Losing Any Through Differential Rates.

President Callaway of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company said yesterday of the statements made by the New York Commerce Commission and the Governor's message submitting the report of the Commission: "A study of statistics will show that New York is not losing any trade through the differential rates established in favor of other ports. So far as the report deals with the discrimination against New York by the New York Central, I would say that this port has no stronger friend and ally than this road.

"As to the freight differentials accorded Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Newport News, I can only say that they were the outgrowth of competitive conditions which they were expected to modify, and were agreed to on no other basis. In the beginning our road looked upon them as excessive, and we have succeeded several times in having them reduced. The lake differentials have been abolished and others cut in two. We have always said they were too high.

"But when we asked for a further reduction it has been pointed out that we already get 40 per cent. of the grain that is exported, and that at least 60 per cent. belongs to other ports. And we have not been able to answer that. Here is a table of percentages of grain receipts for the past three years. It shows little change during that period:

New York City, (canal)...	6.0	4.9	4.8
Boston	9.6	10.7	12.6
Philadelphia	10.8	12.0	12.8
Baltimore	18.1	17.8	17.0
Portland	0.5	0.5	0.5
Montreal, (river).....	2.4	3.1	2.2
Montreal, (rail).....	5.7	6.9	6.0
Norfolk	3.4	2.3	1.7
Newport News.....	5.9	5.8	6.4

"The table shows a slight decrease at Baltimore, and an increase at Philadelphia, which is due to increased railroad facilities. The 40 per cent. which comes to this port means about 136,000,000 bushels of grain, and of that amount the table shows during the past year, all but 4.8 per cent. came by rail.

"Montreal has been spoken of as a dangerous competitor to New York through its waterway accessibility, and that was one of the strong arguments used by those favoring canal enlargements. But every one knows that not more than 8 feet of water can be guaranteed all the way there, and the statistics certainly do not show an alarming increase. I do not care to oppose the canal project of the Governor, and do not want to enter into any controversy over the matter, but I should like to have the statistics of trade and the plain facts as to the cost of these great improvements set out before the charges are made that the railroads are discriminating against this city.

"The canal as proposed by the Governor's recommendation is to cost about $60,000,000. Allowing interest at 4 per cent. and half a million a year for operating expenses would make the annual expenditures about $3,000,000. This would amount to a charge of nearly 2 cents a bushel for every bit of grain received at this port. The prevailing rate on the New York Central is now about 2½ cents a bushel from Buffalo to the ship's side."

PLANS DINNER TO GOV. ROOSEVELT.

Gov. Roosevelt's message recommending a large canal capable of use by boats of a thousand tons' capacity has so pleased the members of the Produce Exchange that they have planned to give him a dinner as a compliment on his attitude in favor of amplifying the canal system.

Elliot T. Barrows, President of the Exchange, presided at a meeting in the Board of Managers' room yesterday afternoon, which lasted about an hour, and which about fifty members, including many well-known men, attended by invitation. The matter was discussed, and it was soon found that the bulk of the sentiment represented was strongly in favor of a dinner. The question was also taken up as to the willingness of the members of the Produce Exchange to subscribe for such a dinner.

It was finally decided to authorize the President to appoint a committee of twenty-five, who should consult with representatives of other commercial bodies, and make arrangements, if possible, for the dinner to the Governor. They are, so to speak, to canvass the situation. It is planned to invite as honored guests, if the dinner is given, the members of the New York State Canal Commission and of the New York State Commerce Commission.

President Barrows appointed the following committee: H. B. Hebert, (Chairman of Canal Committee.) Chairman; ex-President Frank Brainard of the Exchange, ex-President Alfred Romer of the Exchange, Franklin Quinby, Thomas A. McIntyre, Franklin Edson, Gustav H. Schwab, George Milmine, John P. Truesdell, Emil L. Boas, Evan Thomas, F. A. Ferris, C. H. Wessels, Oswald Sanderson, O. R. Cauchois, Lewis H. Speice, W. P. Callaghan, E. Pfarrius, F. H. Anderson, Lorenz Loeser, John Valiant, Grenville Perrin, Paul Gotthelf, H. A. McGee, and G. A. Zabriskie. This list includes practically all of the regular Canal Committee.

"We think the prospects for giving the dinner are bright," said Mr. Barrows. "Gov. Roosevelt has come out for something we have been working for for years."

COMMENTS OF THE NEWSPAPERS.

Editorial Opinions of the Proposed Canal Improvement.

New York Daily News.—The object sought is a laudable one, but the belief is widespread that this object could be attained by fearless legislation without burdening the people with an additional debt of nearly $60,000,000. * * * Under the circumstances it is a mighty poor brand of statesmanship that cannot devise some method of bringing the New York Central to book.

Mail and Express.—We confess to somewhat of a shock when reading a proposition put forward thus boldly to invest $60,000,000 in the canals of the State. * * * Nevertheless the report of Gen. Greene and his associates is entitled to most deliberate consideration before final judgment is passed. They have planned in a broad way, looking far into the future; and having reached definite conclusions they have had the courage to defend them and their gigantic cost, leaving it to the people to do or not. * * * Something must and should be done, and promptly too, but it is a daring leap forward that the Canal Commission propose.

The Brooklyn Times.—The commission has performed a most important public duty in a thorough and comprehensive manner, and it is to be hoped that the Legislature of this State will promptly act upon its recommendations.

The Brooklyn Citizen.—Except in matters of detail there is little or nothing in the reports telling of the cause of the decadence of the commerce of the city and State of New York that was not already known. * * * At the same time it is well to have the evidence laid before an intelligent people who will read and digest it for further use.

The Evening Post.—After attentive perusal of the report of the Canal Committee, of which Gen. F. V. Greene is Chairman, we concur with Gov. Roosevelt that its recommendations are wise and proper, and that the State ought not to abandon its canal.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle.—If the investment of that sum of money shall reslut in the adoption of plans for the enlargement of canals to such an extent that New York City can regain its old place in the commerce of the nation, and can save to shippers, and thus to the people, $12,000,000 a year in freight rates, it will not have been spent in vain. The problem which the people and the Legislature must solve is a big one, and it should not be approached in any petty or partisan spirit.

The Herald.—The Governor calls attention to the committee's statement "that the efficiency of the canals depends upon their management quite as much as on their physical size." In that connection, it would be well to let the people know just what privileges and franchises in connection with the use of the canals and of their towpaths in the way of towing, the planting of electric light wires, and so on, granted by past Legislatures, are in existence to-day.

The Journal—The people of the State gave the Republican Party $9,000,000 with which to improve their canals. The money was stolen. The tax dollars of the farmer, the mechanic, the hodcarrier, the day laborer, the sweatshop starveling, went into the pockets of a few favored thieves. Gov. Roosevelt now asks the people to turn their pockets inside out and put into the hands of the Canal Ring $60,000,000 for further "canal improvements."

importance, and the facts, which must serve as a basis for action upon it, are so many and intricate that the public attitude in the matter should be one of careful reflection, rather than hasty judgment.

The World—To regain the lost ground and insure the future, $60,000,000 are necessary. This is a large sum of money, but it is a trifle in comparison with the mighty stake of commercial supremacy that turns with its withholding or putting out. This cannot be made a party question. It too nearly affects the prosperity of every citizen of the Empire State.

The Tribune—If the canal is really going to save New York's commerce under modern conditions it must be managed as a great railroad is managed. With such conduct even a smaller canal than some desire would make possible the cheap rates on which depends New York's continued supremacy. Without it even a ship canal would be a disappointment, and of no avail against competition of alert and business-like rivals.

State Editors Oppose Canal Plans.

ALBANY, Jan. 26.—The New York State Republican Editorial Association, composed of editors of newspapers in the smaller cities, towns, and villages of the State, at their meeting this afternoon adopted resolutions antagonistic to the expenditure of $62,000,000 for the improvement of the State canals. A majority of the editors come from anti-canal counties that under the proposition would not be taxed for the improvement, but they used the argument that the improvement was mainly for the benefit of through traffic from the West, and that the cost should be defrayed by the United States Government.

J. ROBERTSON SMILEY MISSING.

Was Ill When He Left His Office at the Lyceum Theatre Saturday.

J. Robertson Smiley, assistant business manager of the Lyceum Theatre, has been missing since Saturday night. A general alarm was sent out from Police Headquarters yesterday. Mr. Smiley left the theatre at 9 o'clock Saturday night, telling George Audie, the Treasurer, that he had a severe headache and intended to take a walk. Later he was seen at the Manor House, Broadway and Twenty-sixth Street, where he was well-known. A check for $5 was cashed for him there. Early Sunday morning he was at the Aulic in the company of newspaper men. Since then he has not been seen by any of his associates, but George Kingsbury, business manager of the American Theatre, said that he saw him at either the Tuesday or Wednesday matinée at the American. Nothing has been heard from him since that time.

Mr. Smiley, who is still a young man, came to New York from Ohio several years ago. He first did some newspaper work, and later went to the Klondike. Upon his return he was engaged by Daniel Frohman as advance agent for his production on the read of "At the White Horse Tavern." Later he acted as advance agent for Mr. and Mrs. Kendal. When they reached New York this season, he took up his position at the Lyceum Theatre. Until three weeks ago he had lived at the Ashland House. He removed then to the Van Twiller Hotel, at Twenty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, where his belongings still are. No financial difficulties are known to exist in connection with his affairs.

New Anchorage for Canalboats.

The Dock Board received yesterday a request from the United States Government asking the board to do all in its power to change the anchorage of the canalboats from the district in South Street, as the towing of canalboats around the waters of the Battery is a serious menace to navigation. The Commissioners decided to reply to the Government that steps in that direction will be taken at once. An appeal will be made to the owners of the canalboats to take up their anchorage at the piers between Fiftieth and Fifty-sixth Streets, North River, where this district will be set apart for their use.

Coe Released from Custody.

WHITE PLAINS, Jan. 26.—William W. Coe, who has been in jail here since Sunday, on a charge of grand larceny preferred by Charles Francis of Boston, was released today. It was alleged by Francis that Coe swindled him out of $10,000 by inducing him to lend Coe the money to invest. A hearing was held to-day before Justice Cupion, who decided that the evidence did not warrant Coe's detention.

Oliver Pike Not Dead After All.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The people of the village of Delta, east of here, were surprised to-day at the return of Oliver Pike, whose body was supposed to be buried in the village cemetery. Pike was in Chicago when word came three or four years ago of his supposed death. The body was recognized and buried. His mother about a year later received a letter signed Harry Pierce, which purported to come from her son. It was postmarked Chicago, but no address was given. She did not recognize the writing as her son's. Pike will not tell why he assumed an alias, nor does he reveal the identity of the body shipped from Chicago and buried four years ago.

Murderer Mull Sentenced to Die.

TROY, Jan. 26.—Archie S. Mull, convicted of the murder of Melville B. Lord of Nassau, was this morning sentenced by Justice Chester to die at Dannemora Prison during the week commencing March 4, 1900.

It is intended to start the company with a capital of $100,000, which sum will be kept intact for the protection of policy holders.

The incorporators are to be Cyrus E. Staples, Thomas F. Byrnes, James A. Murtha, ex-County Clerk William P. Wuest, ex-County Register Henry F. Haggerty, Edward C. Tucker, and William T. Read, all of Brooklyn, and Michael McCormick of Buffalo.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

F. F. RITCHIE.—Schedules of F. F. Ritchie, merchant tailor, at 187 Broadway, show liabilities, $2,186; nominal assets, $2,683; actual assets, $1,341.

JACOB OSNOWITZ.—Deputy Sheriff O'Donnell received an execution yesterday against Jacob Osnowitz, surviving partner of Neudorfer & Osnowitz, formerly dealers in rags at 504 West Broadway, for $3,770, in favor of Hugo Cohen on notes. The Sheriff said that Mr. Osnowitz's property at 321 and 323 East Third Street is set down for sale at auction on Feb. 1 under prior executions.

MICHAEL L. FANE.—Judge Andrews of the Supreme Court has appointed John J. Breen receiver of rents of 517 and 519 Eighth Avenue, in a suit brought by Thomas B. Hidden against Michael L. Fane to foreclose two mortgages aggregating $93,000, made by Mr. Fane in August, 1898, on which there is $2,325 interest due. There are prior mortgages on the property for $47,000, and the total incumbrances on the property are $142,325. It was stated that only a portion of the property is rented for $3,800 a year. It was also stated that Mr. Fane resides at 229 East Twenty-second Street, paying about $18 a month for his rooms there. He has been a carpenter for many years.

W. H. HASBROUCK & CO.—W. H. Hasbrouck & Co., corporation manufacturing stationers at 536 and 538 Pearl Street, have applied to the Supreme Court, through Directors W. H. Hasbrouck, Arthur G. Holman, and Clara E. Holman, for the voluntary dissolution of the corporation, and Justice Andrews has appointed John E. Brodsky referee, and set down the order to show cause for April 26. It was stated that the corporation is unable to meet obligations, that business has been conducted at a loss, and the receipts have been less than the expenses. The liabilities are $19,496, and nominal assets $35,967, consisting of merchandise, $26,027; accounts, $5,875; machinery and fixtures, $3,821; cash, $244. The actual value of the assets is not given, but is considerably less than the nominal value, on account of some of the stock being sold and some of the accounts uncollectible. The largest creditors are the Carew Manufacturing Company of South Hadley Falls, Mass., $8,467, and Bulkley, Dunton & Co., $4,850. The corporation was organized on Sept. 21, 1898, with a capital stock of $25,000. William H. Hasbrouck is President, and Arthur G. Holman Treasurer. Mr. Hasbrouck started the business in 1873. Hastings & Gleason are the attorneys.

Out of Town.

J. K. SOUTHER & SONS.—J. K. Souther & Sons, brewers, of Roxbury, Mass., have assigned to Charles R. Batt, cashier of the National Security Bank, and Ambrose Eastman, lawyer. Souther & Sons were borrowers of money at the Globe Bank. The loans were called, and they were forced to assign. The firm was practically in liquidation, but was financing its successor, the Souther Brewing Company, which latter concern is said to be perfectly solvent. Charles R. Batt, one of the assignees, says that no statement has been prepared as yet, although approximate figures of the firm's liabilities are between $200,000 and $300,000. Asked as to the assets of the company, Mr. Batt said: "If the Souther stock was liquidated at par at any moment, there would be a large fortune left over the liabilities. The loans made by the Globe National Bank amounted to between $300,000 in $400,000, and just at present everybody is a little hard pressed. For that reason, Mr. Souther thought the best thing to do was to assign."

Bradstreet's Weekly Failure Report.

CHINESE MASONIC FUNERAL

Ying Hing, Grand Master of the North American Order, Buried.

Gorgeous Oriental Pageant Escorts the Body from Chinatown to Evergreens Cemetery.

On a dreary, wind-swept slope of Evergreens Cemetery the body of Ying Hing, Grand Master of the Lone We Tong Eng Ti, the Chinese Masonic Order in North America, was buried yesterday afternoon with rites that were a fitting ending to a series of scenes which began in Chinatown, and the like of which for strangeness and splendor has not been witnessed in New York in many years.

That something unusual was preparing was early evident to the passers-by in Chinatown. A big red triangular flag floated at half-mast over 16 Pell Street, on the top floor of which the headquarters of the Chinese Masonic organization in New York is situated. Red streamers hung from many windows, groups of Caucasians and Celestials, stamping to keep themselves warm, were assembled in Pell and Mott Streets, and policemen were stationed at the entrance to 16 Pell and 3 Mott Street. In a vacant store at the latter address Ying Hing's body, which was recently brought here from Toronto, Canada, lay in barbaric state. In the lodgeroom of the Lone We Tong Eng Ti a procession to render funeral honors to the dead and that was destined to set the Bowery agape with astonishment was being formed.

By 10 o'clock, when the funeral ceremonies began, crowds had gathered in Mott and Pell Streets. At that hour the store in Mott Street, the windows of which had been whitewashed nearly to the top to prevent the uninvited from seeing what was going on inside, was opened, and Chinese and a few privileged Americans were admitted.

At the further extremity of the store, against the wall, was a sort of chiffonier, upon which were a couple of floral tributes to the deceased. One was a cushion of roses, and bore in English the words "Grand Master"; the other was in the form of the familiar triangular emblem of the Freemasons. In front of this, with the head pointed south, was a brown, polished coffin, on trestles, in which, dressed in a green robe and with a black Chinese skull cap, lay the body of Ying Hing. On the coffin was a triangular branch of faded flowers.

At the foot of the coffin, and a few feet from it, was a table, on which were four square pewter candlesticks containing red candles ornamented with yellow dragons and lighted, and a couple of pewter vases in which were paper flowers arranged to form long triangles. In a tin can filled with sand bunches of incense sticks were stuck, and they filled the place with a choking smoke. Arranged neatly before the candlesticks were three chopsticks and a number of little bowls containing rice, pickles, vegetables, and the mysterious sweetmeats dear to the Chinese palate.

In front of this and a few feet distant was another table, with more chopsticks and bowls and plates of dainties similar to those described, but behind these, and facing toward the body, were a couple of large roast sucking pigs on wooden trays, and beside the table, on trestles, and also facing the body, were the carcasses of two rams, skinned, but with the eyes and horns respected. Lastly, on a small table, were two curiously shaped silver flagons containing saki.

Beside these tables were four Chinese in bright-blue robes with scarlet cord cestures, and with scarlet plait extensions plaited to their queues. Three others in robes of unbleached cotton and with bandages of bleached cotton around their brows stood near. The Chinamen who trooped in to do homage to the dead stood three deep on the display board along the store window or ranged themselves along the walls. At intervals three men created a terrific din with tom-tom, cymbals, and gong to scare away the spirits of evil that might be hovering too near the body. Occasionally another man joined in with a sort of shepherd's pipe of ear-piercing tone. At the rear end of the line of tables, behind the pigs, an aged man in the ordinary street costume of the Chinese in New York bowed and gesticulated as he muttered an incantation.

At last, just before noon, the procession from Pell Street arrived, amid the excitement of crowds which lined the street in each direction and blocked traffic on the Bowery for some distance. Its approach was heralded by a burst of funereal music from the uncelestial but harmonious instruments of a military band, and in an instant balconies, windows, and housetops that commanded a view of it were black with spectators.

The procession halted in front of the store, and Gong Hoar, Grand Master of the society's lodge of the District of Baltimore, clad in an unbleached cotton robe with a black sash, a bright-red cloth tied on his head, and bearing a gilded gavel, emblem of his office, entered, accompanied by a dozen other men similarly attired. He delivered an oration extolling the virtues of the deceased, burned a prayer written on gold and silver paper, and then amid the din of gong and cymbal and tom-tom the casket was carried out and placed in a hearse surmounted with black and white plumes, and the procession started for Grand Street Ferry on its way to Evergreens Cemetery.

First walked four poucemen, and with them Wong Fong, a notable resident of Chinatown, who had charge of the procession to the ferry. Then came a carriage with the Committee of Arrangements. This was followed by two other carriages containing the Chinese musicians, who kept up a cacophanous duet with the funeral music of the band behind them. Next was the hearse, flanked by the chief mourners in blue and others in unbleached cotton robes, then a riderless horse, the charger of the dead man, and Gong Hoar and dignitaries of the Masonic order from various places in the United States and Canada. Next were four Chinese women carrying quaintly shaped lanterns and baskets of flowers on the end of sticks.

Then towered two mounted warriors in robes of bright-colored satin glittering with gold and silver spangles and with gigantic and wonderful headpieces tipped with coontails and long pheasant plumes. They represented Lieutenants of the Imperial War Guard. Four flags protruded from them, each flag representing a regiment that will mourn for Ying Hing. Following them were a couple of hundred warriors in brilliant multi-colored costumes representative of officers and soldiers of various grades in the Chinese Army, and armed with three-pronged spears, swords on poles, and rifles with bayonets fixed. Others in equally splendid raiment carried red boards with Chinese characters on them setting forth the deceased's virtues, a great red flag edged with black, a transparency bearing the Masonic emblem, globular funeral lanterns, small flags and standards of every imaginable hue, and two magnificent umbrellas indicative of Ying Hing's rank as a mandarin. Another dignitary on horseback looked after this section of the procession, the rear of which was formed by a score of carriages.

The pageant went twice around by the Bowery through Pell Street, amid the laughter and cheers of an enormous crowd, and then proceeded to the ferry. On the other side of the river the procession took carriages to the cemetery, where it formed again and trailed shiveringly up and down hill over the frost-hardened roads through the dreary abode of the dead, buffeted by a wind which played havoc with standards and lanterns and swept great veils of dust over the weirdly picturesque scene.

Fully 2,000 persons braved the fierce blast to witness the ceremony in the Chinese section, which is situated in a far corner near a bone-boiling establishment. It did not last long. The cold was too much for the most enthusiastic. The food which the deceased is supposed to need on his long journey to the realms of bliss having been deposited, there was a stampede for the carriages, and Ying Hing's body was left to lie in foreign soil until four years hence, when it will be taken for final interment to the land of his forefathers.

Contributions for Lester Livermore.

Lester Livermore and his dog Kaiser remain in the Hudson County Jail, where they were sent for thirty days as vagrants by Recorder Stanton of Hoboken, on Jan. 5, because the man refused to part with the dog and go to the almshouse. Livermore has not decided whether he will apply to Recorder Stanton to be resentenced as a vagrant when he is released or take his chances with the outside world. THE NEW YORK TIMES has received $2 more, from Mrs. S. K. Bolton of Cleveland, Ohio, to add to the amount already received for Livermore. The money has been delivered to Livermore at the jail.

SCOPE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Unitarian Union Discusses Its Relation to the World of Affairs.

The New York Unitarian Sunday School Union, at afternoon and evening sessions in the parish house of All Souls' Church, yesterday, discussed "The Sunday School and the World of Affairs." In the afternoon Rev. W. I. Nichols of Brooklyn read a paper showing how Sunday schools can co-operate to advantage in the work of local charities. Lawyer Sumner B. Stiles of Manhattan read a paper telling how current questions of social reform can be treated in the Sunday school. He said that all "isms" and "fads" should be avoided and questions of the day should be treated in a critical yet sympathetic manner.

At the evening session the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, pastor of All Souls' Church, made an address on "The Sunday School and the World of Affairs." He said our lives were made up of what we do and what we dream. The child was the best type of enterprise. He was never blasé. He was not a little saint, nor a cup to be filled up, nor a blank sheet to be written on. He was not goody or he was not a real boy. The proper way to do was to take the child as he is, and, following the example of Jesus, to build from the ground up.

At the close of the address a Sunday school teacher stood up and asked Mr. Slicer what was to be done with a Sunday school boy who stuck a pin through a grasshopper, tied a string to the pin, and brought the grasshopper to the Sunday school to wriggle about in pain. She said that sort of a boy seemed always to be in a Sunday school. Mr. Slicer replied that the best way to deal with such a lad was to interest him in a more heroic form of cruelty. The cruelty to the grasshopper was only the inheritance from the boy's ancestors, who stuck skewers through larger and more important objects and roasted them over a fire as morsels for a meal.

Flag Presented to School No. 165.

A large silk American flag was presented to the Primary Department of Public School No. 165, in West One Hundred and Ninth Street, yesterday morning, by Lafayette Post, No. 140, G. A. R., as a part of its plan to give a flag to each department in every public school in the city. Nearly 700 children and many visitors were present. The presentation was made by a committee from the post, consisting of Col. Allen Blakewell, Commander; Adjt. W. F. Brown, Col. Charles F. Homer, Col. A. P. Greene, and others. Col. Homer and Col. Blakewell made addresses.

LEGAL NOTES.

WRONGFUL CONVERSION OF A LIFE POLICY.—Rosa and George Lissner, in July, 1880, borrowed $1,100 from Charles Bauer, pledging in writing, as security, a policy on the life of George Lissner in the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and made Charles Bauer their lawful attorney. On Oct. 13 following the policy was surrendered to the company, Bauer receiving $1,494. Mrs. Lissner, a few days later, upon receiving information that the policy had been surrendered, called upon Charles Bauer and protested against the act of his brother Louis in surrendering it. Efforts were made to have it reinstated, but the company refused because of the precarious state of health of the insured, who died six months afterward. In a suit by Cecilia Toplitz and another against Louis Bauer and others, as executors of Charles Bauer, for the alleged wrongful conversion of the policy, the Court of Appeals last week affirmed judgment of the First Appellate Divsion, which sustained judgment of the Trial Term in favor of the plaintiff. The Court held, in an opinion by Judge O'Brien, that the pledgee, having waived the right to exact strict performance of the contract according to its terms, and given time and indulgence to the Lissners, he could not recall this waiver at his own option, without notice to the pledgor, to the end that the latter might have an opportunity of protecting the pledge. The policy having been wrongfully surrendered by the pledgee without authority, and it appeared that, at the time of the surrender, the insured was dying of paresis, and was unable to procure the policy to be reinstated or to procure new insurance, the reasonable and just rule of damages for the pledgee's wrongful act was held to be the face of the policy less the amount of the pledgor's indebtedness and the insurance premiums, payable on the policy between the day of surrender and the death of the insured, to which the jury, in its discretion, might allow interest from the date of the conversion.

BENEFIT LIFE INSURANCE.—Edward Conroy became a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of the State of New York in 1888, and in the certificate issued to him, designated his daughter, Margaret M. Conroy, as beneficiary. Then he changed this designation and had his wife named as beneficiary. She having died, he in May, 1895, designated Mary Ann Cecilia Bowe as beneficiary. In February, 1896, he inserted the name of Louis Ungerland as beneficiary. The Grand Lodge of the order, when sued by Margaret Coyne to recover $2,000 upon the beneficiary certificate, admitted its liability to some one, and paid the money into court. Mrs. Bowe and Margaret M. Conroy were then substituted as defendants. The Court of Appeals has now affirmed the judgment of the Appellate Division of the Second Department, rendered in December, 1897, in favor of Mrs. Bowe. The Court held that no valid change in the beneficiary had been effected since the designation of Mrs Bowe.

EX-ALDERMAN IN COURT.

Mrs. Charles Parks's Charges—A Weekly Sum Awarded.

Ex-Alderman Charles Parks of the Thirteenth Assembly District was the defendant yesterday in a charge of non-support brought by his wife and decided in the Harlem Court by Magistrate Pool.

Parks is fifty-six years old. His wife is twenty years his junior. They have three children. Parks has two daughters by his first wife. All lived together until recently in the Parks Hotel, which he owns, at Eighth Avenue and Fourteenth Street.

Mrs. Parks says her stepdaughters got such control of their father as to compel her to move. She secured her husband's arrest for non-support.

The testimony showed Parks to be worth about $150,000, but he had some time ago transferred most of the property to his two daughters by his first wife.

Magistrate Pool awarded Mrs. Parks $8 a week pending action for a divorce.

MR. GARDINER ASKS NO DELAY.

Reply to Mr. Cosby's Remarks—District Attorney Still Suffering.

Acting District Attorney McIntyre flatly contradicted yesterday morning the statements made by Assistant Attorney General Arthur F. Cosby in regard to the District Attorney and the hearing of the charges against him at the City Club the night before.

"This boy Cosby," he said, "has just been admitted to the bar. If he said what is credited to him at the City Club last night, he says what is not so. This office has asked for no delays. In fact, it was only apprised yesterday that Feb. 6 was set as the day for the hearing, and there has been neither time nor occasion to seek delay. We are ready to go on at any minute."

Mr. McIntyre said that District Attorney Gardiner had been examined yesterday by Dr. Robert Safford Newton, who found that the injuries he had received had affected his spine and that he was in danger of spinal meningitis unless he was allowed to rest for some time yet. The doctor recommended a trip to a warmer climate, and it is likely that Col. Gardiner will start for Puerto Rico in a short time. Mr. McIntyre says that no application for a delay in the investigation will be asked on this account, and that he himself will probably act as the District Attorney's counsel at the trial.

"The charges against the office are so trifling that we have not considered them seriously," he said. "We will engage no outside counsel."

INSURANCE CASHIER ARRESTED.

Henry Athing, nineteen years of age, cashier of the Prudential Insurance Company at 85 Borden Avenue, Long Island City, was arrested yesterday afternoon by Detective Peter Kelly and James McGill on suspicion of robbery.

Athing was arraigned before City Magistrate Connorton and committed without bail to await examination on Monday. The detectives positively declined to say whether they had any evidence against the accused cashier.

Athing, about ten days ago, reported to the police that while he was working on his books at the office two men entered, and while one engaged him in conversation, the other walked behind the rail, and presenting a revolver at his head, warned him not to make any outcry. This man, Athing said, then took $800 from the desk, and placing the money in his overcoat pocket, fled with his companion.

The police have since been at work on the case, and it is alleged that they have discovered evidence against Athing.

It has nearly a seventy year record of cures, certified over the signatures of many prominent people—JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT.—Adv.

Topics of the Week.

In a very few weeks Herbert Spencer will have passed the fourscore mark. It is therefore with a certain reverence that scholars will examine the second volume of his "Principles of Biology," the revision and augmentation of which has occupied the last few years—years that have been filled for the eminent savant with great bodily suffering and with greater sorrow. The work, it will be recalled, first saw light in 1867. Owing to the great strides that have since then been made in all departments of science, one might imagine that a revision of a work like "The Principles of Biology" must of necessity be of an extensive character. This is not the case, however, although many valuable data are added. At the end of his later preface, which is dated October, 1899, Mr. Spencer has placed this note, which is at the same time pathetic and reassuring: "On now finally leaving biological studies, it remains only to say that I am glad I have survived long enough to give this work its finished form."

Mr. Bird S. Coler, Controller of the City of New York, has just completed an important work, entitled, "Municipal Government," being an illustration of the working of the charter and chief departments of New York. The author will present an exhaustive examination of what he believes to be defects in the charter, and will carefully weigh the pros and cons of his suggested remedies. Among the chief features of the work will also be a discussion of municipal charities and of private charitable institutions and their relations to the public and to the City Government. The water supply of a great city is another important topic, concerning which Mr. Coler has decided views. Persons who have been fortunate enough to peruse the manuscript say that the author has presented his theme with great force and with absolute sincerity.

Elizabeth Luther Cary, whose charming volumes on Tennyson and Browning have presented to the lovers of these poets pictures of great intimacy and sympathy is now engaged on a volume dealing with the lives of The Rossettis, which will be similar in character to the others. This author makes attempts opposition nor criticism of her subjects. It is simply her intention to show them as they were in their intimate life, in their homes, and among their friends. "The Rossettis" will, in binding, letter press, and illustration, be a worthy artistic companion to the other volumes of the set, which bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Prof. Brander Matthews has written a novel which will begin its run as a serial in the forthcoming number of Harper's Weekly. It will be entitled "The Action and the World," and is said to be a vivid picture of a certain phase of New York life that reveals a field which has not yet received serious attention from writers of fiction. Prof. Matthews's most recent work, "A Confident To-morrow," published by Harper & Brothers, has just passed into its second edition. It bids fair to become the most popular book by this author. A large number of copies have been sold in the metropolis, or have been ordered by New Yorkers elsewhere.

"Castle or Manor?," we are informed, is to be the title of the novel by Dr. St. George Mivart, which will shortly be published in London. The author is now seventy-three years of age, and nobody will doubt that his full, round life has given him plenty of material for an extraordinary work of fiction if he has only allowed his pen the freedom and employs the precision of diction that have characterized his critical works. "Castle or Manor?" is described briefly as a "story of social life." This may mean a great deal; Dr. St. George Mivart has had it within his power to make it mean a great deal.

Lindsay Swift's book, "Brook Farm: Its Members, Scholars, and Visitors," which is being published by the Macmillan Company, will appeal to the sociologist as well as to the man of letters. It gives a complete history of one of the most remarkable experiments in social reform of the century, together with a biographical and critical account of the distinguished persons associated with it—Dana, Curtis, Ripley, Alcott, Channing, Margaret Fuller, Hawthorne, Hecker, and many lesser lights. A particular feature of the book is the explanation of the causes which led up to that intellectual and social ferment in New England which later found expression in a great literary period. But, although the literary phase of the question receives exhaustive treatment, the religious and the political sides are by no means neglected.

We believe that there has been no popular book hitherto written concerning birds' nests, notwithstanding the fact that this is a subject which particularly appeals to persons who love nature and yet have not the time or opportunity to pursue regular scientific investigation. To overcome this want A. Radclyffe Dugmore has written and illustrated for the Doubleday & McClure Company a book which will bear the title "Bird Homes." Mr. Dugmore, who began his career as a marine artist of considerable promise, will be remembered as the illustrator of Sidney Lanier's posthumous little volume, "Bob, the Story of a Mocking Bird," published by Charles Scribner's Sons. For several years Mr. Dugmore has made a careful study of the habits and haunts of the more common wild birds; he has photographed them in the most interesting attitudes, and these photographs he has colored according to nature. Sixteen specimens of his color work will form part of the illustrations of "Bird Homes." There will also be about forty half-tone reproductions of his photographic plates.

D. Appleton & Co. will shortly publish an important work on "Trusts and the Public," by Mr. George Gunton. This book discusses almost every phase of the trust question, and, while in the main the principle of trusts as an auxiliary of economic development is defended, the abuses of the trust principle are pointed out and criticised with equal frankness.

Charles Johnston, late of the Bengal Civil Service, has a short novel in preparation at Doubleday & McClure Company's. It is his first work of fiction, and, rather than merely showing much promise, is said to have all the characteristics of a work by a trained man of letters. There is, therefore, the supposition that Mr. Johnston has practiced the literary art in private, even as Guy de Maupassant practiced it before he attempted to win public laurels; and, by a singular coincident, too, Mr. Johnston's style is not unlike that of the gifted French conteur. His tale will be called "Kela Bai: An Anglo-Indian Idyl." In it the author strikingly portrays the intimate life of the natives in a small village in India, contrasting their simple existence with that of the governing classes.

FOUR GREAT ART SHOWS.

The Rembrandt in London, the Velasquez in Madrid, the Cranach in Dresden, and the Van Dyck in Antwerp.

I.—REMBRANDT.

Within the twelve months just ended art history has been studied, not made. The past year has become of capital importance, not through the rise of new, but owing to a renaissance of interest in old, masters. It is upon the art of yesterday, not of to-day, that attention has been concentrated; retrospection, not creation, has been the rule. Four great exhibitions—the Rembrandt at London, the Velasquez at Madrid, the Cranach at Dresden, and the Van Dyck at Antwerp—have overtopped all the salons and salonettes of the day. Each achieved its proper triumph; together they constitute an unrivaled quartet.

To have opened an exhibition of Rembrandt's works at the Royal Academy so close on the heels of a similar display at Amsterdam was daring but judicious, for it proved not a redite but the complement of its predecessor. From January until March London saw Rembrandt as he had not been seen even at the Stedelijk Museum the previous Autumn. Barring the great Corporation pictures, the balance of interest fell in favor of the Royal Academy exhibition. While not contributing so much to a synoptic study of Rembrandt's art, while distinctly less documentary, the London display was more homogeneous, more of a unit. Though less complete, it was more characteristic.

It is in his portraits that Rembrandt reveals his overpowering genius, and in these was the exhibition strongest. There were no less than eleven of the forty odd portraits which the master painted of himself. Ranging from 1632 to 1661, they constitute an almost unbroken record of technical as well as psychical evolution. Conceived in a spirit of pseudo-Titianesque splendor, the earlier portraits are full of the pride and the pose of youth. The later show the master stripped of his Dutch studio properties, sad, broken, but a supreme artist.

In the place of honor was the double portrait of "The Shipbuilder and His Wife," a chef d'oeuvre, in the painter's first manner, loaned from Buckingham Palace by her Majesty the Queen. Though the contours are still a trifle hard, and certain details insufficiently developed, this picture already foreshadows that savant mastery of chiaroscuro, that exact rendering of physiognomy, which were to achieve their sovereign expression in the Syndics. From Buckingham Palace came also the miscatalogued "Burgomaster Pancras and His Wife," which is, in reality, a somewhat uninteresting and pretentious portrait of Rembrandt and Saskia. Among the best portraits taken at hazard were Mr. Morrison's superb "Hendrickje Staffels," the sol-disant second wife of the painter; the Earl of Faversham's "Merchant," and Carl' Spencer's fulfillingly beautiful and little known "Portrait of a Boy." Two large canvases, "Belshazzar's Feast" and a "Deposition," both of which smacked of Italian inspiration, as well as a few landscapes and several excellent collections of drawings, were also shown.

The Marquis of Lansdowne's "Windmill," not only recalls but advances upon Ruysdael. For poetic feeling, unity of expression, and pure technical mastery this canvas is unsurpassed. Not only is the physical impression of space created, but the haunting, mysterious beauty of nature is here reflected as never before in the history of landscape painting.

The Royal Academy exhibition enjoyed a continuous measure of success. From its walls glowed in warm amber tints the entire comédie humaine. It showed at his best the great master, who through studying the play of light and shadow on the rude features of his kinsfolk gave the world the most profound and penetrating version of life yet given. Deep-rooted in actuality, he had little care for conventional prettiness; he sought beauty in what was homely and common. A physiologist, a psychologist, he reads for us the sad enigmas of not alone a few stolid women and rugged men, but of all humanity. He focuses the light of his genius on the souls of his fellow-creatures. In these canvases, so transfused with sombre beauty, he teaches us to pity, to struggle, perhaps to succeed; but, above all, to realize as he himself did that the drama of life is enacted against a background of darkness.

II.—VELASQUEZ.

As great and in certain minor regards a greater genius than Rembrandt shone with unwonted splendor on June 6 last, when Madrid celebrated the tercentenary of Velasquez. This anniversary was much in the nature of a family or Court affair. Though distinctly national and local, its artistic effervescence was, however, universal.

The incidental ceremonies were rich in Old World flavor. In the dark church, solemn mass was said for the dead in the presence of the Knights of the Order of Santiago, robed in white, each wearing on his breast the red cross of the order and carrying in his hand a lighted taper. Out in the bright plaza in front of the Prado a very uninspired statue of Velasquez was unveiled. Commemorative verses were read by the Duke de Perios, and speeches were made by M. Carolus-Duran and others. It was all decorous, punctilious, and essentially Castilian.

Within the Prado was reserved the real surprise, the chief lesson of the event. For the first time in the history of art galleries were the masterpieces of one painter permanently installed in a single room. The plan had often been debated, but it remained for Spain to take the initial step. The Tribuna and the Salon Carré contain more treasures than any similar rooms the world over, but they are not dedicated to a single individual, and their effect is splendid but diverse.

Here was a Velasquez room. The great, disdainful, nonchalant painter's master works were marshaled together in one salon. It was Velasquez concentrated, Velasquez telling a continuous and consecutive story of supremé achievement after supreme achievement. There was but one flaw, and that was due to an excess of zeal coupled with a pathetic lack of finesse. The potent restorer had been allowed to show too free a hand. Mysterious time-dimmed canvases were revarnished and reframed. It was Velasquez on dress parade, not the subtle-toned Velasquez of former visits to the Prado. It was Velasquez supreme—but shiny. Only a few escaped—"Los Borrachos," "La Fragua de Vulcano," "Las Hilanderas"—a chance picture here and there.

Saving this pitiable piece of irreverence, the changes were all vastly for the better. "Las Lanzas," the noblest war epic ever imagined, so superb in color, so effective in composition, occupied the place of honor. In a small sanctuary apart hung "Las Meninas," certainly one of the finest triumphs of pure brushwork ever attained. The entire occasion was a rare tribute to the memory of the great master who in his day had cared so little for applause, who "never painted," he said, "save for my own amusement and to obey my King."

Like Rembrandt, he, too, was a pioneer. Born with a sacred contempt for Raphael and for his immediate predecessors, the "Mannerists," he painted after his own fashion, putting on the pigments thinly with swift, simple strokes, unkindly foreshadowing all the moderns, chiefly, though, Mr. Whistler and Manet. If in Rembrandt we find the apostle of Protestantism and the people, in Velasquez we have the supreme painter of a Catholic Court. The Dutchman's life was sad and checkered; the Spaniard knew no greater privation than being forced by a cast-iron Court etiquette to sit among servants, barbers, and the like while watching bull fights in the Plaza Mayar. Rembrandt died in poverty and obscurity; on hearing of Velasquez's death Philip wrote on the margin of a dispatch "Estoy abatido," ("I am cast down.")

More completely than anything else could have, this rearranged Prado placed in relief the real Velasquez, the painter whose particular achievement was and still is unique—le plus peintre des peintres. The many full-length figures enforced the fact that Velasquez stands alone in his ability to render with convincing naturalism every aspect of a scene. Himself apasentadar, master of ceremonies, he poses his Kings, dwarfs, and maids of honor with equal grace and force. Painted against the luminous gloom of the Alcazar, these sombre garbs and sullen faces embody the most magical effects of art.

Stress of necessity made him a rapid, nervous workman, taught him to give the maximum of truth with the minimum of effort. He who had seen and devised so many pageants learned what was vital and enduring in the eternal pageant which flits before the eyes of all men in all ages.

III.—CRANACH.

Though in no way absorbing to the rank and file, the Cranach exhibition, held last midsummer in Dresden, had unusual interest for the curious. Through the industry and enthusiasm of Dr. Karl Woermann, Director of the Royal Gallery, this project, so long in mind, was finally realized in connection with the recent Kunst-Austellung.

After Dürer and Holbein, Lucas Cranach the elder takes place as the chief figure in German art. If not the founder, he was the leader and principal exponent of the Saxon school. Born in that fruitful period when the artist and the artisan were still one and the same, Lucas Cranach was not only pietar ducalis to three successive Electors, but was twice Burgomaster of Wittenberg, besides being engraver, printer, house painter, and proprietor of a pharmacy.

With the present display came the first opportunity for a complete and coherent study of the works of this quaint and many-sided individual, in whom we still find traces of those stiff and unlovely figures which are the heritage of Byzantine art. One large and one small room were devoted to a trifle under one hundred signed and dated pictures, supplemented by over three-score paintings of variable authority, and, for comparison, a few canvases by Lucas Cranach the younger, and Matthias Grünewald's "Beweinung Christi."

In "The Repose During the Flight into Egypt," dated 1504, and his earliest known work, Cranach shows a charm, a naïveté, and a freshness of fancy which he never attained later. Rustic children under Pippingtown forest, Joseph and Mary minister unto the Christ Child. A cherub dust caper about on the flower-flecked grass little angel-children; one is catching a bird, another is drawing water from a spring. It is all delightful in spirit and thoroughly imaginative in conception.

The Saxon master's ability to treat landscape with mistiness and yet charm is further illustrated by the picture of "Cardinal Albrecht von Brandenburg at the Feet of Christ," in "The Madonna under the Apple Tree," and "The Judgment of Paris."

Throughout his long career Cranach continued to paint, to engrave on wood and copper, and to manage his pharmacy. Though his best achievements were certainly in the field of engraving, his success in depicting hunting scenes, in religious and mythological subjects, and in portraiture was not inconsiderable. Never strikingly original, often intensely banal, he stands as the admirable Bouguereau of his day.

A crashing thunderstorm which drenched the smug Saxon capital and darkened the exhibition rooms prevented a detailed consideration of the pseudo-Grünewald frage and other moot points. This question remains, however, with a certain Venus unadorned save by a ludicrous crimson velvet hat, the most piquant legacy which Cranach has left posterity.

IV.—VAN DYCK.

From a spectacular point of view by far the most ambitious exposition of the year was the tercentenary of Van Dyck, which took place at Antwerp in the early Autumn.

In the Grande Place facing the Hotel de Ville assembled all the Belgian civil, military, and religious authorities—the King of Belgium, Burgomaster Van Ryswyck, (who strongly resembles Van Dyck,) guests from the various art academies of Europe, sightseers, tourists, travelers, fat burghers, and wide-eyed peasants. After a carillon of cathedral bells, began the chief open-air feature of the occasion—the pageant. This was a great lusty colored Rubenian cortége illutrating the "Progress of Art Through the Ages." Headed by colossal figures of the giant Antigonus and his wife, the legendary patrons of the city, it was continued through crooked, flower-strewn streets with representations of Assyrian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Gothic, and Renaissance arts, and ended with a "Homage to Sir Anthony Van Dyck."

The objective of the event was naturally the glorification of Van Dyck the painter, and as such the exhibition, which had been installed by N. Pierre Koch in four large rooms of the museum, easily ranked as the most complete and splendid display of Sir Anthony's oeuvre ever held. Though lacking certain features of the Grosvenor Gallery Exhibition of 1887, it nevertheless gave a far wider view of an artist whose great religious canvases proved something of a revelation to those who had known him in the light of a portrait painter only. It served to crystallize in the mind those multiple influences which helped Van Dyck in his onward course, giving an accurate picture of a man, great, yet never quite able to free himself from the shadows of men still greater.

Each of the four periods into which Van Dyck's art naturally divides itself was characteristically represented. Belonging to the first Flemish period were "Christ Sinking Under the Cross," painted in 1617, when the artist was but eighteen, and the legend-capped "Saint Martin Dividing His Cloak with a Beggar."

So precarious has been the career of this latter picture, so often has it narrowly escaped fire, rioters, and robbers, that for a long time an armed caretaker slept beside it in the Church at Sevensthem, a story which lent color to the suspicion that the Directors had a cot rigged up in the museum each night whereon slept a similar functionary.

A pupil at this date of Rubens, the great glory of Flemish art, it is natural that most of Van Dyck's paintings should have been religious in character. Sir Francis Cook contributed interesting paraphrases of the "Betrayal of Christ" and "The Brazen Serpent," the final versions of which are at Madrid, and a little-known "Good Samaritan" was loaned by Prince Sanguszko.

By no means so well represented was the next (the Italian) period, the gloomy Genoese palaces refusing to part with their treasures even for so brief a space. Though the young and supremely patrician "Paolo Adorno" of the Palazzo Rasso was not there, her place was taken by the even more mellow and beautiful "Paolo" from Hampden House, in whom we see painted with unrivaled brilliancy, depth, and richness of tone, a portrait of the aristocratic woman whose life was linked for a short hour with an artist, youthful, but already petted and world-weary.

Owing to the number of altar pieces which are still in the great Low Country churches, the second Flemish period was amply represented. "The Ecstasy of Saint Augustine" and the "Elevation of the Cross," from Antwerp and Courtrai, respectively, were among the best of these. It was a source of regret that the beautiful and delicate "Madone aux Perdrix" could not have been won from the Hermitage, and to feel that among the portraits Prince Lichtenstein's "Maria Louisa von Tassis" and the Louvre's superb equestrian of "François de Moncado" were among the missing.

To the generosity of British collectors was due the successful showing here made by the last chapter of Van Dyck's art—a period during which he gave himself over to depicting the English King and Court. Though much of Van Dyck's work now begins to show signs of haste of indecision, of the waning of a never robust talent, of the effects of an ever-increasing life, a few canvases such as "Lord Philip Wharton," "Thomas Killigrew and Thomas Carew," and, above all, "The Earl of Arundel and One of His Grandsons," prove him in full possession of unimpaired powers. Yet when death came of a bleak morning at Blackfriars, though still a young man, he would seem to have finished his work, to have "carried little with him to the grave."

Like the Rembrandt and the Velasquez, the Van Dyck exhibition contributed much to a better understanding of the artist and the man. It would be enthusiastic and uncritical to place Van Dyck beside either Rembrandt or Velasquez. He was a genius, but not a great creative force. He has no sombre, splendid-hued message for mankind; nor was he the creator of anything comparable to that fine, reticent, nonchalant art which is the achievement of Velasquez. He painted better than any one the grace and elegance of gay cavaliers and courtly dames, but the flower of his genius was delicate, exotic, expatriated. He was a Fleming, but an Italianised Fleming. Directly he found himself among marble palaces and languid fountains, a part of that elegant, indolent world; once he had assimilated the divine suavity of Titian, he became—and remained—il pittore cavalleresco. His art is brilliant, sumptuous, aristocratic, and essentially communicative; it has little of that mystery which is felt alike while watching little "Balthasar Carlos" on his prancing pony or studying "La Giaconda" as she sits beside great rocks and silent waters.

CHRISTIAN BRINTON.

Rare Ruskin Books.

The earliest of Ruskin's books is "Salsette and Elephanta; a Prize Poem, Recited in the Theatre, Oxford, June 12, 1839," Oxford, 1839, a small octavo of nineteen pages, issued in colored paper wrappers, (in some instances drab and in others blue,) at 1s. 6d. It was reprinted the same year, in "Oxford Prize Poems," Oxford, 1839, also in the "Poems," 1850, and in 1879 a "Second Edition" was published by George Allen at Sunnyside, Orpington, Kent. J. H. Slater, in his "Early Editions," 1894, estimates the value of the first editions at "2 or 3 guineas." A copy, in original paper, was sold by Bangs & Co. last March for $9.50.

In 1850 appeared an octavo volume, with fifty-one distinct poems, of which ten were now first printed, and of pages iv.+283, with this simple title: "Poems. J. R. Collected 1850." It was issued in cloth boards, which in some instances were green and in others purple. The cover was lettered across the back, "Poems, J. R.," and was further ornamented by a gilt lyre stamped upon the side. In most cases the edges of the leaves were cut and gilded. It was not published, but merely printed for private circulation, and has now become the rara avis of Ruskin literature. Thomas J. Wise, in his invaluable "Complete Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of John Ruskin," 1893, says that the present value of an uncut copy in original state is about £50. In February, 1897, a copy fetched £22 in London; in May, 1897, another brought £12 10s., and in February, 1899, a third sold for £22. Each was described as being in "original cloth," but there was reference to cut or uncut edges. Maxwell's fetched $190 in Boston in 1895.

Toward the close of 1850 was published what has now become a rather rare book: "The King of the Golden River; or, the Black Brothers. A Legend of Stiria." The title page, however, reads: "London, 1851." It is a small square octavo of pages viii+56, and was issued in ornamental glazed paper boards. This "imitation of Grimm and Dickens," which was illustrated by Richard Doyle, was written, according to the "Advertisement" on Page 5, "at the request of a very young lady." This little girl was Miss Euphemia Gray, one of the daughters of a Perth lawyer, and later Lady Millais. A copy of the book, in original boards, but wanting back, fetched £2 8s. in 1896; another, in calf extra, gilt edges, sold for £2 in 1894.

The three foregoing books, together with several later publications, strongly appeal, of course, to collectors of nineteenth century literature; but the giants among the Ruskin books, and those which possess greatest value, are "Modern Painters," "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," and "The Stones of Venice." The first edition of "The Seven Lamps of Architecture" was published in 1849, (the second in 1855, and the third in 1880,) and, though Ives's copy, in morocco extra by Zaehnsdorf, fetched $52.50 and other finely bound copies have sold high, the book, in original cloth, is worth less. The latest quotation is that of November, 1899, when a copy, in cloth, fetched £2 18s. at Sotheby's.

The first edition of "The Stones of Venice" appeared in 1851-3, (the first volume, 1851, the second and third, 1853.) Copies in original cloth have brought £10, £12, and £15, nicely bound copies fetching larger sums, (Ives's in morocco extra selling for $90 in 1891;) but recent quotations have been lower. A copy, in original cloth, fetched £7 5s. at Sotheby's last November.

The first volume of "Modern Painters" appeared in 1843, (second edition, same year, third in 1846, fourth in 1848, and the fifth, sixth, and seventh in 1851, 1857, and 1867, respectively.) The second volume appeared in 1846, (second edition in 1848, third, fourth, and fifth in 1851, 1856, and 1860.) The first edition of the third volume appeared in 1856, (second in 1857,) and in this year also appeared the fourth volume, (second edition in 1868.) The only separate edition of the fifth volume was in 1860. As the first editions of Volumes I. and II. have no illustrations, later editions, with the author's revisions, are sought for by collectors when making up sets, and the fourth edition of Volume I., the second of Volume II., and the first editions of the Volumes III.-V. are chosen, for example. Such a set, in original cloth, is worth from £10 to £25. Ives's, a good set, in morocco extra, brought $155 in 1891. The latest quotation is that of Nov. 13, 1899, when John Kermack's copy, original cloth, fetched £15 at Sotheby's.

Ruskin's "Leoni: A Legend of Italy," an octavo of fifteen pages, issued in gray wrappers, is something of a rarity. There are the following quotations: July, 1898, £2 2s.; February, 1899, £4; April, 1899, $35.50; January, 1900, $17. It was privately printed.

Ruskin as His Own Publisher.

"Problems of Booksellers in England," which formed the subject of an article by Sir Walter Besant in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Jan. 21, is a theme which, about thirty years ago, particularly appealed to the late John Ruskin. When, in 1871, his "Sesame and Lilies" was issued, Ruskin inserted the following notice in the earlier copies of the book:

It has long been on my mind to make some small beginning of resistance to the existing system of irregular discount in the bookselling trade—not in hostility to booksellers, but, as I think they will find eventually, with a just regard to their interests as well as to that of the authors. Every volume of this series of my collected works will be sold to the trade without any discount or allowance for quantity, at such a fixed price as will allow both author and publisher a moderate profit on each volume. It will be sold to the trade only, who can then fix such further profit on it as they deem fitting for retail.

Mr. Ruskin then established the price—half a guinea—and added: "Nor do I wish it to be less." The cost to the trade was 7s. But Mr. Ruskin found the trade unwilling to accept his terms. More than that, as an author-publisher he made the discovery that he was losing money. He could not furnish his book at 7s. He modified his plans. In 1875 Mr. Ruskin wrote to The London World a lengthy communication in regard to his "new method of publication." The World had questioned the advantages of his proposed methods. Mr. Ruskin began by asking:

I. How many authors are strong enough to do without advertisements?

None; while advertisement is the practice. But let it become the fashion to announce books once for all in a monthly circular, (publishers', for instance,) and the public will simply refer to that for all they want to know. Such advertisement I use now, and always would.

II. Why had he determined to be his own publisher?

I wish to resist the practice of writing for money early in life. I think an author's business requires as much training as a musician's, and that as soon as he can write really well there would always, for a man of worth and sense, be found capital enough to enable him to be able to print, say, a hundred pages of his careful work, which, if the public were pleased with, they would soon enable him to print more. I do not think young men should rush into print nor old ones modify their books to please publishers.

III. And it seeme to me, considering that the existing excellent books in the world would if they were heaped together in great tower overtop their cathedrals, that at any rate a man should think long before he invites his neighbors to listen to his sayings on any subject whatever.

What I do, therefore, is done only in the conviction—foolish, egotistic, whatever you like to call it, but firm—that I am writing what is needful and useful for my fellow-creatures; that if it is so, they will in due time discover it, and that before due time I do not want it discovered. And it seems to me that no sound scholar or true well-wisher to the people about him would write in any other temper. I mean to be paid for my work, if it is worth payment. Not otherwise. And it seems to me my mode of publication is the proper method of ascertaining the fact.

A Letter Ruskin Disowned.

At Chesterfield, in England, on the occasion of a distribution of prizes to art classes in that town, a letter was read to the assemblage as the reply of John Ruskin to an invitation to be present at the meeting. It said:

I have just returned from Venice, where I have been ruminating in the pasturages of the home of art, the loveliest and holiest of lovely and holy cities, where the very stones cry out eloquent in the elegancies of iambics. I could not if I would go to Chesterfield, and I much doubt whether I would go if I could. I have heard of Chesterfield. Hath it not a steeple abomination, and is it not the home, if not the cradle, of that arch abomination, Creator Stephenson? To him we are indebted for the screeching and howling and shrieking fiends fit only for a pandemonium called locomotives, which disfigure the loveliest spots of God's own land. My good young people, this is pre-eminently the foolishest, yes, quite the foolishest, notion that you can get into your empty little eggshells of heads, that you can be a Titian or a Raphael or a Phidias, or that you can write like Seneca; but because you cannot be great, there is no reason why you should not aspire to greatness. In joy, humility, and humbleness work together. Only don't study art because it will pay, and do not ask for payment because you study art. Wisdom is more precious than rubies, and is offered to you as a blessing in herself. She is the reward of industry, kindness, and modesty. She is the prize of prizes, the strength of your life now and an earnest of the life that is to come. This advice is better than money, and I give it to you gratis. Ponder it and profit by it. Ever faithfully yours, JOHN RUSKIN.

It was a message of monition and instruction, not lacking confidence in tone, like others conveyed over its appended signature, and the classes received it in a proper spirit of humility. The next morning, however, the paper which had printed the report of the meeting was adorned with this briefer missive, bearing the same autograph, this time authentic:

Sir: The letter you quote in your last night's issue as having been sent by me to the Secretary of the art school at Chesterfield is an impudent hoax from beginning to end, and you will oblige me by letting this be known as soon as possible. I am, Sir, your faithful servant, JOHN RUSKIN.

OUR RECENT WAR.

Capt. Mahan's Volume on Its Lesson.*

Capt. Mahan says that he "has done a little editing" in reproducing the nine magazine articles included in his "Lessons of the War with Spain," but the earliest appeared only eighteen months ago, and was written not quite two years ago, and comparison with the original shows that it needed but very slight revision. This is not because two years have not wrought great changes, but because Capt. Mahan, being one of those uncommon persons able to distinguish an impression from an opinion, is never rash in stating either, and because he reasons, a much less ordinary act than is sometimes supposed. Consequently, when he ventures upon stating a theory, and that is his nearest approach to a prophecy, events generally justify it. It is therefore worth noting and remembering that he regards Japan's altered attitude toward the United States as a Pacific power an alteration from virtually protesting against Hawaiian annexation to an actual welcome of the Philippines, as a striking indication of the degree to which the attention of mankind has been aroused by the character of Russia's progress in Northeastern Asia and upon the Pacific, and also the influence thereby exerted upon the currents of men's thoughts and of international relations.

As to the position of Great Britain and the United States, he says:

> At such a time and on such a scene, the momentous drawing together of the two great English-speaking nations, intensely commercial and enterprising, yet also intensely warlike when aroused, and exceeding all others in their possibilities for maritime greatness, gave reason for reflection far exceeding that which springs from imaginative calculations of the future devastations of war. It was a direct result of the war with Spain, inevitably suggesting a probable drift toward concurrent action upon the greatest question of the immediate future, in which the influence of force will be none the less real because sedulously kept in the background of controversies.

On the other hand, he is persuaded that between the Peace Conference and the hostilities with Spain there was the direct sequence of a corollary to its proposition. Russia found herself confronted with the appearance of the United States in the Philippines under conditions which made inevitable both a continuance of occupancy and a great increase of military and naval strength, and the intrusion was attended by circumstances which caused Great Britain alone among the nations of the world to appear as the friend of the United States in their conflict. That the United States would reciprocate seemed probable, and thence came sudden Russian illumination as to the charms of peace. He might have said that the Irish, both at home and in this country, after protesting and showing their American preference during the Cuban contest, now feel an almost inexpressible longing for peace and spare no effort to discredit the American army in the Philippines from the commander down to the newest recruit, thus indirectly strengthening Russia's hands against Great Britain, and doing their best to bring about that British adversity which is Ireland's opportunity. This he does not say, but he writes significantly:

> If, however, the organic development of military strength could be temporarily arrested by general agreement or by the prevalence of an opinion that war is practically a thing of the past, the odds would be in favor of the State which at the moment of such arrest enjoys the most advantageous conditions of position and of power already created.

He reaffirms his belief in the primacy of the navy in maritime warfare, does not retreat from his position in regard to the utility of coast and inland frontier defenses and their value in conducting the energetic prosecution of offensive war, and he cites in illustration the fears for Washington in the civil war, and for the seaports during the war with Spain, saying that in both instances disposition of the mobile force viewed from a purely military standpoint was imposed by fear for stationary positions believed rightly or wrongly to be in peril.

The articles included in the volume are the five published in McClure's Magazine in 1898 and 1899, and will be remembered as containing some emphatic statements as to the necessity of popular understanding of war. In briefer form these are restated in the preface and their spirit is felt in the paper on "The Peace Conference and the Moral Aspect of the War" reprinted from the October North American Review. This article led to the author receiving permission to print a letter of Gen. Sherman's written to Gen. Meigs in February, 1890, after attending a "grand banquet of 850 lawyers" after the centennial ceremonies in honor of the Supreme Court. "No place for a soldier," said the wrathful chief.

> The Bar Association of the United States has manifestly cast aside the Sword of Liberty. Justice and Law have ignored the significance of the Great Seal of the United States, with its emblematic olive branch and thirteen arrows, "all proper," and now claim that, without force, law and moral suasion have carried us through one hundred years of history. * * * I was in hopes the civil war had dispelled this dangerous illusion, but it seems not. You and I can fold our hands and truly say we have done a man's share, and leave the consequences to younger men who must buffet with the next storms; but a Government which ignores the great truths illuminated in heraldic language over its very Capitol is not yet at the end of its woes.

"Current Fallacies on Naval Subjects," written before the destruction of the Maine; "Distinguishing Qualities of Ships of War," and "The Relation of the United States to Their New Dependencies," the latter written for The Engineering Magasine, and, naturally, much superior to all the others, complete the group. In this article, not being burdened with the necessity of making explanations of definitions, Capt. Mahan considers what must follow the effective and successful use of force, that is, beneficence.

> "Ideals underly action," he says. "If the paramount idea of beneficence becomes a National conviction we may stumble and err; we may at times sin or be betrayed by unworthy representatives, but we shall advance unfailingly. * * * The inhabitants may not return love for their benefits; comprehension or gratitude may fail them; but the sense of duty achieved, and the security of the tenure are the reward of the ruler."

Mrs. Moulton's Latest Verse.*

Mrs. Moulton's last volume of poems, "At the Wind's Will," fitly crowns the literary achievement of the century. It is poetry at high-water mark. Her work exhibited in previous volumes has given her a rank among the foremost poets of the world, and much of the work in "At the Wind's Will" exceeds in grasp and in surrender, in strength and in beauty, anything she has hitherto published. Long ago Philip Bourke Marston declared that the "divine simplicity, strength, and subtlety, the intense, fragrant, genuine individuality of her poems, made them imperishable." A poet himself, he found certain of her verses, as he said, possessed by the melancholy yet tender music of birds singing in twilight in some churchyard, through old trees that watch beside silent graves.

Of many of the verses in the present volume one can speak with no less enthusiasm. Great work as we found "The House of Death"—of which the same critic said, "It is one of the most beautiful as well as one of the most powerful poems I know; no poem gives me such an idea of the heartlessness of nature; the poem is death within and Summer without, light girdling darkness"—yet it is wonderfully matched, or should one say rivaled, by the "Arcady" of these pages? Arcady has been the hunting ground of poets since Spenser and before, but Mrs. Moulton lends it a fine grace of fancy all her own, as the song lilts its way along in full sunshine to perfect music:

> I dwell no more in Arcady—
> But when the sky is blue with May,
> And flowers spring up along the way,
> And birds are blithe, and winds are free,
> I know what message is for me,
> For I have been in Arcady.

There is the same evasive and tender charm in other of the lyrics, here touching airily a slender string, and there one vibrating with passion; in "The Lure," sweet as the song of some bird that stirs in his nest and pours his strain across the night; in "The Sun Is Low"; in "Bend Low and Hark," as dramatic as poetic; in "To Sleep," and in "The Lost Eden." Who is there gives a sweeter, fuller note than this of "A Winter's Dream":

> Wild is my heart, with its hopeless pain—
> Oh, for one hour of the past again!
> One brief, bright hour—one least little touch!
> Do you forgive me the words I said,
> As you look back from the realm of the dead?—
> Much is forgiven—when one loves much.

And who more lightly touches to heal than this poet in "The Birds and I"?

> What matter though sometimes the cup of tears
> We drink, instead of the rich wine of mirth,
> There are as many Springs as there are years,
> And glad or sad, we love this dear old earth.

With all the loveliness of these lyrics, abounding as they do in single fortunate lines—"jewels five words long"—with their atmosphere of music and beauty, their felicitous antique spirit, their captivating personality, they are also full of feeling and of that sympathy with human nature which makes them melt into the heart and become household words.

It is in the masterly sonnets of the volume that the poet reveals her highest power. It is conceded, both here and in England, that Mrs. Moulton's command of the sonnet is absolute. And it seems to me that it would be difficult to name one who, since Wordsworth, has approached the greatness of the best of these—"Though We Were Dust," with its passionate outcry; the heart-breaking "Rose of Dawn"; the large and splendid "Were but My Spirit Loosed Upon the Air"; the intense humanity of "Vain Freedom"; the pathetic and sympathetic tenderness of "A Poet's Second Love"; the lofty insight of "Aspiration"; the magnificence of "When We Confront the Vastness of the Night."

It has been said that Browning's mention of old age in the singing of the gypsy crone in the "Flight of the Duchess" is something that appeals peculiarly to the old themselves; but is it more effective than this, from the sonnet "Shall I Complain"?

> To sit alone and dream at set of sun,
> When all the world is vague with coming night—
> To hear old voices whisper, sweet and low,
> And see dear faces steal back, one by one,
> And thrill anew to each long-past delight—
> Shall I complain, who still this bliss may know?

There is a superb sweep and breadth, indeed, to every one of these sonnets, with a phrasing that has the true Shakespearean ring, fraught with meaning. Many of them signify a rich spiritual growth. One comprehends that the thought has traveled on large meridians when coming upon lines like these:

> Shall not the soul, new-born in heavenly spheres,
> Forget the paths it traversed, and the night
> It journeyed through, and all old hopes and fears,
> Caught up into that Infinite Great Light?

Through all the pages of the book there is an affluent variety of theme and treatment; and it is really marvelous that the hand tracing the large lines of "Land of My Dreams," of "Lethe," of "Midsummer," of "Soul to Body," should be able to touch the lute so lightly, so perfectly, with such delicate artistry, as in the translation from Montenaeken, on the last page:

> Ah, brief is Life—
> Love's short, sweet way,
> With dreamings rife,
> And then—Good-day!
>
> And Life is vain—
> Hope's vague delight,
> Grief's transient pain,
> And then—Good-night!

The whole book, with its fine workmanship, its purity, its grace and beauty, its deep feeling, the loftiness of its thought, is one to make the reader glad and grateful.

"THE BEST THAT MR. CRAWFORD HAS YET WRITTEN."

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, NEW YORK.

When did business, as it is understood in its proper sense, begin in New York? Was it when exchanges were made—so many beads or shells being worth so many beaver skins? Was there ever a corner in wampum or shell currency? There might even have been a Mr. Bryan in those primitive times. The editor of "Financial New York" says that there was. He describes what was the very earliest currency and the beginnings of the banking business in New York.

The work, compiled by Mr. William Ten Eyck Hardenbrook, is a major opus, and gives particular details of all the banks or other financial institutions which have ever been established in New York. The plan of the publication, which is of the widest scope, includes the history of the banks, the trust companies, the savings banks, of the New York Stock Exchange, of the United States Sub-Treasury, and of the Clearing House. There are many illustrations, where may be found the portraits of former Presidents of our important financial institutions, and, when such have been obtainable, the likenesses of those of to-day. Banking houses past and present are also described, and there are reproductions in fac simile of many of the ancient bank bills.

This volume is, then, of the most comprehensive kind, being not only historical, but biographical. To render it accurate, all possible sources of information have been sought both at home and abroad. "Financial New York" is a standard work. As to the typography of the volume, it is at the best, having been executed by the De Vinne Press.

WOMEN HUMORISTS.

Kate Sanborn, One of Them, Makes a Defense.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW.

Found! A "real" woman humorous writer. I take pleasure in referring to Miss Marietta Holley of North Adams, N. Y., as a "real woman" and a "professedly" humorous writer. She is well known as the creator of Samantha Allen, Betsy Bobbett, &c. Her half dozen books are "permeated" with fun and humor quite equal to Mark Twain or Bill Nye and others.

"Women among humorists" are like mice among cats—severely and summarily dealt with. The writer in last week's TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW seems ignorant—or is he indulging in would-be irony? "Sporadic flashes," he says he does find, but all "women humorous writers" (I should say humorous women writers) soon lapse, he complains, into gravity or sentimentality. Does he mean sentiment, or is ality the feminine termination? Is Thackeray to be deprived of his reputation as a humorist because he was also a moralist, a cynic, a man who gave us sad, tender verses full of sentiment? Dickens then we must drop from the ranks of humorists, because he was an earnest reformer, every novel of his having in view the combating of a great public wrong. Is the "Tale of Two Cities" a side-splitting farce? Does the death of Little Nell fairly convulse you with merriment?

And Tom Hood! He was a sad invalid who had to be a lively Hood to make a livelihood. It was with him a case of "broad grins under narrow circumstances." He was professedly a humorist for daily bread. He wrote amusing articles in bed when near death. He wrote the very last one to pay the undertaker. Grim business! I open the first volume and am greeted by the haggard face and skeleton form of the wretched seamstress about whom he sang that immortal, heart-breaking "Song of the Shirt," which is not permeated with fun!

> But why do I talk of death,
> That phantom of grisly bone!
> I hardly fear his terrible shape,
> It seems so like my own—
> It seems so like my own,
> Because of the fast I keep.
> Oh, God! that bread would be so dear,
> And flesh and blood so cheap!

"The Bridge of Sighs" is not exactly a rollicking skit! "The Lady's Dream" could not be called fun! One volume is devoted entirely to Hood's serious poems, at his earnest request. He was a great author; his essays are equal to those of "Elia" (Charles Lamb.) Humor and pathos are twins; one alone is a tedious thing. Beecher said that if he wanted to make his audience cry, he first made them laugh. If a man is eternally funny in public or print, he becomes mighty near being a colossal bore! Persons tire of such constant waggishness. Do you want all maple syrup and candies and butter and whipped froth? Not for a steady diet. Kipling's "Recessional" does not bar him from being a wit.

I supposed these facts were universally known. Is a humorous woman to be pronounced in a Helen Kellerish condition because she shows power in other directions? Your critic gives a list of "male humorists" and challenges an equal list among women. Most of Rabelais's wit is too obscene to quote; there is a popular kind of humor that verges on vulgarity. Striking out this maleish factor, also profanity, double-entendres, and heavy, hoary stories, long since in their anec-dotage, (just slightly galvanized by wine,) I offer the following list of "Real Women Humorous Writers":

Sophie Arnould.	Sarah Orne Jewett.
Jane Austen.	Mrs. Kemble.
Louisa M. Alcott.	Caroline M. Kirkland.
Charlotte F. Bates.	Caroline B. Le Row.
"Sherwood Bonner."	Eliza Leslie.
"Aunt Fanny" "Barrows."	Sallie P. McLean.
Isabel F. Bellows.	Mary R. Mitford.
Lady Blessington.	Mme. Mohl.
Mary D. Brine.	Lady Montagu.
Frederika Bremer.	Lady Morgan.
Aphra Behn.	Lucretia Mott.
Fanny Burney.	Martha Morton.
Phoebe Cary.	Marguerite Merington.
E. G. Corbett.	Louise C. Moulton.
Lydia M. Child.	Miss Murfree.
Lady Clarke.	Hannah More.
Mrs. Cleaveland.	"Ouida."
Mrs. Carlyle.	Carlotta Perry.
Mary Clemmer.	Josephine Pollard.
Rose Terry Cooke.	Frances Lee Pratt.
Frances P. Cobbe.	Alice W. Rollins.
Lizzie W. Champney.	Ellen H. Rollins.
Susanna Centlivre.	Lucia G. Runkle.
Helen Gray Cone.	Harriet Beecher Stowe.
Lucretia Davidson.	Julia Schayer.
Mme. du Deffand.	Catherine Sedgwick.
Abby M. Diaz.	Jane Taylor.
Mary Kyle Dallas.	"Octave Thanet."
Mary Mapes Dodge.	Margaret Vandergrift.
M. Eytinge.	Metta V. Victor.
George Eliot.	Mrs. Whicher.
Fanny Fern.	Lillian Whiting.
Fanny Forrester.	Constance F. Woolson.
Anna Fuller.	Arabella Wilson.
Margaret Fuller.	Mrs. Phelps-Ward.
Kate Field.	Mary Wilkins.
Grace Greenwood.	Kate Douglas Wiggin.
Mrs. Gaskell.
Mme. de Genlis.
Caroline Gilman.
Mrs. Grote.

I do not hope to convince or even to interest male humorists by this list. The physiologists and psychologists must take up that inability to see wit in the other sex. Talk about the deaf, blind, and stupid! I will close with quotations from two excellent judges:

"Women have more humor than wit."—John Boyle O'Reilly.

"Women have more wit than humor."—Dr. Holmes.

You notice (if not deaf, blind, and dull!) that both qualities in women are hereby acknowledged.

KATE SANBORN.

The Clowns All Men—Where Women Show Humor Unfailingly.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

"Search the list of women writers from Mary E. Wilkins to Mrs. Aphra Behn, and you will not find a single professedly humorous writer." Therefore, "Most, if not all women are entirely devoid of a sense of humor." And: "It may be that women are deprived of the humorous sense in the same manner that a person may be born without sight or hearing or speech."

This argument of the Literary Person in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW, while not "professedly humorous," has a tipsy, topheavy gravity that certainly does appeal to a sense of humor, however rudimentary. One is reminded of the precarious balance of an elephant on his trunk.

No woman writer has been unmitigatedly funny. No woman writer who is not always funny has a sense of humor. Therefore, most if not all women are entirely devoid of a sense of humor. George Eliot was often serious. Therefore, she had no sense of humor; maybe was born without it. Walter Scott never wrote a jokebook. He probably lost the humorous sense early in life, as, being a man, he was presumably born with it. Mr. Mark Twain has of late years sometimes "lapsed into gravity." When did he part with his birthright? Perhaps in his first visit to England. It is too bad that the Well-known Woman Writer took the Literary Person so seriously as somewhat to impair his exquisite if unconscious humor. She should have answered, "Well, there's Gail Hamilton. She could have been funny all the time if she had chosen. As it is, she is remembered as much for her humor as for any of her fine qualities."

But suppose no woman should ever be unremittingly funny, day and night, week in and week out, year after year, at home and abroad, with tongue and pen? This may be, for the cynicism that has so large a part in present day mirth is not in woman as in man, and "Il Penseroso" presses so close to womankind as sometimes to shut out the jocund face of "L'Allegro."

It had been well had the Literary Person and the Well-Known Woman Writer settled on the spot the definition of "sense of humor." The Literary Person seems to have held the field much as did Tammas Haggart against T'nowhead and Hendry in their sympostum on a similar subject.

In order to lay claim to a sense of humor, must one make jokes, and that continually? Or may the sense be shown in the power to see the comic side of domestic losses and limitations, in the light answer that turneth away the wrath among the children; in the graceful badinage that affords a safe and sure descent to the youth who has taken himself too seriously? We all have seen the Howell pair, the scintillating cynic unequally yoked with the serious feminine who views her husband's pyrotechnics with puzzled alarm.

But why overlook the nimble-witted woman whose good man's lumber wagon toils slowly after her Queen Mab chariot? If we may trust our Shakespeare, the woman with a sense of humor was, in his time at least, not an extinct species. What more excellent fooling than that of Portia, Jessica, Rosalind, Beatrice? To be sure, the "professedly humorous" personages, the clowns, are all men.

If the Literary Person has failed to discover the type in his world, it is possibly because of his close attention to his own profession of—logician. There are other questions which tempt one, as, Which lives longer, the humor that "lapses into gravity," or that which flows on and on until it runs into the ground?

For that which "lapses into sentimentality," does the Literary Person forget Thomas Hood and Charles Lamb? Does he repudiate the truism that "the sources of smiles and tears are close together"?

Then, as to the dignity, value, and permanence of "professedly humorous" writing—why, Mr. Bangs himself will not be even confessedly a humorist!

Yonkers, N. Y., Jan. 22, 1900.

A Cloud of Witnesses.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The following had already been written when your issue of Saturday last came into my hands. Your little citation, "Women Among Humorists," is so irritating that I place the manuscript at your disposal as an answer to the "literary person" quoted.

Several weeks since one of the "essayists" of the metropolitan press absorbed a column and a half of space in demonstrating the absence of wit in woman. It was not a hypothesis, but a determinable quantity, and as the journal for which he caters is one of eminent standing, its authority, of course, made conclusive the pronunciamento that there is no wit in woman. She is incapable of the faculty for the discovery of the opposite. She is imitative, not inventive. She is a reflex of conditions, not a maker of them. Her thought-methods are far too plastic and indirect for the subtle processes of wit-coinage. But if, by chance, a woman is wit-endowed she is an anomaly—a kind of Dr. Mary Walker, of whom the sex are afraid, who never enlists their sympathies or commands their admiration. All of which this promoter of luminous ideas conclusively determined.

Says George Eliot: "There were many crass minds in Middlemarch whose reflective scales could only weigh things in a lump." Out of Middlemarch our essayist must have come. No American genesis could have been his who places woman on a lower mental plane than man, or who regards her as being, by reason of her sex, a minor factor in our intellectual or inspirational life—for wit is intellectual and inspirational in the highest degree.

What impresses the educated foreigner in his study of American character, manners and thought, if his mind is on the alert for discovery, is the vivacity of American women, their readiness in conversation, their quickness in repartee, their fondness for humor, and their decided preference for the brightest-minded men. Every function he attends evidences this versatility; he soon is aware that it is not exceptional but general, or even in any true special sense, as he dances upon him, as by a revolution, of his wits with extended vision, that in woman's free apprehension of wit, humor, satire, conceit, and pun, he finds ample proof of possibilities of the supremest order. Then he the more clearly comprehends why the American woman in Europe has won such marked prominence; and if he reasons ever so little he will discern in that quickness of her perceptions and skill in language a consequent of the self-assertion here made possible to women of all conditions.

That woman has not written for print in the field of humor as fully and freely as man has counts for nothing—in no sense disqualifies her claim to equality with her brothers in creative and spontaneous wit. A dozen all-sufficient reasons restrict and repress this publicity, yet the record of her work in our literature of humor, both in prose and verse, is not scant or insignificant. Indeed, some of the most enjoyable productions along the lines of the humorous are to her credit. Mrs. Miriam Whitcher's "Widow Bedott" is but a type of portraiture that runs through the literature of the past fifty years—New England, Western, and Southern—all from women's pens, and without which the droll vernacular, the inimitable character, the utterly peculiar indigenous life of States and sections would never have had expression, for men, as a rule, do not seem to catch the lights and shades of well-localized life that the woman, with her quicker sensibility, apprehends, enjoys, and takes delight in its expostion.

The list that comes at call of such witnesses of woman's distinction embraces these names: Miss Murfee, (Charles Egbert Craddock,) Mary L. Wilkins, Sara Orne Jewett, Louisa Alcott, Metta Victoria Victor, Mary Mapes Dodge, Rose Terry Cooke, Phoebe Cary, Sherwood Bonner, (Mrs. McDowell,) Clara Augusta, Lizzie Champney, Alice B. Neal, Marian Douglas, Kate Field, Gail Hamilton, Amanda T. Jones, Grace Greenwood, Eleanor Kirke, and Fanny Fern. Each and every one of these has put in print enough to justify her recognition among the wits and humorists who have given to American claimants such world-wide distinction.

Of Miss Dodge, (Gail Hamilton,) Kate Field, Grace Greenwood, and a host of their sisters noted for the brilliancy of their talk, the keenness of their wit, and their entire sufficiency in "holding their own" in any company, it is to be said what Mary Clemmer Hudson wrote of Phoebe Cary:

> Her most brilliant sallies were perfectly unpremeditated, and by herself never repeated or remembered. When she was in her best moods they came like flashes of heat lightning, like a rush of meteors, so suddenly and constantly you were dazzled while you were delighted, and afterward found it difficult to single out any distinct flash or separate meteor from the multitude. * * * This most wonderful of her gifts can only be represented by a few stray sentences gleaned here and there from the faithful memories of loving friends.

It was a rare treat when John Godfrey Saxe was present (as he often was) at the famous Sunday evening receptions of the Cary sisters, in their New York City home, for when he was one of the goodly company then was Phoebe "at her best," and it was almost unfailingly remarked that the nimble-witted Vermonter more than found his match in the sallies of the "abounding Buckeye," as he had characterized her. Yet Saxe is a "noted American wit" in our autorial biographies and anthologies, while Phoebe Cary is, by the same authorities, spoken of as a writer of poems and parodies—just this and nothing more!

Wherefore, haec fabula docet: That men, being their own editors, critics, and book makers, fail not to exalt that which they themselves are; that which women are is left for the pilgrim to discover—if he can!

Sweden Produced One.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

You can tell the lady who is looking for a real woman humorous writer that she can find one in the Swedish poetess, Anna Maria Lenngren, who still is considered one of the best humorists known. She was born in Upsala, June 18, 1754, and died in Stockholm March 8, 1817. Her poems "Love and Folly," "My Blessed Husband," "The Boys," "To My Daughter, if I Had One," &c., are jewels read, appreciated, and laughed at as much to-day as a hundred years ago.

"Comin' Through the Rye" Cited.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Possibly the name of Helen B. Mathers, author of "Comin' Through the Rye," may with reasonable assurance be suggested as that of a woman humorist. Few people, men or women, have produced books more genuinely humorous than her first and greatest work. The fact that the story is also a serious one, and is touched here and there with dashes of extreme pathos and sobriety of thought, does not alter the truth that as a humorist its author stands well up to the line with others. Even Dickens, the great humorist, is also grave and serious. Ask your perplexed "well-known woman writer" to read "Comin' Through the Rye." I think she will find her answer there. She will also find, in Godey's Magazine for February, 1897, Page 176, an interesting sketch of Helen B. Mathers and her work, with portrait, that cannot fail to prove her claim to a place among the ablest humorists of her time. The sketch is by Maude Andrews, a prominent American newspaper woman, formerly of The Atlanta Constitution staff, and was furnished me at the time I was editing the magazine and was seeking information concerning certain women of mark.

Names Several Who Are Famous.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Although the feminine never seems to give itself over to that form of drollery variously exemplified by Mark Twain, A. Ward, P. V. Nasby, &c., it still is capable of producing much humor, satire, and fun of the sort of which Dickens and Thackeray were masters. It must be a dull reader who cannot detect the flavor in Mary E. Wilkins's stories. The touches in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" which relieve the sombreness of the tale are often intensely humorous. Topsy is a distinct creation, a type as good in her way as Sam Weller or Handy Andy are in theirs. Mrs. Burton Harrison gets off many a bit of delicate humor, and humor and wit, too, are not hard to find in the work of many other women novelists and writers of stories for children and short sketches for magazines and newspapers. If most of them are serious in intention, this is also true of Dickens, Thackeray, and novelists in general most noted for their humor. But Marietta Holly and her numerous admirers would surely claim that she is a professedly humorous writer, whatever others may think of her humor and the several "purposes" masquerading behind it. There is an almost forgotten book written by a woman who, had she lived longer, might have become a first-class humorist. I am a frank admiref of "Widow Bedott," and Mrs. Whitcher, its author, certainly saw the funny side of some things as keenly as any writer ever did, besides being a pioneer in the American dialect school.

Finds Them Very Often.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Though I am only a passenger through this city, I hope I am gallant enough to break my lance for the fair sex when they are attacked upon the literary highway.

I therefore beg leave to challenge the accuracy of any one who avers that women writers are destitute of humor. The first exception to the rash statement of your critic that came to my mind was Ruth McEnery Stuart, in whose short stories there is a perpetual bubbling up of humor. In most of the works of Kate Douglas Wiggin there is also a delicious vein of humor. In London Mrs. Roy Devereux furnishes another happy exception to your scoffer's rule. And finally, any one who sees all the current magazines of the day—as the present writer happens to—will find many a promising bit of humor from the pen of woman. Two random instances are "Elton Slade's Auction Habit," (in one of the Summer issues of The Cosmopolitan,) and "The Salt Lake of Literature," by Ellen Burns Sherman, in a Summer issue of The Book Buyer. Lastly, but by no means late, let the scoffer re-read the Essays of Agnes Repplier.

With all due deference, I beg to sign myself yours in the interests of justice.

A Word for Miss Holley.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In looking through your issue of to-day, "Woman Among Humorists" calls forth a protest in favor of my sex as I recall the works of Marietta Holley. I don't know that the man referred to would call her or that she calls herself a "professedly humorous woman writer," but the fact remains that her writings many times provoke the risibles to the point of tears. I consider it the surest proof that her works are to the reading public humorous that her advocacy of temperance, equal rights and kindred unpopular subjects is put in a form that is read by so long a list of persons as is indicated by the slips in the volumes by that author that we find in the public libraries. If it is said that chapters in Miss Holley's books are not humorous, it ought also to be said that the same is true of the works of a number of the writers whom the male speaker classed in the "long list of male humorists."

In appreciation of the interest and value of THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW, I am cordially yours,

CHRISTINE V. WHIPPLE CLARKE.

Two That Easily Refute the Critic.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The old, though unjust, claim that women cannot write purely humorous books is easily refuted by the works of at least two woman authors—Marietta Holley and Lillian Bell.

Miss Holley, author of the "Samantha" books, is best known under the title of "Josiah Allen's Wife"; and, if mirth-provoking books are humorous, hers certainly deserve the name. Who can read the amusing adventures of Josiah Allen and his devoted spouse at Saratoga without a smile, no matter how blue and out of sorts he may feel? and the other books, whether

This monumental work brings the history of Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Persia, and Media down to the victories of Alexander the Great, and completes Professor Maspero's great series on the history of the ancient world. Like the preceding volumes, it represents the latest results of the highest scholarship, and it is magnificently illustrated. The Comparative Physiology and Morphology of Animals

The work of Darwin on the derivation of species and the descent of man awakened a new interest in the lower animals, and furnished additional evidence of their close kinship with ourselves. A fresh field of study was thus opened up, embracing the likenesses and differences of action as well as structure found throughout the animal kingdom. In this work Professor Le Conte gives us, in his well-known clear and simple style, and with the aid of numerous illustrations, an interesting outline of these similarities and variations of function as displayed among the various classes of animals from the lowest to the highest, man included.

they treat of Josiah Allen as a politician, or describe Samantha at the World's Fair or in Europe, are equally amusing. We become quite attached to the homely characters of Samantha and her "pardner," and accept them as good types of the country "hayseed," as indeed they are, without any of that third-rate vulgarity generally pervading descriptions of country folk. The fun in the books, especially in "Samantha at Saratoga," is entirely spontaneous, which is certainly a great point in a humorous work, and a quality which some men humorists sadly lack.

What Miss Holley is to simple country humor, Miss Bell is to the more subtle fun of high society in large cities. But Miss Bell's books are far superior in literary style to Miss Holley's, and her characterizations immediately impress one with her marvelous insight into human nature—especially male human nature. It would do such gentlemen as "Cynic" good to read a few of the different portraits of themselves to be found between the covers of that one book, from a girl's point of view, and to see themselves as one clever, brilliant woman sees them. Perhaps her opinion will be found no more complimentary to the male sex than "Cynic's" is to the female sex, and she voices the impressions of a very large class of women. It is needless to say that one laughs from the beginning to the end of her books—at least the women do.

These two women humorists appeal to all fun-loving people, though perhaps Miss Bell's books find more readers among lovers of satire than among good people who never make fun of anybody. Each writer is admirable in her way, and certainly deserves to be ranked with most of the male humorists mentioned in your article of last week. JOHANNA LOKENZ.

Marguerite Merington Cited.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In the SATURDAY REVIEW of this date an article requests the names of "real women humorous writers." I would like to suggest Miss Holley, who has written a series of books under the nom de plume of "Josiah Allen's Wife," which are brimful of humor, written in a dry, quaint, original style that would cause even a chronic hypochondriac to indulge in a hearty laugh. Another humorous woman writer is Miss Marguerite Merington, author of "Captain Lettarblair," a play presented with success by Mr. Edward Sothern some time ago, that is humorous both in lines and action, scintillating with witty jests, and even in the love passages abounds in merry play upon words and laughable situations.

Miss Kingsley, Kate Sanborn, et al.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In the works of May H. Kingsley, in her "Travels in West Africa" and "West African Studies," you will find a most exuberant humor, a quality supposed to be absent from a woman's mind. In these two works you will find a broad sense of humor combined with vigor and an extraordinary power of endurance. I remember the laughter over "Gala Days" and some other sketches by "Gail Hamilton" a few years ago—a person highly appreciated by James G. Blaine. Also Kate Sanborn's sketches, "An Abandoned Farm," &c. These are a few works that go to prove the existence of that quality in the serious and sentimental sex. F. P. ROBERTSON.

Ostensibly Humorous, at Any Rate.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In regard to the query in your last SATURDAY REVIEW as to whether there have been any women writers who have been distinctively humorists, I would mention the name of Miss Marietta Holley, "Josiah Allen's Wife." Whatever one may think of the quality of her humor, her works are ostensibly as purely humorous as many of the works of the authors mentioned.

One Among German Writers.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Agreeable to your request in the last SATURDAY REVIEW, under the heading, "Women Among Humorists," I beg to mention a German authoress of highly humorous endowment. Helene Böhlau may be considered the foremost among the younger generation of German women authors. It seems to me that, although her best-known work is written in a decidedly serious strain, revealing a general understanding of life's woe and tragedy, still her greatest artistic ability tends toward the humorous. She neither has Thackeray's satirical sting, nor do her characters remind us of Dickens's caricatures.

Hers is an original species of the comic which as yet has not entered literature, as far as I know. She treats her subjects in such a droll and simple manner, that her descriptions, mostly taken from every-day occurrences, possess the peculiar charm always found in works of genuine artists.

It would be very gratifying to me if I could induce some of your German reading subscribers to peruse some of her humorous novels. For this purpose I should propose the following works: "Ratsmädelgeschichten," "Neue Ratsmädelgeschichten," "Alt-Weimarische Ehestandsgeschichten," published in "Engelhorn's Roman Bibliothek; and "Des Bäckerlehrlings Johannisnacht," (the latter is a tragical story, but contains passages of delightful mirth.)

I do not know whether any of Frau Böhlau's novels have been translated into English, but I am quite sure that Americans would greatly enjoy their drollery (although of a typical German kind) just as Germans undoubtedly would appreciate the exquisitely comic American "David Harum." Yours very truly, HANS OTTO.

More Wit Than Humor Among Them.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

It is an axiom among men that women have no sense of humor. While I think women are not entirely destitute of humor, I do think they are more apt to be witty and sarcastic than humorous. There are men to whom life seems all a joke, but I never knew a woman of that description. One of the best jokes I ever heard was by a woman, who was perfectly unconscious of it. I never heard of any professional humorists among women. It is to be hoped if there are any they are something besides mere humorists. Think of a feminine Josh Billings, Petroleum V. Nasby, or Bill Nye! Oh, "Doctors Nausheatus."

ONE WOMAN.

New York, Jan. 22, 1900.

Several Modern Instances.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In a recent issue of THE SATURDAY REVIEW the statement was quoted that women were destitute of the sense of humor, and that you might search the annals of English literature in vain to find a single humorist of the gentler sex.

I beg leave to differ from your authority on this point. I shall only mention a few of the many instances that might be given, as you have requested that the replies should be brief.

Let us first take the greatest writer of fiction of her day, George Eliot. When shall we find a keener or more delicate sense of humor than is displayed in her portrayal of Mrs. Poyser, Lisbeth Bede, the Gleggs and Pullets, and the inimitable Garth family? Mrs. Poyser's sayings fairly sparkle with the brightest humor.

Then I would challenge your authority to produce a book that from beginning to end is more replete with quaint and delicious humor than Mrs. Gaskell's "Cranford." Who has not laughed over it, and yet felt at times the unbidden tears spring to his eyes at some sudden turn from mirth to pathos? And this, you remember, is Thackeray's definition of humor.

In our own day we have a host of women humorists, but I shall only make special mention of Kate Douglas Wiggin, Octave Thanet, and Ruth McEnery Stuart. I recommend your critic to read "Penelope's Progress," "The Missionary Sheriff," and "Moriah's Mornin' and Other Tales," and then to make an humble apology to the talented authoresses, who, endowed by nature with a rare gift of humor, are doing so much to brighten the literature of our own day. SALLIE McGAVOCK LACY.

Another Word for Samantha.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In your SATURDAY REVIEW of Jan. 20 some "literary persons" assert that "women are devoid of a sense of humor," also that "there are no women humorous writers." Is not "Samantha Allen" a humorous writer? MISS GRAY.

Aubrey Beardsley's Drawings.*

A. E. Gallatin, in an edition of one hundred beautifully printed copies, the work of the De Vinne Press, has compiled and published a list of Aubrey Beardsley's drawings, intended to supplement a list published by Leonard Smithers of London, in 1897, prepared by Mr. Vallance, and accompanying an album of Beardsley drawings. Miss Gallatin's list contains no items mentioned by Vallance, and has in addition an interesting and valuable supplementary list of articles on Breadsley and his work that have appeared in various periodicals, none already listed by Vallance being given, so that this little catalogue, in its pretty gray boards and paper label, will be found of much interest and service to the Beardsley collector.

To show the plan and thoroughness of the little list, extracts from the first item in the book—"A Second Book of Fifty Drawings; New York, John Lane; London, Leonard Smithers, 1899"—are here given. After a prefatory note of description, Miss Gallatin enumerates fifteen drawings in this album hitherto unpublished: "These fifteen drawings are in the possession of Mr. R. B. Ross, and reproduced by his permission. Several of these drawings are included in Mr. Vallance's item, 'scrap-book containing various early sketches, studies, &c., unpublished, property of R. B. Ross, Esq.' Then follow three photogravures—'Adoramus Te,' 'A Christmas Carol,' and 'A Head.' These drawings were made in 1892, and belong to the Rev. Alfred Gurney. Two drawings, 'Incipit Vita Nova,' and 'The Litany of Mary Magdalen,' done in 1892. Both by permission of Mr. More Adey. . . . 'La Dame aux Camélias,' a sketch in water colors, painted in 1897 on the flyleaf of a copy of 'La Dame aux Camélias' which was given to the artist by Alexandre Dumas, fils."

Miss Gallatin also enumerates several American books which contain Beardsley illustrations or reproductions such as "Posters in Miniature," New York, R. H. Russell, 1896, containing seven illustrations; "The Modern Poster," New York, Scribners, 1895, containing one Beardsley drawing, "La Dame aux Camélias"; "The Reign of the Poster," by C. R. Bolton, Boston, W. B. Jones, 1895, containing two Beardsley drawings; "The Land of Heart's Desire," by W. B. Yeats, Chicago, Stone & Kimball, 1897, in which the left-hand side of "The Avenue Theatre" poster, which is among the most successful things Beardsley ever did, is used as a frontispiece, this being one of the two plays for which the Avenue Theatre poster was originally made. In Mr. W. C. Whitehead's "List of Posters," privately printed, Cleveland, 1895, a number of Beardsley posters were catalogued.

Miss Gallatin's book also contains a descriptive list of articles on Beardsley, many of which were illustrated, in which case such drawings are also carefully listed. Many of these articles will be found of much interest to the ordinary reader, who simply desires a fuller knowledge both of Beardsley the man and of his work than he already possesses, the little list thus assuming considerable importance for reference purposes.

For instance, among those so listed will be found an illustrated article by the late Gleeson White, "Aubrey Beardsley: In Memoriam," which appeared in The International Studio for June, 1898. There are also listed three Book Buyer articles, one in the issue for February, 1895, an illustrated paper by Herbert Small, "No, Ten of Book Illustrators, Aubrey Beardsley"; and an illustrated article, October, 1898, by Penrhyn Stanslaw, "Some Personal Recollections of Aubrey Beardsley"; and in the issue for June, 1899, "The Memorial of Aubrey Beardsley," by W. S. M. The New York Tribune, Sept. 20, 1896, and Jan. 3, 1897, contained "Notes on Beardsley," while THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW, May 27, 1899, contained "A Review of the Early Work"; THE REVIEW containing through 1898-9 many "Notes" on Beardsley.

The above extracts have been given to show the thoroughness with which Miss Gallatin's work has been done bibliographically, and too much cannot be said for the artistic excellence of the catalogue as a whole.

The Tragedy in "Shirley."

The publication of "Shirley" last week in the Haworth Edition, issued by Harper & Brothers, recalls the circumstances, possibly unknown to the general reader, in which Charlotte Brontë wrote this novel. Miss Brontë, it may be recalled, only revealed her identity as the author of "Jane Eyre" when certain critics charged that in the character of Rochester she had satirized Thackeray. On her making the revelation to her publisher, Mr. Smith of Cornhill, London, she received an order to write another novel. She returned to Haworth and began "Shirley." She had completed a few chapters when her brother Bramwell, who, after having given some signs of literary genius in his youth, had become a drunkard and a victim of opium, died. Charlotte had scarcely recovered from this shock, when, on the 19th of December of the same year, (1848,) her sister Emily, the author of "Wuthering Heights," died from consumption, being nursed through her illness by Charlotte. During the Winter of 1848-9 the author of "Jane Eyre" sought to gain relief from her grief by devoting her entire time to the composition of "Shirley." The novel was almost completed when, on May 28, 1849, her younger sister Anne, author of "Agnes Grey," also died. It was under these painfully mournful conditions that "Shirley" gradually grew into being and was finished. It was impossible that the author should not be influenced in her work by her sad surroundings. The scenes in the sick-room of Caroline are a pathetic yet vivid reproduction of the emotions that stirred the author at this time.

BOOKS THAT ARE RARE.

What Makes Them So—Mr. Spofford's Excellent Account.

There is perhaps in kind of inquiry concerning literature in which so large an amount of actual misinformation or of ignorance exists as that of the rarity of many books. The makers of second-hand catalogues are responsible for much of this, in describing the books which they wish to sell as "rare," "very scarce," &c., but more of it proceeds from absolute ignorance of the book markets of the world. Most libraries have had multitudes of volumes offered for sale whose commercial value was hardly as many cents as was demanded in dollars by their ill-informed owners, who fancied the commonest book valuable because they "had never seen another copy." No one's ideas of the money value of any book are worth anything, unless he has had long experimental knowledge of the market for books both in America and Europe.

What constitutes rarity in books is a question that involves many particulars. Thus, a given book may be rare in the United States which is abundant in London, or rare in London when common enough in Germany. So books may be rare in one age which were easily found in another, and again, books on certain subjects may be so absorbed by public demand when events excite interest enough in that subject to take up most of the copies in market and enhance the price of the remainder. Thus, Napoleon's conquering career in Egypt created a great demand for all books on Egypt and Africa. The scheme for founding a great French colony in Louisiana raised the price of all books and pamphlets on that region, which soon after fell into the possession of the United States. President Lincoln's assassination caused a demand for all accounts of the murder of the heads of nations. Latterly, all books on Cuba, the West Indies, and the Philippines have been in unprecedented demand, and dealers have raised the prices, which will again decline after the recent public interest in them has been supplanted by future events.

There is a broad distinction to be drawn between books which are absolutely rare and those which are only relatively scarce, or which become temporarily rare, as just explained. Thus, a large share of the books published in the infancy of printing are rare; nearly all which appeared in the quarter century after printing began are very rare, and several among these last are superlatively rare. I may instance the Mazarin Bible of Gutenberg and Schoeffer, (about 1455,) of which only twenty-four copies are known, nearly all in public libraries, where they ought to be; the Mentz Psalter of the same printers, 1457, the first book ever printed with a date, and the first edition of Livy, Rome, (1469,) the only copy of which printed on vellum is in the British Museum Library.

One reason of the scarcity of books emanating from the presses of the fifteenth century is that of many of them the editions consisted of only 200 to 300 copies, of which the large number absorbed in public libraries or destroyed by use, fires, or decay, left very few in the hands of booksellers or private persons. Still it is a great mistake to infer that all books printed before A. D. 1500 are rare. The editions of many were large, especially after about 1480, many were reprinted in several editions, and of such incunabula copies can even now be picked up on the Continent at very low prices.

Contrary to a widespread belief, mere age adds very little to the value of any book, and ofttimes nothing at all. All librarians are pestered to buy "100-year-old" treatises on theology or philosophy, as dry as the Desert of Sahara, on the ground that they are both old and rare, whereas such books, 200 and even 300 years old, swarm in unsalable masses on the shelves of London and provincial booksellers at a few pence per volume. The reason that they are comparatively rare in this country is that nobody wants them, and so they do not get imported.

A rare book is, strictly speaking, only one which is found with difficulty, taking into view all the principal book markets of various countries. Very few books printed since 1650 have any particular value on account of their age. Of many books, both old and new, the reason of scarcity is that only a few copies actually remain, outside of public libraries, and these last, of course, are not for sale. This scarcity of copies is produced by a great variety of causes, most of which I shall note.

1. The small number of the books originally printed leads to rarity. This is by no means peculiar to early impressions of the press; on the contrary, of many of the books printed only last year not one-tenth as many exist as of a multitude of books printed four centuries ago. Not only privately printed books, not designed for publication, but some family or personal memoirs, or original works circulated only among friends, and many other publications belong to this class of rarities. The books printed at private presses are mostly rare. Horace Walpole's Strawberry Hill Press produced some thirty works from 1757 to 1789, in editions varying from 50 to 600 copies. The Lee Priory Press of Sir E. Brydges printed many literary curiosities, none of which had more than 100 impressions. Most of the editions of the Shakespearean and other critical essays of J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps were limited to forty copies, or even less. The genealogical and heraldic imprints of Sir Thomas Phillipps, at the Middle Hill Press, 1819-50, numbering some hundreds of different works, were mostly confined to twenty copies each, and some to only six copies. Some of them are as rare as many manuscripts, of which several copies have been made, and sell at prices dictated by their scarcity. Most of them are in the Library of Congress. The Kelmscott Press of William Morris printed in sumptuous style, improved upon the finest models of antique typography, a number of literary works, which now bring enhanced prices.

2. Even where many copies have been printed, the destruction of the greater part of the edition has rendered the book very [illegible] The great theological libraries edited by the Abbé J. P. Migne, the Patrologiæ Græcæ et Latinæ, owe their scarcity and advanced prices to a fire which consumed the entire remainder of the edition. All the copies of the first edition of "Twenty Years Among Our Savage Indians," by J. L. Humfreville, were destroyed by fire in a Hartford printing office in 1887, except two, which had been deposited in the Library of Congress to secure the copyright. The whole edition of the "Machina Coelestis" of Hevelius was burned, except the few copies which the author had presented to friends before the fire occurred. The earlier issues in Spanish of the Mexican and Peruvian presses prior to 1600 are exceedingly rare. And editions of books printed at places in the United States where no books are now published are sought for their imprint alone, and seldom found.

3. Many books have become rare because proscribed and in part destroyed by governmental or ecclesiastical authority. This applies more especially to the ages that succeeded the application of printing to the art of multiplying books. The freedom of many writers upon politics and popular rights led to the suppression of their books by Kings, Emperors, or Parliaments. At the same time, books of church history or doctrinal theology which departed, in however slight degree, from the standard of faith proclaimed by the Church, were put in the Index Expurgatorius, or list of works condemned in whole or in part as heretical and unlawful to be read. A long and melancholy record of such proscriptions, civil and ecclesiastical, is found in Gabriel Peignot's two volumes, Dictionnaire des livres condamnes au feu, supprimes ou censures, &c.

4. Another source of rarity is the great extent and cost of many works, outrunning the ability of most collectors to buy or to accommodate them on their shelves. These costly possessions have been commonly printed in limited numbers for subscribers or for distribution by Governments under whose patronage they were produced. Such are some of the notable collections of early voyages, the great folios of many illustrated scientific works on natural history, antiquities, local geography, &c. That great scholar, Baron von Humboldt, used jocosely to say that he could not afford to own a set of his own works, most of which are folios, sumptuously printed, with finely engraved illustrations. The collection known as the "Grands et Petits Voyages" of De Bry, the former in thirteen volumes, relating to America, and finely illustrated with copper plates produced in the highest style of that art, are among the rarest sets of books to find complete. The collection of voyages by Huisius is equally difficult to procure. A really perfect set of Piranesi's great illustrated work on the art and architecture of ancient Rome is very difficult to acquire. The Acta Sanctorum, in the original edition, is very seldom found. But there is no room to multiply examples.

5. What adds to the rarity and cost of certain books is the peculiarly expensive style or condition in which they are produced or preserved. Some few copies of an edition, for example, are printed on vellum, or on China or India or other choice paper, in colored ink or bronze, on colored paper, (rose-tinted or green, blue, or yellow,) on large paper, with broad margins, &c. Uncut copies always fetch a higher price than those whose edges are trimmed down in binding. To some book-collecting amateurs cut edges are an abomination. They will pay more for a book "in sheets," which they can bind after their own taste, than for the finest copy in calf or morocco with gilt edges. Some books, also, are exceptionally costly because bound in a style of superior elegance and beauty, or as having belonged to a crowned head or a noble person ("books with a pedigree") or an eminent author, or having autographs of notable characters on the fly leaves or title pages, or original letters inserted in the volume. Others still are "extra illustrated" works, in which one volume is swelled to several by the insertion of a multitude of portraits, autographs, and engravings, more or less illustrative of the contents of the book.

6. The books emanating from the presses of famous printers are more sought for by collectors and libraries than other publications, because of their superior excellence. Sometimes this is found in the beauty of the type or the clear and elegant presswork; sometimes in the printers' marks, monograms, engraved initial letters, head and tail pieces, or other illustrations, and sometimes in the fine quality of the choice paper on which the books are printed. Thus the productions of the presses of Aldus, Giunta, Bodoni, Estienne, Elzevir, Froben, Gutenberg, Fust and Schoeffer, Plantin, Caxton, Wynkyn de Worde, Bulmer, Didot, Baskerville, Pickering, Whittingham, and others, are always in demand, and some of the choicer specimens of their art, if in fine condition, bring great prices in the second-hand bookshops or the auction room. An example of Caxton's press is now almost unattainable, except in fragmentary copies. There are known to be only about 560 examples of Caxtons in the world, four-fifths of which are in England, and thirty-one of these are unique. His "King Arthur" (1485) brought £1,950 at auction in 1885, and the Polychronicon (1482) was sold at the Ives sale (New York) in 1891 for $1,500.

---

7. In the case of all finely illustrated works, the earlier impressions taken, both of text and plates, are more rare, and hence more valuable, than the bulk of the edition. Thus, copies with "proofs before letters" of the steel engravings or etchings, sometimes command more than double the price of copies having only the ordinary plates. Each added impression deteriorates a little from the sharp, clear outlines and brilliant impressions which are peculiar to the first copies printed.

---

8. Of some books certain volumes only are rare, and very costly in consequence. Thus, Burk's "History of Virginia" is common enough in three volumes, but Vol. IV. of the set, by Jones and Girardin, (1816,) [illegible] Two with said last volume of Burk's "History of Virginia" is very scarce, while the others are readily procured. Of De Bry's Voyages the thirteenth and last part of the American voyages is so rare as to be quite unattainable, unless after long years of search and at an unconscionable price for an imperfect copy.

---

9. The condition of any book is an unfailing factor in its price. Many, if not most, books offered by second-hand dealers, or at auction, are shop worn, soiled, or with broken bindings, or some other defect. A pure, clean copy, in handsome condition without and within, commands invariably an extra price. Thus the noted "Nuremberg Chronicle" of 1493, a huge, portly folio, with 2,250 woodcuts in the text, many of them by Albert Dürer or other early artists, is priced in London catalogues all the way from £7 15s. up to £35 for identically the same edition. The difference is dependent wholly on the condition of the copies offered.

---

10. The first editions printed of many books always command high prices. Not only is this true of the editio princeps of Homer, Virgil, Tacitus, and other Greek and Roman writers, published in the infancy of printing, but of every noted author of ancient or modern date. The edition printed during the life of the writer has had his own oversight and correction. And when more than one issue of his book has thus appeared, one sees how his maturer judgment may have altered the substance or the style of his work. First editions of any very successful work always tend to become scarce, since the number printed is smaller, as a rule, and a large part of the issue is absorbed by public libraries. The earliest published writings of Tennyson, now found with difficulty, show how much of emendation and omission this great poet thought proper to make in his poems in after years. A first edition of "Ivanhoe," in three volumes, 1820, brings £7 or more in the original boards, but if rebound in any style, the first Waverley novels can be had at much less, though collectors are many.

11. Another class of rare books is found in many local histories, both among the county histories of Great Britain and those of towns and counties in the United States. Jay Gould's history of Delaware County, New York, published in 1856, and sought after in later times because of his note as a financier, is seldom found. Of family genealogies, too, printed in small editions, there are many which cannot be had at all, and many more which have risen to double or even quadruple price. The market value of these books, always dependent on demand, is enhanced by the wants of public libraries, which are making or completing collections of these much sought sources of information.

12. There is a large variety of books that are sought mainly on account, not of their authors, nor for their value as literature, but for their illustrations. Many eminent artists (in fact, most of those of any period) have made designs for certain books of their day. The reputation of an artist sometimes rests more upon his work given to the public in engravings, etchings, wood cuts, &c., that illustrate books, than upon his works on canvas or in marble. Many finely illustrated works bear prices enhanced by the eagerness of collectors who are bent upon possessing the designs of some favorite artist, while some amateurs covet a collection of far wider scope. This demand, although fitful, and sometimes evanescent, (though more frequently recurrent,) lessens the supply of illustrated books, and with the constant draughts of new libraries, raises prices. Turner's exquisite pictures in Roger's "Italy" and "Poems" (1830-34) have floated into fame books of verse which find very few readers. Hablot K. Browne ("Phiz") designed those immortal Wellers in "Pickwick" which have delighted and amused two whole generations of readers. The "Cruikshankiana" are sought with avidity, in whatever numerous volumes they adorn.

Finally, that extensive class of books known as early Americana have been steadily growing rarer, and rising in commercial value, since about the middle of the nineteenth century. Books and pamphlets relating to any part of the American continent or islands, the first voyages, discoveries, narratives, or histories of those regions which were hardly noted or cared for a century ago, are now eagerly sought by collectors for libraries, both public and private. In this field the keen competition of American historical societies, and of several great libraries, besides the ever-increasing number of private collectors with large means, has notably enhanced the prices of all desirable and rare books. Nor do the many reprints which have appeared at all affect the market value of the originals, or first editions.

The rise in prices, while far from uniform, and furnishing many examples of isolated extravagance, has been marked. Witness some examples: The "Bay Psalm Book," Cambridge, Mass., A. D. 1640, is the Caxton of New England, so rare that no perfect copy has been found for many years. In 1855 Henry Stevens had the singular good fortune to find this typographical gem sandwiched in an odd bundle of old hymn books, unknown to the auctioneers or the catalogue, at a London book sale. Keeping his own counsel, he bid off the lot at 9 shillings, completed an imperfection in the book, had it bound in Bedford's best, and sold it to Mr. Lenox's library at £90. In 1868 Stevens sold another copy to George Brinley for 150 guineas, which was bought for $1,200 in 1878 by C. Vanderbilt at the Brinley sale.

The numerous and now rare works of Increase and Cotton Mather, printed from 1667 to 1728, though mostly sermons, are collected by a sufficient number of libraries to maintain prices at from $4 to $25 each, according to condition. They number over 470 different volumes.

Several collections have been attempted of Frankliniana, or works printed at Benjamin Franklin's press, and of the many editions of his writings, with all books concerning the illustrious printer-statesman of America. His "Poor Richard's Almanacs," printed by him from 1733 to 1758, and by successors, to 1796, are so rare that Mr. P. L. Ford found a visit to three cities requisite to see all of them. The Library of Congress possesses thirty-eight years of these issues.

Of notable auction sales of books, and of the extravagant prices obtained for certain editions by ambitious and eager competitors, there is ample room to treat. The oft-told story of the Valdarfer Boccaccio of 1471, carried off at the Roxburghe sale in 1812, at £2,260 from Earl Spencer by the Marquis of Blandford, and repurchased seven years after at another auction for £918, has been far surpassed in modern bibliomania. "The sound of that hammer," wrote the melodramatic Dibdin, "echoed through Europe"! But what would he have said of the Mazarin Bible of Gutenberg and Füst (1450-55) sold in 1807, at the Ashburnham sale, for £4,000, or of the Latin Psalter of Füst and Schoeffer, second edition, 1459, which brought £4,950 at the Syston Park sale in 1884? This last sum (nearly $24,000) is the largest price ever yet recorded as received for a single volume. Among books of less rarity, though always eagerly sought, is the first folio of Shakespeare of 1623, a very fine and perfect copy of which brought £716 2s. at Daniel's sale in 1864. Copies warranted perfect have since been sold in London for £415 to £470. In New York a perfect but not "tall" copy brought $4,200 in 1891 at auction. The copy in the Library of Congress, which is "letter perfect," though the title is mounted, cost £310 at a London sale (twenty years ago. Walton's "Compleat Angler," London, first edition, 1653, a little book of only 250 pages, sold for £310 in 1891. It was published for 1s. 6d. The first edition of "Robinson Crusoe" brought £75 at the Crampton sale in 1896.

The rage for first editions of very modern books reached what might be called high-water mark some time since, and has been on the decline. In New York some first editions of Shelley's poems brought enormous prices in 1897. Shelley's "Adonais," first edition, Pisa, Italy, 1821, $335; "Alastor," London, 1816, $130. But these were purely adventitious prices, as was clearly shown in the sale at the same auction rooms a year or two earlier of Shelley's "Adonais," first edition, Pisa, 1821, $10, as against $335; "Alastor," London, 1816, $32.

The sales occasionally made at auction of certain books at extraordinary prices prove nothing whatever as to the real market value, for these reasons: (1) The auctioneer often has an unlimited bid, and the price is carried up to an inordinate height; (2) Two or more bidders present, infatuated by the idea of extreme rarity, bid against one another until all but one succumb, when the price has reached a figure which it is a mild use of terms to call preposterous; (3) Descriptions in sale catalogues, though often entirely unfounded, characterizing a book as "excessively rare," "only four copies known," "never before offered at our sales," &c., may carry the bidding on a book up to an unheard-of price.

Of some scarce books it may be said that they are as rare as the individuals who want them; and of a very few, that they are as rare as the extinct dodo. In fact, volumes have been written concerning extinct books, not without interest to the bibliomaniac who is fired with the passion for possessing something which no one else has. Some books are quite as worthless as they are rare. But books deemed worthless by the common or even by the enlightened mind are cherished as treasures by many collectors. The "Pastisser Français," an Elzevir of 1655, is so rare as to have brought several times its weight in gold. Nearly all the copies of some books have been worn to rags by anglers, devout women, cooks, or children.

When a book is sold at a great price as "very rare," it often happens that several copies come into the market, and there being no demand, the commercial value is correspondingly depressed. The books most sure of maintaining full prices are first editions of masterpieces in literature. Fitz Gerald's version of "Omar Khayyam" was bought by nobody when Quaritch first published it in 1859. After eight years he put the remainder of the edition—a paper-covered volume—down to a penny each. When the book had grown into fame, and the many variations in later issues were discovered, this first edition, no longer procurable, rose to £21, the price actually paid by Mr. Quaritch himself at a book auction in 1893.

The passion for rare books, merely because of their rarity, is a low order of the taste for books. But the desire to possess and read wise old books which have been touched by the hoar frost of time is of a higher mood. The first impression of "Paradise Lost," (1667,) with its quarto page and antique orthography, is it not more redolent of the author's age than the elegant Pickering edition or the one illustrated by John Martin or Gustave Doré? When you hold in your hand Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," (A. D. 1600,) and read with fresh admiration and delight the exquisite speeches of Oberon and Titania, may not the thought that perhaps that very copy may once have been held in the immortal bard's own hand send a thrill through you own?

The genuine book lover is he who reads books; who values them for what they contain, not for their rarity, nor for the preposterous prices which have been paid for them. To him book hunting is an ever-enduring delight. Of all the pleasures tasted here below that of the book lover in finding a precious and long-sought volume is one of the purest and most innocent. In books he becomes master of all the kingdoms of the world.

The Doubleday & McClure Company has received from England a striking photograph of Sir Philip Burne-Jones's picture of "Rudyard Kipling in His Workshop," painted last Autumn at the poet's place in Rothingdean, near Brighton. Sir Philip, it will be recalled, painted "The Vampire," concerning which Kipling wrote some curious verses. In the picture recently completed, Mr. Kipling is represented seated at his writing table—an ironing board resting upon a couple of carpenter benches—while within easy reach lie his pipe, books, and other lares and penates.

LONDON LITERARY LETTER.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW by William L. Alden.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—In the recent history of Punch, that was published in Literature, a list is given of the various rivals to Punch which have appeared in London from time to time. It is certainly a curious thing that Englishmen seem unable to support more than one paper of the character of Punch. Several of the rivals of Punch have been quite as good in all respects as Punch itself, but nearly all of them have either died at a very early age, or have lingered on for a few years, and then died of gradually falling circulation. Fun and, I think, Judy are still alive, and doubtless have sufficient circulation to make it worth while to publish them, but although they occasionally contain good cartoons, they can hardly be classed as rivals to Punch, whatever they may have been in their early youth. One would fancy that in a city like London—to say nothing of the provinces—there would be enough people capable of appreciating the sort of humor which Punch supplies to support half a dozen papers of the same type, but it is plain that there is not the requisite supply of such people. This seems to show that the Englishman is as the Frenchman imagines him, a grim melancholy person, who only smiles when he beats his wife.

On the other hand, there is a swarm of professedly comic papers, some of which make fortunes for their owners. Nearly twenty years ago Mr. James Mortimer, in his weekly paper called Figaro, invented a bottle-nosed drunken Londoner, whom he named Ally Sloper, and who was every week represented as getting himself into difficulties, chiefly through too much drink. Ally Sloper became such a favorite among the class which has never heard of Meredith or Stevenson that a comic illustrated paper called Ally Sloper's Half-Holiday was started, part of which is every week devoted to chronicling the deeds of the bottle-nosed drunkard. There is not a gleam of humor rightly so-called in the paper, but it has an enormous sale, and now owns a large building, which it calls with its peculiar humor, "The Sloperies." This is but one of the alleged comic illustrated papers which flourish in London, and its success shows that the Londoner is extremely fond of what he conceives to be humor.

Just at present the sort of person who takes in Ally Sloper's Half Holiday remarks a dozen times a day, "Wot ho! She bumps!" This is regarded as killingly funny. No one attaches the slightest meaning to the phrase, but the Sloperian public has decided that it is wonderfully humorous, and extracts vast delight from it. Some years ago a similar wild delight was achieved by asking the casual stranger in the street, "How's your poor feet"? London is never without some variety of this especial form of humor, and it evokes floods of laughter in the course of the year. Apparently the Londoner who delights in this sort of joke accepts as humor whatever is put up by the publishers and labeled "funny." Punch does not seem to him to be humorous because it does not deal with drunkenness and assault and battery and the other delights to which the Sloperian papers have accustomed him. If it is strange that London cannot support but one Punch, it is infinitely stranger that it can, and does, support a dozen papers in which humor consists in drawing a man with a big nose, or in the repetition of such witticisms as "Wot ho! She bumps." There is no use in trying to solve the mystery of the existence of this state of things. It is a mystery, and an unfathomable one. It shows on the one hand an inextinguishable thirst for humor, and on the other a general incapacity to distinguish humor from the dullest idiocy.

There is, moreover, a third class of people who care very little for Punch and never dream of looking at Ally Sloper, but, nevertheless, read with eagerness such humorous books as Mr. Jerome's "Three Men in a Boat." These people know and can appreciate genuine humor, but it must be of a certain pattern. They probably would fail to see any humor whatever in Stevenson's letters, and to them the humor of Mr. Birrell is incomprehensible. From all of which there may perhaps be a moral to be drawn, though I confess that I do not know what it is.

Certain people who vainly imagine themselves to be capable of understanding Stevenson are constantly writing to the daily papers, insisting that now that Samoa is a German possession, Stevenson's remains should be exhumed and brought to Scotland. It is true that Stevenson was indignant at some of the acts of some of the German representatives in Samoa, although on the other hand he recognized the honesty and honorable character of other German representatives. But he is now under the stern indignation against German stupidity no longer tears his soul. He chose to be buried at Samoa, and of all places on this earth it was the fittest for the purpose. The island where he lies will be his monument forever, and the vast Pacific his cemetery. To take his ashes from Samoa and shut them up in a narrow Scottish tomb would be an injustice to his free spirit. No one can read his letters without comprehending how essentially lonely that lofty and gentle soul was doomed to be. Alone and high is his tomb on the Samoan mountain, and it typifies the man. Let us have a monument to him in his own Edinburgh, and a bust in the Abbey, but let him rest in the place which was his choice. As for the argument that his bones must be taken out of the political jurisdiction of Germany, that is the rankest nonsense. What has he now to do with national divisions and quarrels? He is at home. Is it not written on his tomb that the sailor is home from the sea, and the hunter home from the hill? To disturb him now and bring his bones to Scotland would be at least as sacrilegious as it would be to disturb the bones of Shakespeare and bring them to London to be buried in the Abbey with a brand new monument by the worst sculptor in London.

I had known that a translation of Turgenieff by Mrs. Edward Garnett was in process of publication, but it was not until to-day that I noticed that it had been completed, and that now, for the first time, a complete edition of the great novelist's works is accessible in English. I am in hopes that there will be a revival of interest in the great Russian's works. Of late years he has been obscured by Tolstoi, although the two men are so essentially different that one ought not in any way to interfere with the other. Turgenieff was a novelist, while Tolstoi is simply a preacher who illustrates his sermons with vivid pictures. Compare "Smoke" with "Peace and War." Certainly there are magnificent pages in the latter, but is it in any sense a novel? Does one person in twenty who reads through its ponderous volumes ever succeed in keeping the characters separate in his mind, or in comprehending what the plot of the book is? Whereas "Smoke" is artistically perfect. Every man and woman in it is alive, and they live out the episode which Turgenieff selected in the only way that it could possibly be lived. Very possibly Tolstoi is the greater genius of the two, though I have never been able to see the proof of it, but it seems to be incontestable that Turgenieff is far and away the greater novelist.

We have been told so often of late years that Tolstoi is the greatest of all Russian novelists that we have almost forgotten the name of Turgenieff, or, if we have remembered it, we have classed it with the other second rate Russians. I have loved Turgenieff—the author, not the man—for years, and I earnestly hope that now that he can be read in Mrs. Garnett's admirable translation, he will gain his right place in the affections of the English-speaking public. I should not know which to select as the greatest of his books. They should all be read, and the man who wants to make the best possible addition to his library of fiction should add to it this edition of Turgenieff without a moment's hesitation.

Has Frank Norris's "McTeague" been published in America yet? It is a most unpleasant book, but it is a real book. The author has genuine power, and when he uses it in a less unpleasant way he will assuredly come to his own. In some respects it is the most powerful novel of the year, though it has other faults than that of dealing with an unpleasant subject. There is a future for Mr. Norris if he will only consent to write more for the public and less for himself.

A book that ought to be in every household is Mrs. Janet Ross's "Leaves from My Tuscan Kitchen; or How to Cook Vegetables." I do not exactly remember ever to have seen a Tuscan or any other kitchen that had leaves, but, then, I am not very familiar with kitchens. Mrs. Ross has lived for many years in Florence, and has learned all the secrets of Italian cookery. The Italian particularly excels in cooking vegetables, and Mrs. Ross has collected no less than 250 receipts for this purpose. To the Anglo-Saxon, whose idea of cooking vegetables consists either in boiling or in roasting them, this book ought to be a revelation of the possibilities of cookery. The Italian cook can make a dozen different dishes from the same vegetable, every one of which will be palatable, and will differ entirely from the other ways of cooking it. The Anglo-Saxon, with plain boiled, roasted, or fried potatoes, will be amazed to learn of the possibilities that potatoes develop in the hands of the Italian cook. Mrs. Ross, however, seems to forget that many delicious Italian vegetables are practicably unattainable in England. For example, the artichoke of the British islands bears about the same relation to the Italian artichoke that the horse chestnut bears to the genuine chestnut. To know all the possibilities of vegetables one needs not only an Italian cook, but also Italian vegetables.

The Argosy Magazine, which has lived on the memory of Mrs. Henry Wood and her posthumous manuscripts for several years, has changed hands, and a new editor is about to try the task of rehabilitating it. It is a curious delusion that a magazine which has ceased to pay offers more promise to a proprietor than an entirely new magazine would offer. I do not mean to say that The Argosy does not pay, for I know nothing of its financial position, but if the new proprietor intends to make it the efficient rival of the other magazines he will have a more difficult task than would have been his if he had started an entirely new magazine. RUSKIN'S PRAISES OF BOOKS.

In all estimates of the life work of John Ruskin particular emphasis must be laid upon a side of his character perhaps not generally recognised—his great influence for good as regards the value and importance of books and reading, which was not at all his life work, which lay in the direction of art, architecture, and kindred subjects. Ruskin never allowed any opportunity to pass by when he reasonably could either speak or write in praise of books or reading. His utterances in this direction were so forcibly put, so clearly stated as well as so widely diffused, that they undoubtedly carried much more than ordinary weight, and are probably more widely known than those of any other writer on bookish subjects.

Leaving entirely out of the question the lasting importance of Ruskin's position as an art critic and writer on art, there can be no question as to the value and interest of his ideas on the position books should assume in men's lives, and the proper spirit in which they are to be approached It is of course quite unnecessary to say that a certain unusualness in the way in which such opinions are stated makes Mr. Ruskin's obiter dicta all the more impressive and likely to be the longer remembered. Then, too, Ruskin had entirely the courage of his opinions and never hesitated in making a strong point from any fear of hurting or offending his auditors.

In one of his lectures about "books, and about the way we read them, and could or should read them," one of the first points Ruskin makes is an extremely important one. He states that he has received many letters from parents as to the proper education of their children, in which the main question set forth was how best to obtain "the education befitting such and such a station in life," in short that the education oftenest asked for is the one likely to lead to "advancement in life." He adds:

> It never seems to occur to the parents that there may be an education which, in itself, is advancement in life, * * * and that this essential education might be more easily got, or given, than they fancy, if they set about it in the right way; while it is for no price, and by no favor, to be got, if they set about it in the wrong

To explain and illustrate exactly what such right way is seems to be the idea underlying all of Ruskin's many utterances regarding books and reading. And it will, perhaps, never be known how great an inspiration many of his words on this subject have been to young readers. Ruskin points out first how difficult it often is to choose our friends in the flesh as we would like to do, and how entirely such companionship is limited by our environment and circumstances, including lack of time, and perhaps as well the ability to make ourselves interesting to those whose companionship we would choose; for even more than lack of money and other temporal conditions will the lack of these qualifications be found to exert an influence upon our friendships. But Ruskin reminds us that the best society is continually open to us:

> People who will talk to us as long as we like; * * * talk to us in the best words they can choose, * * * and this society, because it is so gentle and so numerous, * * * Kings and statesmen lingering patiently in those plainly furnished and narrow ante-rooms, our bookcase shelves—we make no account of their company. * * * You may tell me, perhaps, that the apathy with which we regard this company of the noble, * * * is that we can see the faces of the living men, and it is themselves and not their sayings with which we desire to become familiar. * * * Suppose you could be put behind a screen in the stateman's cabinet, or the Prince's chamber, would you not be glad to listen to their words, though you were forbidden to advance beyond the screen? And when the screen is only a little less folded in two, instead of four, and you can be hidden behind the cover of the two boards that bind a book, and listen all day long, not to the casual talk, but to the studied, determined, chosen addresses of the wisest of

Mr. Ruskin, in the best and clearest fashion, points out the difference between the book of the hour and the book for all time, defining also the good and bad books of both classes. A volume may be very bright and interesting—the last book of travels, or a discussion of some question of the day, or even the last good novel may all be quite well worth reading, and properly to be classed among the good books of the hour—but the book for all time is the one written because the author had something to say of lasting importance, and which he sets forth to the best of his ability. The great book, as Ruskin says, is considered by its author as:

> "The best of me—for the rest, I ate and drank, and slept—loved and hated—like another; * * * but this I saw and knew; this, if anything of mine, is worth your memory!" That is his writing; it is, in his small human way, and with whatever degree of true inspiration is in him, his inscription, or Scripture—that is a "book."

Another valuable feature of Mr. Ruskin's teaching about literature is the importance he attaches to the fact that upon ourselves personally depends the position we take toward books and reading. In such measure as we devote ourselves to the best literature will come our reward. That reading must be done in the proper spirit—reverently, earnestly, and with the hope and expectation of mental gain—is self-evident, and to get the most out of a book it must be approached in the right way. We must enter into its author's thoughts, who must of necessity be wiser than we, else why read the book at all? Ruskin reminds us that it is possible, where sufficient time can be found, to read through all the books in a great library, and still remain utterly illiterate and uneducated:

> A well-educated gentleman may not know many languages; may not be able to speak any but his own; may have read very few books. But whatever language he knows, he knows precisely; whatever word he pronounces, he pronounces rightly; above all, he is learned in the Peerage of words; knows the words of true descent and ancient blood at a glance from words of modern canaille; remembers all their ancestry, their intermarriages, distantest relationships, and the extent to which they were admitted, and offices they hold among the national noblesse of words, at any time and in any country.

Again Ruskin reminds us that no book is worth all it might be to us until it has been read and reread so many times that it comes almost to form part of our very natures, and becomes so intimately known to us that we can lay our hands at need upon any favorite passage, reminding us, too, that the very cheapness of books is making many of us forget that if a volume is worth reading, especially more than once, it is quite well worth buying. Mr. Ruskin also draws an interesting parallel between the sums spent annually for horses, for luxurious eating, for wine, for luxuries of all sorts; men even ruining themselves over horses or kindred sports, but never for books.

> Bread of flour is good, but there is bread sweet as honey if we would eat it, in a good book, and the family must be poor indeed which once in their lives cannot, for such multipliable barley loaves, pay their baker's bill. We call ourselves a rich nation, and we are filthy and foolish enough to thumb each other's books out of circulating libraries.

We all know how, even at the present day, this statement is only too true. How many people do we all number among our friends who with good or even large incomes cannot afford to buy books. Even when fond of reading, they so often depend upon chance loans from friends or from libraries, and upon other accidental gettings hold of the books they wish to read; thinking they have been unduly extravagant if a dozen new volumes are added to their shelves by purchase yearly. And yet these very people will give you a good dinner amid luxurious surroundings without any question of expense entering their minds.

Ruskin points out some of the many privileges pertaining to a love for books—the aristocracy of letters being open to labor and merit and to nothing else. The books of the past, as of the present, have been written by the greatest men of the age; great leaders, great statesmen, great thinkers. He sums up the whole situation clearly and forcibly as follows:

> These books are all at your choice, and life is short—you have heard as much before. Yet have you measured and mapped out this short life and its possibilities? Do you know if you read this

> This eternal court is open to you, with its society wide as the world, multitudinous as its days, the chosen and the mighty of every place and time? Into that you may enter always; in that you may take fellowship and rank according to your wish; from that, once entered into it, you can never be outcast but by your own fault; by your aristocracy of companionship there your own inherent aristocracy will be assuredly tested, and the motives with which you strive to take high place in the society of the living, measured as to all the truth and sincerity that are in them, by the place you desire to take in this company of the dead.

RUSKIN AND BLACKMORE.

The passing of Ruskin and Blackmore, so near together in point of time, of the same generation and the same race, suggests a study of the sharp contrast that their attitude toward life exhibits.

Ruskin's was the more subtle intelligence, to whom life appeared always as a province in the domain of art. He saw the world as no other man perhaps has seen it, but it was the world of cathedral lights and solemn and stately presences discerned through mullioned windows, in the iridescent hues that his soul loved.

It was the majesty of a fresco, the contour of an arch, the color of an altar piece that led his mind into regions of sublime thought and gave it its chief delight. The cedars of an Alpine crag were to him the candles flaming upward from the sconces of an altar, and the curling reek from a cottager's chimney ascended through the treetops like incense among the ranks of acolytes.

Not that he used always churchly imagery or forced a sacred symbolism upon his subject, but there was that unfailing suggestion of organ music and rolling paternosters and moving antiphonies, whether he discoursed of the dust or lighted the flame of his inspiration by the lamps of an ancient architecture.

Remember how his love for all that was stately and worshipful and suggestive of exalted thoughts carried its corrollary of loathing for what was low and base. Read, as you read years ago, his brave reproach of sordidness, in "Sesame and Lilies," and the ringing sentences that introduce a picture—a poet's picture—of:

> That mighty granite arch, beyond the moors of Anglesea, splendid in its heathery crest and foot planted in the deep sea, once thought of as sacred—a divine promontory, looking westward; the holyhead, or headland, still not without awe when its red light gleams first through storm. These are the hills and these the bays and blue inlets which, among the Greeks, would have been always loved, always fateful in influence on the national mind. That Snowdon is your Parnassus, but where are its muses? That Holyhead mountain is your Island of Aegina, but where is its temple to Minerva? * * * O ye women of England, from the Princess of that Wales to the simplest among you, do not think your own children can be brought into their true fold of rest while these (of the region of Holyhead) are scattered on the hills as sheep having no shepherd. * * * You cannot baptize them rightly in those inch-deep fonts of yours unless you baptize them also in the sweet waters which the great Lawgiver strikes forth forever from the rocks of your native land—waters which a pagan would have worshipped in their purity and you only worship in pollution. You cannot lead your children faithfully to these narrow axe-hewn altars of yours while the dark azure of altars in heaven, the mountains that sustain your island home—mountains on which the pagan world would have seen the powers of heaven rest in every wreathed cloud—remain for you without inscription, altars built not to, but by, an unknown God.

The keynote of Ruskin's life and work was in that: his love for the pure, the ideal, the unworldly, and his bitter hatred of whatever appeared sordid.

His most famous and forcible utterances were perhaps his gospels according to Giotto or Angelo and his revelation of Turner. Mere realism, mere naturalness, were to him mere worthlessness. Behind everything he must see its meaning, its soul. If there was not one at hand to fit he created it from his imagination, and it breathed and lived thereafter, immortal.

Twenty years ago the death of John Ruskin would have created consternation and grief among his worshippers. To-day the sensation is much less marked, but his influence is still a living one. Even in the obscurity of retirement his eclipse displayed the penumbra of a great light, and if his influence waned when his pen was laid down it did not disappear, but will be revived again as surely as beauty and truth are immortal.

It is as a word painter that we may contrast the author of "Modern Painters" with the author of "Lorna Doone"; this and the fact that they may almost Ruskin's Titles to Remembrance.

Which is sadder, the sudden passing of the full-blown rose, whose velvet petals fall, still clothed with color and laden with perfume, or the slow death of the goldenrod, lingering weary weeks upon its stalk, the stiff, gray ghost of its former sunclad self?

As it steals upon the goldenrod, so death has come to some of the great ones of the world. Form has survived color, and a cold silence muffled the prelude to eternity. Such has been the passing of Ruskin, art critic, reformer, and man. For he was one whose last years were wrapped in stillness, so that, on our side of the deep, many would need to think twice, during the last few years, to assure themselves that the author still held any carnal title in the "pale glimpses of the moon." It is perhaps because his title to remembrance was at any time so little carnal that the sense of his bodily presence or absence was lost or merged in the more vivid consciousness of his spirit still abiding with us, clothed in the mundane immortality of type.

Of the various manifestations of that spirit, this paper can give but a brief and faulty survey. For it would require a regiment of reviewers to make anything like an accurate estimate of the intellectual and moral dimensions of a man like Ruskin, who, in his capacity of art critic, or rhetorician, was always, in an interlinear way, a moralist and reformer. Perhaps no man who, like Ruskin, has felt an ecclesiastical clutch at his sleeve, can ever get entirely over a clerical bend of the elbow. Whatever his line of activity, the air of the pulpit hangs round him still. This fact has accounted for much of the adverse criticism on Ruskin's works on art. To him art was good or bad according as it produced certain emotional or moral effects. Naturally such a theory would find little favor with those whose shibboleth is "art for art's sake." A sentence from "Modern Painters" will give Ruskin's idea of the true purpose of art: "That which ought to have been a witness to the omnipotence of God has become an exhibition of the dexterity of man, and that which should have lifted our thoughts to the throne of the Deity has encumbered them with the inventions of His creatures."

While it may be possible that Ruskin is justified in expecting a "moral end" and a "permanent good" from a landscape painting, it is an attitude that will always be opposed by those who like to see the lilies arrayed in all their glory, but resent the notion of making them toil and spin in the cause of morality. If it is a sense of the omnipotence of God that Ruskin would have impressed upon the world, why should it not be gained directly from nature herself. If there is anywhere any intelligent human being who could not get such a message from the myriad of miracles by which he is surrounded, he certainly would not be likely to get it from such a tiny, imperfect copy of one of nature's infinitesimal parts as any man could put on canvas.

It is sometimes difficult to determine how much of Ruskin's vehemence in bestowing praise or blame was due to an enthusiastic temperament and how much to a natural incisiveness of diction and an overflowing vocabulary. Speaking of a critic in Blackwood's Magazine, Ruskin remarked that "writers like him deserved the respect due to honest, hopeless, helpless imbecility." The same amount of arduous feeling welling up in the bosom of a man devoid of oratorical gifts might have passed off in a comparatively mild and impotent sputter of words. Any one who will carefully note the different expressions used by his friends and acquaintances when their emotional mercury is in the nineties will perceive that it is the man with incisive rhetorical gifts who makes the deepest gashes, though his temperature may be no higher and his moral attitude no more reprehensible than that of another who has at his command fewer choice pungent and assorted adjectives. The latter may use just as much muscle in delivering his blow, but his battleaxe will not cut if it has no edge.

But the enthusiastic tone of Ruskin's praise was as objectionable in certain quarters as his censure in others. The world has for so long practiced the obituary method of appreciation that it feels a slight sense of impropriety and insecurity in any contemporary plaudits. Wait till he is well dead and four or five decades of daisies have bloomed over him, says the world; then, if there is any virtue in his works we will tag and label them and confer immortality upon him. In open defiance of such precedents, Ruskin boldly came forth and dared to be enthusiastic about an artist upon whom the world had at that time bestowed hardly any distinguishing tags and labels. For ten long years Ruskin continued to proclaim the laws of light and shade and justify the ways of Turner's art. In his fifty-first year, looking back at his undaunted efforts in that artist's behalf, Ruskin made the pathetic confession that those ten years were lost so far as their chief purpose was concerned, and a similar avowal was made concerning his researches in the byways of architecture.

So after innumerable discouragements Ruskin reached the stage where men sigh and quote Pope, especially the lines

> One pleasure past, another still we gain,
> And not a vanity is given in vain.

Ruskin learned that the power of appreciation cannot be transferred to the masses. He had also made some valuable, but painful discoveries concerning some of his earlier work, which he frankly imparts to his readers in the preface to "Sesame and Lilies." He acknowledged that some of his criticisms were "disfigured by affected language, partly through the desire to be thought a fine writer and partly in the notion of returning to the better style of old English literature." Page after page of what he himself has called "fine writing" may be found in "Modern Painters," but one sentence or two will serve as an illustration:

> Between these two ridges the fire of the sunset falls along the trough of the sea, dyeing it with an awful but glorious light, the intense and lurid splendor of which burns like gold and bathes like blood. Purple and blue, the lurid shadows of the hollow breakers are cast on the mist of the night, which gathers cold and low, advancing like the shadow of death upon the guilty ship as it labors amidst the lightning of the sea, its thin masts written upon the sky in lines of blood, girded with condemnation in that fearful hue which signs the sky with horror, and mixes its flaming flood with the sunlight, and, cast far along the desolate heave of the sepulchral waves, incarnadines the multitudinous sea.

This description, and many others like it, were rhetorical color conflagrations, in their effect very much like Turner's blazing landscapes. Whether nature would recognize her own portrait in either case, or whether she could ever materialize in all its luxuriance one of Ruskin's verbal landscapes, is still a matter of doubt with many.

But it would be ungracious, as well as unnecessary, to dwell upon such features of Ruskin's work. In pleading guilty to the charge of "fine writing," Ruskin made further criticism unnecessary, and left to others the more grateful task of appreciating the wondrous beauty and sublimity that have made his works classic. Though it is now read on a well-thumbed page, will the following paragraph ever cease to delight us? "Who saw the narrow sunbeam that came out of the south and smote upon their summits until they melted and mouldered away in a dust of blue rain? Who saw the dance of the dead clouds when the sunlight left them last night, and the west wind blew them before it like withered leaves? All has passed, unregretted as unseen; or if the apathy be ever shaken off, even for an instant, it is only by what is gross or what is extraordinary; and yet it is not in the broad and fierce manifestations of the elemental energies, not in the clash of hail nor the drift of the whirlwind that the highest characters of the sublime are developed. God is not in the earthquake, nor in the fire, but in the still, small voice."

Times have changed since Ruskin wailed over the indifference of mortals to the charms of nature. Nowadays the "puny person," with only a bowing acquaintance with the birds and buttercups, rushes into printed ecstasies, or, as Lowell plaintively puts it, people "blab" till it becomes "refreshing to find a man as supremely indifferent to Nature as she is to him." From the time of Job down to the present day it is probable that many a high message has been delivered to man from mountain and sky almost too sacred to be divulged to the dull ears of the multitude. From nature, as from art, Ruskin always forced a text, and candor compels the admission that his sermons were generally worth hearing. There are critics, indeed, who maintain that Ruskin's proper province was the pulpit. But the kingdom of might-have-beens may be left to the ah me! poets who find in it rich material for moistening lines that sigh alas! and nevermore! The hard prose point of view would rather seem to be that Ruskin, like Emerson, only indefinitely enlarged his audience and multiplied his influence by being an author and lecturer, instead of a clergyman. The preacher is more or less manacled—sometimes muzzled—by the dogmas or deacons, or both, of the church with which he is connected. He must be very careful, if he wishes to remain in his pulpit, even in these days of enlightenment, not to disturb any of the crusts of prejudice and fallacy that have gathered on old truths and still adhere even to new ones. Many clergymen, because of certain temperamental qualities, have no difficulty in keeping within the "safe" ecclesiastical palings set up by those who think

> The cisterns of those Hebrew brains
> Drew dry the springs of the all-knower's thought.

But Ruskin was not of these. His light was never busheled. He believed that in the province of morality and religion, as in the material world, there was as wide opportunity and need of improvement as lay between the pine-knot light and tallow candle of other days and the brilliant electric illuminations of to-day. His own contribution to the moral illumination of the world was of the electric-light order. He exposed and denounced especially those self-complacent sinners who luxuriate in an emotional pseudo Christianity that ignores the wants and woes of the world, and spends itself in incense and "artistically modulated Dios." To Ruskin all this was "dramatic Christianity" that began and ended at the church doors, and against it he used all his store of rhetorical artillery. Naturally, dramatic Christians and all those who do not like to have their attention called to painful facts, found little soothing in Ruskin's works. But soothing people is not the only mission which life offers. Some people need unsoothing. Jeremiah was not precisely soothing, but his remarks had their own excuse for being.

But it was not always as a prophet of fire and smoke that Ruskin addressed an ignorant and erring world. Listen to him in "Sesame and Lilies," as he talks in his dear, motherly, sometimes almost grandmotherly, way, making out the most exact time tables on the pleasant roads to piety. Notice, also, how adroitly he follows up a gift of bitter herbs with a nosegay of pinks and mignonettes.

The unintentional humor of what has been irreverently called grandmotherly advice to young women is unique and delicious. For instance, he counsels young women "to make every day some little piece of useful clothing sewn with her own fingers," and accumulate the articles until she hears of some person in need of such things. Wayward fancy can scarcely contain itself at the thought of the mammoth stack of misfits turned out at the sweating rate of "a garment a day." Many of Ruskin's admonitions to the young must be read with indulgent tenderness and adopted with latter-day discretions. But when he leaves the realm of details and sets before women the goal toward which they should strive his tones have in them the reverberations of Sinai.

In all modern literature is there a more inspired and inspiring tribute to women than in the chapter on "Queen's Gardens" in "Sesame and Lilies"? And it is a significant fact that this volume of Ruskin's has the widest sale—in America, at least—of all his books. Probably few clergymen, in the course of a long life, have found and "touched to nobler issues" larger audiences than "Sesame and Lilies" has found among us. In this book and "Fors Clavigera" Ruskin, the man, over and above the art critic and rhetorician, stands revealed. The man as his friends knew him, pure, noble, compassionate, and tender, capable of the most heroic sacrifice for those whom he loved or for the justice of the cause in which he believed; capable also of impulsive unkindness, always regretted afterward and frankly acknowledged. These and many similar traits have been called "feminine" by Ruskin's masculine critics—a point which the present writer waives, leaving perfect liberty of conscience to every reader to decide whether impulsiveness is an exclusively feminine trait.

One might go on indefinitely cataloguing the virtue and foibles of a man like Ruskin and still be far from giving anything like a portrait of the man himself, for a critical composite of a hundred critics would still present but an indistinct and blurred image of the subject. "A man is known to his dog by the smell, to his tailor by the coat, to his friend by his smile." Each of these knows him, but how little or how much depends on the dignity of the intelligence? That which is truly and indeed characteristic of the man is known only to God.

When George Eliot Was a Popular Theme.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

"Paradoxical as it may seem," said Dr. Emily Blackwell in a lecture last week, "change is the only fixed fact in life!" The truth of this dictum is microscopically clear to the reader of books. Authors come and go, novels have their short hours of life and die, the idol of yesterday is buried and forgotten. This reflection carries me back to the time when George Eliot's novels were the popular theme. Every hand was lifted, every voice raised, for or against. While the discussion was ripest I went for a day to an Eastern Chautauqua, where in one of the hours a popular minister occupied the query chair. According to the general vogue, the question soon went up, "Should we read George Eliot?" "No," thundered the ministerial voice, "not unless you want to be steeped in pessimism!" (Before you hasten with your acquiescence, let me tell you that the good man has long since recanted. Progress is a law of life!)

"What do you think of that?" I said to my neighbor. "I think," she answered, with expressive deliberation, "that the longer I live the more I value silence."

At dinner that day we had a George Eliot discussion. The young college girl contributed the interesting bit of information that she had no respect for people who read George Eliot, and was told in reply that she was too young for an opinion on religious problems. She and the good minister [illegible] boat, by the way, and thoroughly seaworthy, but hardly large enough.

The next Summer, while in London with a bright little girl of fourteen, we went to the grave of George Eliot. Noticing that the little girl carried a tall English lily, I said "Patty, what are you going to do with your lily?"

"I am going to put it on George Eliot's grave for grandfather," she said. "He thinks she is next to Shakespeare!"

Coming down the Rhigi the next afternoon, the mountain world all aglow with snowlight and sunlight, the same little girl filled my lap with Alpine roses. "I shall press them," I said, "I shall write against them your name, this date, and the best thought I can find in English books."

"I bet (!) it'll be from George Eliot," she said, with an assertive toss of her head. How well she knew her grandfather and her teacher.

At Christmas of the same year one of the travelers received a small gift, with a card bearing the words, "In testimony of my admiration of your admiration of George Eliot." The writer was a man of distinction, and these were the words of a great soul. In reply to my double thanks he said: "I place the George Eliot books next to the Epistles of Paul!"

A traveler, writing from Texas a few years ago, said that he had found the unexpected on a lonely Texan stretch of prairie land—an old woman doing all her household work and finding recreation, refreshment, and strength in "Middlemarch."

A friend recently returned from California reported that she met on a ranch far removed from town or settlement the most brilliant and interesting woman she had ever known, "but," she said, in a half-apologetic tone, "she is literally the woman of one book. She reads nothing but George Eliot!"

From these special observations, I make the following generalization: These great masterpieces of fiction make no appeal to those who are snugly tucked away in a cozy, orthodox corner, but to the bewildered seeker after truth or the honest mind befogged by the mists of many creeds they are a sure and steady beacon light in the darkness. "Janet's Repentance" is an epoch maker in the life of spirit. Better that one little story for "sweetness and light" than all of the books of —— or —— or ——! It makes you feel the life that might be pulsing beneath the life that is.

And "Silas Marner" is the perfect literary model, to say nothing of the sweetest child that ever lived in fiction, child of George Eliot's heart and brain, toddling Eppie.

If you are holding up your hands in pious or impious anathema, I do not say under the breath, as in the old days, "You dogmatist! You ignoramus!" I only say to myself, with a little sigh, "He has not the temperament!" For I, too, like the friend in the early part of the story, have learned the value of silence. Another paradox! The truth lies somewhere between this word and that other, "The way to be tiresome is to say everything." CLARA CONWAY.

New York, Jan. 21, 1900.

Another Word with Mr. Newberry.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In THE REVIEW of Dec. 30 appeared a "Call to Arms" from "C. H. M.," one of the lonesome anti-Hugoites. With Mr. Newberry's "gem of humor" shining on his shirt front, he marches straight out before the vast army of Hugoites and throws down his lionskin gauntlet, the while he brands the enemy as caitiff hypocrites, yet kindly admitting that there are some "who genuinely admire 'Les Miserables.'" But Mr. Newberry says there are "millions" of sincere admirers of the book. Even the native Nyacker to the manner born would admit that that is "quite some." I envy the mind-reading powers of "C. H. M." that enable him to separate the honest sheep from the hypocritical goats.

At the next roll call Mr. William H. Keller is the sole recruit, bringing with him a protest against the Hugoites for resenting Mr. Newberry's fiery onslaught that by implication rated them as blind worshippers of an insane literary mountebank. "C. H. M." is quite right, with a qualification, when he says that "grown people should receive an honest opinion with equanimity," but one may be pardoned for squirming a little if an opinion, no matter how honest, is presented through a cerebral surgical operation with a jagged-edged meat axe. Even the good Quaker whose throat was being cut by a robber objected to the unbusiness-like manner. "Friend," said he, "if thee must cut my throat, do so; but thee haggles."

I am pleased to learn that the Christian Science treatment by means of "thoughts of arnica, and court plaster" is proving so efficacious with Mr. Newberry, after being laid up so long for repairs. His calling my attention to the fact that "The Scarlet Letter" has a preface containing humorous features was well meant, but superfluous. Hawthorne's story, per se, is, I still maintain, as free from humor as "Les Miserables," and properly so. I can hardly think, however, that what Mr. Newberry would seem to imply would be true—that "Les Miserables," depicting, as it does, heart struggles, the development and final triumph of a tempest-tossed soul, only needed a humorous preface to have made it a masterpiece equal to Hawthorne's. How strange that the earlier "Imitations of Christ" has had such a vogue among so many millions for more than 400 years—with no humorous preface.

As for criticism in general, it is illogical and unfair to exhaust the vocabulary of vituperation while wholly ignoring the good points in book or picture, (new or old;) but especially so when the work has stood the test of time, and won its way with multitudes quite able to judge of its merits and demerits. We all have a right to our own opinions, but it is the judicious criticism of literature and art—in the spirit of fairness—that is valuable. Ragging with a renomed pen is not criticism; it is mere abuse.

THE PUBLISHER'S POINT OF VIEW.

NEXT week our spring publishing season begins, when we issue Miss Tarbell's "Life of Lincoln," Mr. Frank Norris's "A Man's Woman" and Prof. Goldwin Smith's "Shakespeare: The Man."

* * *

AT the opening of a new term of activity perhaps the time is opportune to state again our theory of book publishing: to issue only the books which have a real reason for existence. There are thousands of books put out each year which merely clog the booksellers' shelves—indeed, one publisher, who has recently gone out of business, used to announce that he got out "a book a day." Last year we put forth about 85 volumes: if this year we can reduce the number to 60 and have the average in standing and success twice as high, our ambition will be attained. Only by being honestly enthusiastic himself can a publisher communicate enthusiasm to book buyers; and only with a reasonably small list can the personal and individual attention which is so essential be given to each volume.

* * *

LAST week we printed an elaborate advertisement in The Times about M. Bloch's "The Future of War," a splendid, timely, and really necessary book which doesn't sell. The lengthy advertisement failed to bring an order—so we try a small item this time. If the reader won't pay $2.00 for a book as good as this, we hope he will go to the library and get it there.

* * *

BY purchase from Way & Williams we have just secured a book which we have long believed in and hope to get others to believe in. The most delightful way of learning history is through the historical novel. The book we speak of is a novel of the Stone Age by Stanley Waterloo, "The Story of Ab"—a tale of the time of the cave man. It pre-empts a great field absolutely. There is not a tree nor bush nor bird nor beast nor conformation of land nor climatic condition mentioned in it which has not been proved scientically accurate. Unless some telling scientific discoveries take place, the book will need no revision for a quarter of a century. It has, even in its brief exploitation, proved a successful romance as well. We hope that it may not make the book seem less attractive when we say that it has been taken by many high schools as "required reading," giving as it does the most faithful and interesting picture of the cave man. The Chicago Board of Education has, among others, just "adopted" it.

$1.50; Illustrated; 5th Printing.

FOR January our best selling books are:

"The Gentleman from Indiana," by Tarkington; "Bob, Son of Battle," by Ollivant; "The Man with the Hoe," by Markham; Stalky & Co." and "The Day's Work," by Kipling; "Blix," by Norris; "Dracula," by Bram Stoker; "Bandanna Ballads," by Weeden, and "Bird Neighbors," by Blanchan—but it's a dull month at best.

All our publications are sent on approval, to be paid for, if desired, after examination, (a postal will bring any volume.) We have at least the courage of our own convictions as to our books.

NOTES AND NEWS.

An Old-Time Bookseller.

It is possibly not an exaggeration to say that the last of what might be called the old-time booksellers has just passed away in the person of Alexander Williams, who, for many years, was identified with the famous "Old Corner Book Store" of Boston, where, in 1866, he succeeded E. P. Dutton & Co., now of this city. Nowadays the head of a large bookselling establishment usually sits in his office leaving customers to be waited upon by clerks. Mr. Williams always stood on the floor of his store where his broad knowledge of books and his taste in selection were at the disposal of the customer. The late Bernard Quaritch and Daniel Macmillan also sold books in this way. Perhaps it is owing to the very fact that the modern bookseller secludes himself in his office that certain pieces of modern fiction have reached such a high figure. The book store clerk of to-day simply informs the customer what books are being sold and who buys them. He has a certain knowledge of literature, past and current, to be sure, but he rarely imparts it to the customer unless requested to do so. Particularly in the field of fiction, the general reader selects the book about which people are talking. It is the decreasing demand made upon the special knowledge of the old-time bookseller that has caused him gradually to retire to his sanctum in the rear of his store, where, however, the genuine book collector is still an eager visitor.

Mr. George P. Brett, President of the Macmillan Company, has many pleasant recollections of Mr. Williams. Their acquaintance began in the early seventies, when Mr. Brett was traveling salesman for the Macmillans. "Many times," said Mr. Brett to us the other day, "I have seen 'old man Williams,' as we younger men by no means disrespectfully called him among ourselves, standing on the floor of his shop discoursing to an eager little group of customers on the varied merits of his books—books that were soon purchased on the strength of his brief yet comprehensive criticisms. Owing to the gruff exterior which he turned toward the men who wanted him to buy books, we did not always appreciate him at his full worth. Nevertheless, he had a warm place in his heart for young men. He sympathized with their ambitions, even though he did not always feel justified in ordering as liberally as they thought he might. Later, when I was obliged to go to California for my health, I met him again. He visited me at my little farm, where, between devouring insects and a blanket mortgage, I was experiencing the joys and sorrows, especially the sorrows, of fruit raising. It was then that, possibly for the first time, I fully began to realize the many amiable qualities of the man and the interest that he took in the aims and ambitions of a younger generation. He very soon showed me that I could never make a success as a fruit raiser, and that my proper place was among books. He placed at my disposal the good will of his many friends in the East, and advised me to return here at once. Mingled with his admonition, he contrived to give me the latest gossip of the bookmaking world—what publishers were doing and what they hoped to do—and soon the enthusiasm for my old calling returned to me, and I became eager again for the very sight of the crowded shelves and the chatter of the book shop."

BOOKS AND THEIR MAKERS.

Robert W. Chambers was recently asked by a publisher for some news of a personal nature. He wrote: "There is nothing in particular to tell since I last saw you, except that the shooting has been pretty poor—or, rather, my shooting has been pretty poor—and my small kennel has turned out probably the worst dogs west of Constantinople." It is said that when Mr. Chambers has nothing more inspiring to do, he takes his blue pencil and hacks away at the manuscript that he happens to have in hand. In one of these "editing" moods he cut out 30,000 words from the manuscript of "The Cambric Mask," which is being published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. When not "cutting copy," this author is supposed to be at work on the fourth and last volume of his Franco-Prussian series of novels, which will round out the ideas so ably conceived in "Ashes of Empire," "Lorraine," and "The Red Republic."

Collectors of the portraits of celebrities will be sorry to learn that there is only one picture of the late R. D. Blackmore known to be in existence. This is a line drawing which was reproduced some years ago in that London periodical, The Publishers' Weekly. Here we see the gifted author of "Lorna Doone" with clean shaven upper lip, with a round, full neck beard, and looking for all the world like the skipper of a Channel trader. It may interest the lovers of Mr. Blackmore's novels to know that "Lorna Doone" was published by Harper & Brothers after several eminent critics had declared that it was a most unpromising novel for American publication. As everybody now knows, this turned out not to be the case. Mr. Blackmore numbered his readers in America by the hundred thousands.

A short time ago we had occasion to comment on the fact that the London literary journals, in speaking of Dr. Conan Doyle's volunteering for service in South Africa, appeared ignorant of the fact that the creator of the famous Sherlock Holmes was also a military strategist and a surgeon of recognized standing as well; and we added that in the last capacity the services of the author-scientist would very likely be much in demand. It seems that it as a surgeon that Dr. Doyle will go to South Africa, where he will be attached to the Langman Field Hospital.

While the readers of "The Adventures of Gavin Hamilton," the latest book from the pen of Molly Elliot Seawell, which was published by Harper & Brothers, are multiplying, a touch of sadness may mingle with their pleasure when they learn that the eyesight of this author is rapidly leaving her. Her affliction, however, has not so far caused her to abandon her literary industry. She now dictates to her secretary, who, in turn, reads aloud what has been taken down, that the author may suggest changes.

Unquestionably publishers have the right to dedicate certain works of their press, although it is a right that is not usually availed of. The new edition of Gilbert White's "The Natural History of Selborne," which John Lane of the Bodley Head has just published, bears this inscription on the title page: "To A. E. L., in Commemoration of Aug. 13, 1898, This Edition is Dedicated by the Publisher." Nobody will question the appropriateness of the dedication, however, when it is learned that the initials "A. E. L." stand for the present Mrs. Lane, who on the date set down was married to the proprietor of the Bodley Head in the historic church of Selborne.

Arthur Paterson, the author of "Cromwell's Own," which was published by Harper & Brothers last July, is also the writer of no less than seven novels of life and character as found in the Western States. Mr. Paterson will visit this country next season for a lecture tour. He is a nephew of the Rev. Brooke Herford. A brochure published by the City Library Association of Springfield, Mass., devotes considerable space to him and to the significance of his work on Cromwell's famous regiment. This brochure is illustrated with the reproduction of many Cromwellian relics and portraits and also contains a carefully compiled Cromwell bibliography. It is entitled "The Cromwell List: Being Notes for the Study of Oliver Cromwell and His Times, with Special Reference to Arthur Paterson's Novel, 'Cromwell's Own,' Together with Various Other Writings Relating to the Life of the Lord Protector."

Appreciation differs so much. Mr. H. Sutcliffe in his "By Moor and Fell" tells of his meeting an old gamekeeper who had known the Brontë family. He remembered Charlotte distinctly. He seemed to have been annoyed because visitors were constantly asking questions about the Brontë sisters. He could not understand it. This was what he said to an inquirer:

Can ye tell me what hes brought yond so far across the moor? Why, nowt no more nor Charlotte Brontë—little Charlotte o' the Parsonage, as weakly, undersized a piece o' goods as iver I clapped een on. Her write printed books? I'll niver believe it. She got some cleverish sort o' chap to write 'em for her, an' then put her name to 'em for pride; an' that's Gospel truth, for I've seen her myseln often, an it war plain to ony man 'at it took a bigger nor her to mak a printed book.

Let the sound of alarm be raised. The forger is around. There having been a great demand for the early editions of Kipling, there are a number of rascals who are prepared to manufacture Kiplings. There are many book cranks. The forger, if he has the chance, will batten on such. There is said to exist in India quite a stock of early Kiplings, and that the possessors of these are keeping them in reserve. Not so long ago a copy of Kipling's "Schoolboy Lyrics" fetched £135, and quite recently another copy only £46. Somebody had found out that there were more "Schoolboy Lyrics" to be soon put on the market.

If there is sluggishness in the English book trade to-day, just as soon as the war is over there will be a huge demand for publications of a military character. As it is, the large libraries in London can hardly supply readers, who ask for the histories of former English campaigns. There will be in the time to come Col. Baden Powell, who will tell of his gallant defense of Mafeking. We are sure to have books galore, called "With White," or "With Methuen," or "With Buller," or "With Gatacre." Will not Kipling write? Poor Steevens! How unfortunate was his death! The field of military action has been so wide, that the opportunities for description will permit of the most varied treatment.

In Longman's Mr. Andrew Lang is quite put out because he is an object of interest to Americans who visit St. Andrews. When Mr. Lang appears (so it has been printed) the American blurts out "That's him." Then American journals insist that Mr. Lang plays golf, with a white ball in Summer and a black one in Winter. Another peculiarity, so it is reported of him, is that he lunches on scones, which his caddie carries around, and that he eats these scones in the most public manner. Mr. Lang writes: "As I have not played golf for years, never carry scones, or eat them in public, and, of all things, never played with a black ball, I conceive that some one has hoaxed the inquiring American."

ITEMS OF THE DAY.

A Popular "Swinburne" Desired.

The sentiment voiced by The Academy of London must find a response in the hearts of the admirers of good poetry in this country. They say in London that the poems of Mr. Swinburne cost too much. The Academy notes that Dodd, Mead & Co. are about to bring out a new edition of this author's poems, "revised and rearranged by the author, who may prefix to it a new essay on his work." It is then inquired whether Messrs. Chatto & Windus, who issue all Mr. Swinburne's works in England, would permit this edition for American readers. The writer in the London Journal then continues: "I have, I think, suggested before now in this column that the poems of Mr. Swinburne should be made more accessible to the great public by a substantial lowering of the price. Personally, I should like to see a liberal selection from the lyrics and sonnets issued in the form of half a dozen cheap and handy volumes. This selection would be addressed to the average English reader, and would therefore contain none of the semi-political poems. In my opinion, Mr. Swinburne's poetry has yet to be popularised."

An Important Franklin Discovery.

Dr. Moncure D. Conway, who is in Paris looking for material for a forthcoming work on demonology, has made an interesting discovery concerning the last words of Benjamin Franklin. Parton's description of the scene in the death chamber has generally been accepted as authentic. According to Franklin's biographer, when the dying man was asked to change his position that he might breathe easier, Franklin replied: "A dying man can do nothing easy." Mr. Parton adds: "These were the last words of his that have been recorded." Dr. Conway finds this statement to be erroneous. He recently wrote to a friend in London that he had found in the archives of the Department of State in Paris a letter from Louis Otto, French Chargé d'Affaires in Philadelphia, dated May 10, 1790, (Franklin's death occurred April 17, 1790,) in which he says:

Peu de momens avant sa dissolution il répéta encore ces paroles, fondées sur la religion qu'il s'etoit fait à lui même qu'un homme n'etoit parfaitement né qu'après sa mort.

Dr. Conway adds: "Otto, who married in America, (Miss Livingston of New York,) was well acquainted with the Franklin family and there is little reason to doubt that he had good authority for the incident reported to his Government."

The Author of Primitive Love.

Henry T. Finck, whose new book, "Primitive Love and Love Stories," was recently published by Charles Scribner's Sons, is a graduate of Harvard of the Class of 1876. He was born in Missouri in 1854. When he was a lad his parents moved to Oregon, where he passed his youth. After he was graduated he spent several years in Germany studying comparative psychology and giving much time also to music, a love for which he inherited from his father. For many years he has been the musical editor of a New York paper. It has been Mr. Finck's custom to spend the Summer in traveling, and several of his books, "Lotos Time in Japan," "Spain and Morocco," and "The Pacific Coast Scenic Tour," are the fruit of these journeys. "Primitive Love and Love Stories" is the result of thirteen years' labor—ten years in the collection of the material from original sources in Europe and America and three years in giving this material form. The work is expected by those who have read it to create a new epoch in the sociology of marriage and love, and to be of great scientific value as well as of extraordinary interest to collectors. It is an entirely different book from Mr. Finck's "Romantic Love and Personal Beauty."

Lady Randolph Churchill's Quarterly.

The third volume of Lady Randolph Churchill's quarterly, The Anglo-Saxon Review, will be ready at John Lane's early in February. There are six elaborate portraits in the number: Paderewski, Napoleon Bonaparte, Percy B. Shelley, Mary Shelley, George Canning, and Marie de Guise-Lorraine, Queen of Scotland. The principal literary features will be "War Memories," by Stephen Crane; "Spain: Financial and Political," by Señor Moret Prendergast; "Some Letters of George Channing," (mostly unpublished,) edited by the Rev. Canon Raven; "Lucretius on Life and Death," by W. H. Mallock; "Talbot of Ursula," by Gertrude Atherton; "Our Sea Fights with the Dutch," by David Hannay; "The Merciful Soul," by Laurence Alma Tadema; "Notes on the Venezuelan Arbitration," by G. R. Askwith; "Paolo and Francesca," by Richard Garnett, LL. D.; "Four Poems Written in Norway in 1899," by Edmund Gosse; "Changes in Parliamentary Speech," by the Hon. Alfred Lyttleton, M. P.; "On the Art of Going to War," by Spenser Wilkinson; "The Unflinching Realist," by H. D. Traill; "Past and Future in South Africa," by Lionel Phillips; "The Outcasts," by H. De Vere Stacpoole; "Chinese Doctors and Medical Treatment," by Isabella L. Bishop, and "Sikhs and Boers: A Parallel," by Stephen Wheeler.

Mr. Howells on Frank R. Stockton.

The February number of The Book Buyer will contain an article, "Mr. Stockton and All His Work," from the pen of the eminent novelist William D. Howells. This is written as an appreciation of the Shenandoah edition of Mr. Stockton's works, which Charles Scribner's Sons are publishing. Mr. Stockton's action is "loved," not "liked," says Mr. Howells. People "like it first, not for the story which nearly always amuses, not for the character, which under whatever fantastic disguise is commonly native American; not even for the humor, which is of as new a kind as any I know, but for the delightful personality which imbues it all." How many readers of Mr. Stockton's tales will find in the above words what they have always thought yet have never been able to express! Concerning the fact that the library of the late Augustin Daly will be sold at the American Art Galleries in March, an article, also in the February number of The Book Buyer, entitled "A Group of Rare Lambs," will be read with much interest by collectors. In the same number Archdeacon Cyrus Townsend Brady reviews two recent books concerning the American Navy, "Twenty Famous Naval Battles," by Prof. E. K. Rawson, and "A History of American Privateers," by Edgar Stanton Maclay.

Dr. Johnson's Capacity for Tea.

It will always be turning up. And the question is: If tea is to be measured by quarts, how many of these did Dr. Johnson absorb at one sitting? The record is that the lexicographer drank during one evening from twenty-four to twenty-five cups; let us say twenty-four cups. We have it in black and white that Boswell tactfully chilled the Doctor for such excessive indulgence, and the great man owned up, and called himself a hardened and shameless tea drinker. A collector of the tea-cups of the past, though not disputing the tale of the cups, is of the opinion that the cups of 150 years ago were very much smaller than they are to-day. The question then narrows itself down to the gauge of the cups of say 1750. Some one in Notes and Queries writes that the cup in the Johnsonian period held a third of a pint. Then twenty-four helpings of tea would represent four quarts. If only those who brewed Bohea for the doctor had told us how many teapots had been filled, then some positive conclusions might have been arrived at. Miss Alice Morse Earle, as an authority on old china, might settle this vexed question. Tending toward the solution of the matter the capacity of a teapot known to be one hundred and seventy-seven years old has been taken. This teapot holds exactly a pint and a gill, United States measure. A party with Gargantuan capabilities with such a teapot would have had a great deal of trouble before thirst was appeased. If the Doctor had faced such a little teapot he would have shown impatience. Anyhow, the Doctor wrote to Miss Reynolds:

"Thou cans't not make the tea so fast,
As I can drink it down."

The probability is that the great man could take down his four quarts at a single sitting.

Books Mr. Tirebuck Wrote.

There died last Monday a writer who, if he never attained any considerable degree of fame, had yet done a great deal to popularize art and was the author of a number of novels far above the average of the last twenty years. William Edwards Tirebuck was a native of Liverpool, and as a boy and young man had no opportunities to study art other than those afforded by the ugliest of English cities. Nevertheless he succeeded in educating himself to an appreciation of the beautiful and a remarkably complete knowledge of the various schools of painting, especially those of the Italian pre-Raphaelites. He was, as the phrase goes, "destined for a commercial career," but, after working for some time as a clerk, succeeded in obtaining a position as one of the sub-editors of The Liverpool Mail. From there he went to The Yorkshire Post, and, having written two or three books which sold well, decided to devote himself entirely to literature. The best known of Mr. Tirebuck's books on art is "Dante G. Rossetti: His Work and Influence." This was published in 1882, and, though it was rather severely handled by the critics, attained a wide circulation. "Great Minds in Art" appeared in 1888, and was also successful, at any rate from a financial point of view. Mr. Tirebuck wrote a large number of novels, the best known of which are "Dorrie," "Sweetheart Gwen," "Meg of the Scarlet Foot," and "The White Woman."

Charles A. Kip has opened an office in this city at 156 Fifth Avenue for the exhibition and sale of the popular Copley prints. One of the most charming of the newest things is a series of five heads illustrative of the five senses by J. Wells Champney. The soft tone of the Copley print brings out in admirable light the beauties of famous paintings, among those from which copies have been made being selections from Corot, Daubigny, Millet, Inness, Dupee, Thompson, and John La Forge. The Copley prints won their first high favor from the reproductions of Sargent's frescoes in the Boston Public Library, and to these have since been added copies of the rich mural paintings in the Library of Congress, and some of William M. Hunt's frescoes in the State Capitol at Albany.

It seems that Mr. Hillaire Belloc, whose "Life of Danton" was published last Spring by Charles Scribner's Sons, is a humorist as well as a distinguished historian of the Freeman school. His book on the great Frenchman of the Revolution has rightly become an authority on the subject, and has taken its place for supplementary reading in the historical courses given at several American colleges and universities. Some London reviewers, it appears, have believed that the Hillaire Belloc who wrote "The Bad Child's Book of Beasts" was altogether a different person from the author of "The Life of Danton." He is one and the same person, and now all academic England is laughing at Mr. Belloc's recently issued skit on Oxford University dons, entitled "Lambkin's Remains."

People interested in old New York will be glad to make note of a new book that will shortly be published by Francis P. Harper. It is a complete "Historical Index to the Manuals of the Corporation of the City of New York," better known as "Valentine's Manuals." For a number of years the editor of the forthcoming volume, whose identity is concealed behind the initials "O. H." on the title page, has been a close student of the early history of the city, and found the "Manuals" most valuable guides, if only one could get at the material distributed, without any idea of system, throughout the twenty-eight volumes. He was thus induced to undertake the compilation of an index. By means of the index articles of the highest importance are made readily accessible to the student of old New York.

A new volume of short stories from the pen of Owen Wister, entitled "Jimmijohn Boss," is in preparation at Harper & Brothers, for publication early in the Spring.

A translation of Mme. Blanc's latest novelette, "Malentendus," will shortly begin its course as a serial in The Critic.

Although the fact, by an inadvertence, was not noted on the title page, Mr. Joel Benton's book "Emerson as a Poet," issued by Mansfield & Wessels, is the second edition, much enlarged. The later poems are treated in a separate essay, and the bibliography is extended over several new pages. The portrait of Emerson which the book contains represents him in middle life, not far from his fiftieth year, and is altogether the best and most satisfactory one of him extant. It was taken subsequent to the Rowse portrait, and it is said that Emerson, having committed himself to that, did not, from a delicate sense of honor, lend encouragement at that time to the circulation of any other. The result has been that Rowse's picture, which has an unnatural twist in the face, and certain others, taken when senility had made its mark, are those most usually seen by the public.

Boston Items.

BOSTON, Jan. 25.—Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. find themselves with a list so long that its division is almost unavoidable, and accordingly they have prepared a "Catalogue of Publications in General Literature," arranged alphabetically by authors and titles. The recent purchase of the publications of Messrs. Roberts Brothers has contributed many series and authors to this catalogue, and circumstances make certain of them especially noteworthy at present. There is no better picture of the utter ugliness and squalor of Boer farm life than is given in "The Story of an African Farm." The description of wedding festivities reads like one of Mr. Garland's searching studies of disagreeable folk. In its discontented skepticism, this story and the other books written by its author are among the most conspicuous embodiments of that "modern" spirit which Mr. Clement Scott declares impossible to neglect. The author's other books are more visionary, more characteristic of her Dutch blood, more suggestive of a nature resembling that of the women in the novels of Maarten Maartens.

Three Martineau books are in the catalogue, the two series of "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," by the Rev. James Martineau, who died the other day, and Mrs. Fenwick Miller's very curious biography of his sister, the cause of lively discussion when it appeared sixteen years ago. It elicited newspaper letters not only from Dr. Martineau himself, but from Harriet Martineau's friends, and from a flock of writers quite ignorant of both brother and sister and of the cause of their disagreement, but with endless theories about Woman and Emancipation and Thought and other things beautified with capitals. Mrs. Oliphant's "Stories of the Seen and the Unseen," including "Little Pilgrim" and "Old Lady Mary," almost the only pictures of a future life quite free from the ludicrous element; Emily Dickinson's strange verses, the "Great Speeches" of Webster, and the complete works of "H. H.," Miss Ingelow, Miss Alcott, and Mrs. Ewing are only the beginning.

The catalogue is indexed by titles and illustrated with portraits, many of which are of authors whose faces appear for the first time in such a setting, among them those of Miss Lagerlöf and "Sheppard Stevens" and Mrs. Maud Wilder Goodwin.

A work of no small importance to teachers and students of design is published this week by Mr. W. R. Clarke under the title, "Illustrations of Balance and Rhythm in Design," by Mr. Denman W. Ross, Harvard lecturer; Mr. Edgar O. Parker, and Mr. S. Clifford Fatchett. It is a large portfolio, accompanied by a circular which is small but quite large enough for those for whom the book is prepared. The grouping of the elementary forms is very ingenious, and the study of the designs is a real refreshment in a world which, after enduring the distortions of Beardsley, now seems anxious to seek consolation in the irritating symmetries of M. de Monvel. It may be that the angels can endure the sight of his childish figures, smug, stiff, with pinpoints for eyes, combinations of the graces of the paper doll and the tailor's model; but regarding them long, the mere mortal becomes ready to canonise King Herod. Luckily, no real child can be coaxed to stand like those which he draws, much less to sit on a piano stool with his feet hanging on each side at precisely the same angle, and his hair arranged so as to look exactly like those table mats which country housewives rip under dishes of hot vegetables.

Reading accounts of the "marvelous circulation" of this or that book novel and commercial shrewdness, and might Dear Dan Frohman never forget books, but in truth, they bought quite as many as their descendants. In 1840 Boston was a very small place, but when Mr. James Brown of the present house of Little, Brown & Co. published the "Letters" of Mrs. John Adams, the first edition disappeared almost immediately, and of the second edition of 1,500, 200 were sold the first day. Nobody waited "to get it from the public library," or to "take it in turn at the book club"; it was bought.

A Comedy by de Bergerac.*

The publication in accessible form of Cyrano de Bergerac's "Le Pédant Joué," as it was recently produced on the amateur stage by the members of the Cercle Français of Harvard University, is not only a valuable addition to the reprints of the Cercle, but it is a notable contribution to the literature of that man whose strangely absorbing personality inspired M. Rostand to write one of the most notable plays of the century. As an introduction to "Le Pédant Joué" we have a brief, comprehensive preface by Prof. Böcher, head of the French department at Harvard, and a biographical sketch of Cyrano by Mr. H. B. Stanton, (Harvard, 1900,) which is without doubt the most complete and authoritative that has ever appeared on the subject, even in France.

In order to make "Le Pédant Joué" intelligible, if not amusing, to a modern audience M. Charles N. L. N. Bernard was obliged to apply the pruning knife rather freely. He has performed his task in a judicious and artistic manner. He has perceptibly augmented the histrionic qualities of the original; he has emphasized its literary merits; but he has in no way dwarfed or rendered insignificant the peculiar charm of the comedy as it came from Cyrano's pen.

Mr. Stanton, after the most careful research in Paris, has failed to find confirmation of the story that the play was first produced in 1645. It is doubtful, he says, whether the play was ever produced at all. Still, he does not insist on this point, for it may be argued that, if "Le Pédant Joué" were not produced, how could its two features which mark it as an epoch-making comedy have been handed down through a long line of French dramatic commentators with the invariable observation, "une comédie qui eut un grand succès"? Until M. Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac" took Paris by storm, causing all known data concerning the model to be placed under particular examination, "Le Pédant Joué" had been a mere title with a tag attached. Few students of literature had cared to take the trouble to examine it. The tag was sufficient, for it read, "C'est la première comédie en prose et ou un paysan parle son jargon." These attributes have been handed down by literary historians without question. They are probably just. Mr. Stanton gives proper emphasis to the second when he says: "He [the peasant Gareau] stands pre-eminent in his time as the first true representation of his class in French comedy, and the ancestor of almost every peasant on the French stage."

As has already been said, Mr. Stanton's life of Cyrano is most noteworthy. How he collected most of the material for it Prof. Böcher tells us in the preface:

Last Summer he ran over the whole dossier of the Cyrano family, now deposited in the National Library in Paris; sixty-one pieces, in writing of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries—often difficult to decipher. He went to Chevreuse, near Versailles, and took a personal view of the estates from which Cyrano drew his name, Bergerac, near Dampierre. Thus he has been able to state correctly Cyrano's ancestry, and to prove the fact that he was not of noble family, and also that he had never been at the College of Beauvais. I think he has at last successfully made clear that there was no schoolboy collaboration between Molière and Cyrano.

Mr. Stanton's discoveries indicated by Prof. Böcher are particularly important, as they upset the theories of the French commentators who have recently been writing on the subject, and whose essays in translation or adaptation have been widely circulated in this country. Of course M. Rostand was at liberty to treat his hero as the exigencies of his art required. The wonder is that he has been able to introduce so much actual data into "Cyrano de Bergerac." Still, Mr. Stanton's research has brought forth quite a different person from the poet's creation. And the real Cyrano is quite as interesting, if less romantic and fateful.

TO KIPLING: ENGLAND'S UNOFFICIAL LAUREATE.

Suggested by the Editorial Article, "Kipling and an Old Assistant," in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Jan. 20.

There's meaning in his method
And music in his mirth;
A purpose in his poems,
With promise in their birth.
There's magic in his singing,
A daintiness of choice,
With grace-notes in the setting
That warble in his voice.

Free as the wind—there cometh
His message 'cross the sea;
With pathos and with passion
He strikes a minor key.
As tender oft as brilliant,
As quietsome as strong,
This song bird of young England
In virile sea-set song.

Life moves in all its phases,
With thought in every theme;
Swift to its mark it flieth,
Without a halt between.
He sways us to his singing
By the genius in his soul.
He lifts us in his soaring
Till we reach the poet's goal.

The week has been a busy one in the New York art world. In addition to the continuing exhibitions of the National Academy of Design, (which closes to-night), of the Chase portraits at Knoedler's, the Childe Hassam drawings and sketches at Macbeth's, the Hamilton pictures at Clausen's, and numerous other little displays, there have been exhibitions of two good collections, the Reimann and Isaac Walker at the Fifth Avenue Auction Rooms and Art Galleries respectively, and the sale of the same at the same places, while as a climax Wednesday brought the press and private view of Mr. W. T. Evans's notable collection of American pictures at the American Art Galleries, and which is to be sold at auction at Chickering Hall on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings next. The week brought also a sensation in art circles, namely, the arrest on a charge of criminal libel of Mr. David C. Preyer, editor and publisher of The Art Collector and Critic, preferred by Henry Ranger, the well-known American landscape painter, and which as it bids fair to open up the old and still disputed question of the relations of painter and art critic, has deep significance.

***

The exhibition of a number of pictures by E. S. Hamilton at the Clausen galleries is the first of a series of similar exhibitions by American artists which are to be held there. Edgar S. Hamilton is a painter comparatively new to the New York art public. He was born in San Antonio, Texas, in 1869, is the son of a clergyman in Trenton, N. J., and studied at the Art Students' League, and under George de Forest Brush in New York, and later in Paris under Laurens, Benjamin Constant, and Gérôme. He returned to New York in 1894, and his work has been seen at the local exhibitions. Mr. Hamilton is essentially a colorist. The examples of his work shown at the Clausen gallery are decorative, soft, and pleasing in color. They are figure works, and strange to say, with all his instruction under such good draughtsmen, the artist has not learned to draw the figure. One can forgive, in many instances, defects in drawing and foreshortening when one looks at Mr. Hamilton's work simply as that of a decorative colorist, but some of his drawing is so faulty as to be insistent and to spoil the effect of individual examples. It is only kindness to recommend to Mr. Hamilton a further and diligent course of study in the life classes. He is represented in the Evans collection by an example "Slumber," which is subdued and forceful in color, and which has two figures of young girls gracefully posed and not badly drawn. This picture is so much better than anything he shows at the Clausen gallery in draughtsmanship as to evidence that more care and study would enable him to overcome the faults so apparent in that display.

***

The collection of modern French paintings owned by Austin H. King, a well-known collector of Providence, R. I., and which is to be sold at auction in Chickering Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 5, is to open to-day at the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries, 366 Fifth Avenue. There are fifty-seven pictures in the collection, painted by forty-six artists, and all the masters of the Barbizon school are represented, together with Jules Breton, de Neufville, Detaille, Gérôme, Zamacois, Alma Tadema, and other modern painters of note. This sale, which will follow immediately that of the Evans collection of American pictures, will have added interest in that it will give some idea of the effect of the sale of the Clarke and Evans representative American pictures on the market for foreign canvases in America.

An exhibition of some recent work of Augustus St. Gaudens, reproduced in bronze, is now being held at Tiffany's, on Union Square Mr. St. Gaudens, who has virtually become a resident of Paris, where he has a handsome studio, and who has received several honors from the French Government, including medals, the Legion of Honor cross, and the purchase of two of his sculptures for the Luxembourg galleries, has not shown for a long time any work in New York. Among the pieces in the present display are two of the original experimental models for the Madison Square Garden tower Diana, a reduced model of his statue of the Puritan in Springfield, Mass., reproductions of "The Angel with the Tablet," and of the portrait bas relief of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, the originals of which last were the pieces purchased by the Luxembourg galleries. The friends of Mr. St. Gaudens and lovers of the art of sculpture in general should not fail to visit this little display, which is filled with convincing evidence that Mr. St. Gaudens's hand has not lost its cunning, and that his natural artistic force and skill have not abated.

***

The annual display at the Lotos Club of pictures painted by members of the club is now being arranged by Mr. W. A. Fraser of the Art Committee, and will open at the club with a private view on Thursday, Feb. 22.

***

The Black and White Club will hold its second annual exhibition in the rooms of the National Sculpture Society in the American Fine Arts Building from Saturday, Feb. 10, to Saturday, Feb. 24, inclusive. Only members of the club can exhibit, and original works in any monotint never before shown will be received on Fe'. 5 at the building.

Thomas Shields Clarke, the sculptor, gave a press and private view on Thursday at his studio, 343 West Seventy-seventh Street, of his recently completed model for a monument entitled "To Alma Mater," which it is proposed to erect on the campus at Princeton University. The annual exhibition of the work of the students of the American Art Association of Paris has just closed at the Durand-Ruel galleries in that city. Comparatively few of the artists represented are known here, with the exception of H. O. Tanner and V. D. Brenner, who showed a bas relief of Mr. G. A. Lucas, well known in New York. Mr. Brenner is a medallist, and went from this city to pursue his sculpture studies in Paris. The first prize in the sculpture department, of 600 francs, was won by H. A. McNeil, the second, of 400 francs, by S. H. Borglum, a Scandinavian painter and sculptor now working in London, but who lived and worked for some years in California, and the third, of 200 francs, by V. D. Brenner, for his bas relief of Mr. Lucas, above mentioned.

A collection of drawings by F. O. C. Darley, loaned by Mrs. F. O. C. Darley, with additions loaned by Mrs. William T. Blodgett, the American Bank Note Company, and Mr. Alfred Jones, is now on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Darley was born in Philadelphia, of English parentage, on June 22, 1821, and died at his residence in Tremont, Del., March 27, 1888. From the age of eighteen he became a professional artist, chiefly self-taught. He confined himself almost entirely to outline drawing and black and white, and mainly to illustrations. As is well remembered, he illustrated the works of Cooper, Irving, Judd, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Simms, and other American authors, and also executed a number of large drawings relating to the history of the Revolution and to the civil war. Some of his best work was done for the American Bank Note Company, mainly in vignette form, which comprised commercial, Indian, and domestic incidents. Many of his happiest inspirations were drawn upon the wood, were frequently spoiled in the engraving, and are buried in innumerable volumes which he illustrated. The exhibition includes thirty drawings in India ink, illustrating Shakespeare's plays; sixteen pen and ink drawings, very elaborate in finish, illustrating Longfellow's "Evangeline," never published and never before exhibited, scene landscape studies in pencil, and water color, made at Mount Desert, &c., in 1871, and other illustrations of Dickens's and Cooper's works. This exhibition should be particularly interesting to art connoisseurs of an older generation, for it will recall many memories of their youth.

The centre of art interest for the next few days lies in the exhibition and sale of Mr. W. T. Evans's collection of American pictures. This was reviewed in general in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Thursday morning, Jan. 25. No review, however, can give to the art student and lover an adequate idea of the richness of the collection and its splendid exemplification of the progress and present standing and promise of American landscape art. There are a few figure works, notably a large assortment of the decorative figure pieces of F. S. Church, some of the colorist Mowbray, and examples of such figure painters as Broughton, Maria Brooks, J. G. Brown, C. C. Curran, Kenyon Cox, T. W. Dening, F. Dielman, Wyatt Eaton, Gilbert Gaul, S. J. Guy, W. St. John Harper, Thomas Hovendon, F. C. Jones, W. H. Low, F. D. Millet, Louis Moeller, R. L. Newman, P. P. Ryder, Walter Shirlaw, E. C. Tarbell, A. H. Thayer, C. Y. Turner, C. F. Ulrich, H. O. Walker, and I. R. Wiles. While these painters are all well represented, the work of the landscapists so predominates that it gives the chief character to the display. The landscape showing is a dignified and noble one, and the groups of Innesses, Wyants, Homer Martins, and Murphys would alone make the collection a remarkable one. When all this, however, is said, it is evident that the collection as a whole is not as broadly and thoroughly representative of American art as that of Mr. Thomas B. Clarke sold last Winter. This is not to be wondered at, for

Some criticism has been expressed of the laudation of Mr. Evans in the introduction to his catalogue, as a patron of American artists, and the emphasizing of "the assistance he has given to the artists of the city and country by the mere fact of seeking out those workers whom he considered most promising." It is said that he has "paid for his pictures always a fair and reasonable price; that he has been acting the part of a patriot," and that "his exclusive passion for the work of American artists has materially aided in giving the latter heart and in stirring hope among our painters generally." The same criticism that lies against this laudation of a picture buyer who it is also said "is a shrewd business man" was leveled last year against a somewhat milder laudation of Mr. Clarke, also voiced, if memory serves aright, in the introduction to the catalogue of his pictures. While it is undoubtedly true that both Mr. Clarke and Mr. Evans have aided the cause of American art by buying American pictures, it is questionable whether it is in good taste for a collector's catalogue to sound his own praises as an altruistic collector. There would seem to be a good deal of "fudge" in this. Mr. Evans, like other collectors, has probably at times driven sharp bargains, and has, perfectly legitimately, bought American pictures not only for his pleasure and possibly to encourage American art, but also to realise a good profit from them at a fitting period. The sale of the collection is more a matter of business than of American art encouragement, and catalogue makers should bear this in mind. There is a proper time for sentiment, and also a proper time for business. This would appear to be the time for business.

The arrest of Mr. David C. Preyer, publisher of an art journal, and also an art writer and critic, on the charge of criminal libel preferred by Henry W. Ranger, the landscape painter, has astonished the art world of New York. The opinion is generally expressed that Mr. Ranger could hardly have proceeded to such extreme measures simply because Mr. Preyer spoke disparagingly of his work, and that there must have been some motive not yet disclosed, other than the mere resentment of an artist offended by a critic's publicly expressed opinion. If this principle is allowed there will probably be frequent arrests for criminal libel of art writers and critics everywhere, while even musical and dramatic critics might be haled into court by aggrieved musicians and actors. This arrest raises the question of what is the value of criticism, if it is to be muzzled by threat or fear of the stigma of an arrest. The case comes up to-day in court, and its outcome will be watched with the greatest interest, for it involves a broad and wide-reaching question."

***

Henry W. Ranger was born in Central New York in 1858 and is self-taught. He belongs to no art societies, either at home or abroad, with the exception of the American Water Color Society. He has never been a competitor for official honors or medals. He is a man of aggressive, forceful personality, which is shown in his canvases, whose chief characteristics are depth and richness of tone, synthetic method and fullness and strength of color. He is in close sympathy with the masters of the Barbizon school, and his work of recent years, while virile and attractive, has been freely criticised as too directly influenced by the French painters, and especially Dupré, Rousseau, and Diaz, whom he greatly admires. It has been said of Thomas Moran that "he would have been a great master had he not studied Turner too closely." It might also be said of Ranger that he may become a great artist if he will try to paint other than under the influence of the masters of the Barbizon school.

An Alpine Rose.

Sweet rose that blooms in higher air,
On Alpine cliffs, by fields of snow,
Go thou to her I love, and bear
A breath from lands where roses blow.

Tell her my joyous feet have climbed
To heights where only eagles were,
To cliffs and rocks, that I might find
One little flower most worthy her.

Tell her, that by a little brook
I found thee growing one sweet day,
And when I, stooping, rose and took
Thee from the stem thou heardst me say:

"Sweet rose, dear rose, come go to her—
She'll press thee on her snowy breast,
And thou wilt feel her warm heart stir—
Oh, happy rose to be so blest!"

"And, if she give a kiss to thee,
And question with her eyes of blue,
Say yes, dear rose, say yes, for me,
He kissed me when he found me, too."

LIFE AT SEA.

Mr. Bullen's Autobiographical Volume "The Log of a Sea Waif."*

Mr. Frank Bullen, the author of these reminiscenes, is too well known as a writer of delightful sea stories to need any introduction. His present book is autobiographical, and covers the first four years of his sea life, which began when he was only a lad of twelve. The story of his life is written in such a strong, truthful, and convincing manner that it is more than probable his readers would have discovered for themselves that the book had a solid foundation in fact had its author not assured us that he had written—

Nothing but the truth, and, in most cases, gives the real names of ships and individuals. If the book, then, does not please it will be owing to my lack of discrimination between interesting and commonplace details, and not because the pictures given of life at sea in the forecastle are not faithful.

Mr. Bullen's preface shows most conclusively the too modest estimate he puts upon his literary ability, which is in reality very remarkable—asking himself in reference to writers of other sea stories, "Who, then, are you, that presumes to compete with these master magicians?" He thinks that our own period has been unusually full of books filled with the most charming sea pictures:

Writers like Kipling, Cutlyffe Hyne, Joseph Conrad, and Clark Russell, each in his own style, has presented us with a series of sea pictures that need not fear comparison with any nautical writer's work of any day, although they deal almost exclusively with the generally considered unromantic merchant service. * * * Having been for fifteen years a seafarer in almost every capacity except that of a master, * * * it has often occurred to me how little landsmen really know of the seaman's actual life. "Two Years Before the Mast," although written by an American, and of life on board an American merchantman, has long held undisputed sway as a classic upon the subject. And for the only reason, as it seems, that no serious attempt has been made by a Britisher to do the same thing for life in British ships.

Mr. Bullen closes his preface by "commending this 'Autobiography of a Nobody' to that tremendous tribunal, with whom lies the verdict of success or failure, and from whose fiat there is no appeal—to the public."

The opening chapter, "My First Ship," gives an extremely fascinating picture of a boy who did not choose the sea because of a prevailing epidemic of "going to sea," which sometimes runs through a community and is so hard upon those parents who have made other plans for their children. Mr. Bullen, indeed, "belonged to the ignoble company of the unwanted. In spite of hard usage, scanty food, and overwork, I ridiculously persisted in living, until at the approach of my twelfth year an eligible opening presented itself for me to go to sea. Being under no delusion whatever as to the prospect that awaited me, since I had known intimately those who had experienced all the vicissitudes of a sailor's life, I was not unduly elated at the idea."

The boy knew he would be sure of shelter and enough to eat, even though not of the best, so he shipped, not unwillingly, on a clumsy, worn-out vessel, a survival of an earlier age, commanded by his uncle, who was willing to take young Bullen as a cabin boy. The former was a thoroughly capable and perfectly honest old seaman, but stubborn and surly—soured by misfortune and cross-grained by nature, his honesty and good seamanship could not counterbalance his atrocious temper.

The whole chapter is unusually interesting, being full of details of the boy's first impression of the ship—his first ship. "Her cutwater was sunken between two swelling bows, like the cheeks of a conventional cherub. * * * Her bowsprit and jibboom soared into the air exactly like those of the galleons of old, and her three skimpy masts stood like broomsticks at different angles—the foremast especially, which looked over the bows."

There was so much dirt and confusion on deck—which had not been swept for a month—that the boy would have retreated had it been possible. Below, it was even worse, dark and dirty, the air so bad—a compound of bilge water, moldy stores, and unventilated sleeping quarters—that the boy was forced to get on deck again as rapidly as possible, but first having pointed out to him "a small locker by the ladder's foot, reminding me curiously of a rabbit-hutch, which was pointed out to me as my berth, but I naturally supposed it to be a place for my bag. How could I have dreamed it was also to be my chamber!" Later, after getting under way, and finding no other place to sleep, the boy "made just such a lair as a dog might, in the hutch that held my scanty stock of clothing, and, crowding into it, was soon in the land of perfect peace."

And so the chapter goes on, now describing the dividing of the crew into watches, now the pumping of the ship—always a decidedly hard and disagreeable operation. Again, telling of the cook, or "doctor's" coffee, "unlike any beverage called by that name ashore, even the fusty mixture sold at halfpenny a cup at street corners being quite luxurious in comparison with it; yet it was a godsend, boiling hot, with plenty of sugar in it, to those poor wretches with the quenchless thirst of many days' indulgence in the vilest liquor, making their throats like furred old drain pipes."

Mr. Bullen seems to have been a most unusual boy. Busy a great deal of the time, he yet felt miserable because there was no one he could ask the numberless questions about navigation and other sea matters that were constantly perplexing him.

But the sea itself was full of interest, * * * hanging spellbound over the side, gazing with evergrowing wonder and delight upon this marvelous world of abounding life. * * * There were no books on board, or reading matter of any kind, except the necessary works on navigation on the Captain's shelf, so it was just as well that I could take some interest in our surroundings, if I was not to die mentally, as most of the sailors seemed to have done. * * * I found to my amazement that they could tell me nothing of what I wanted to know; * * * they seemed totally ignorant of everything connected with the wonders of the ocean.

Mr. Bullen's description of the Sargasso Sea is most fascinating:

The constantly increasing masses of Gulf seaweed that, with all its delicate beauty of branch and bud, came drifting past our sides; * * * through the bewildering mazes of that aquatic forest moved an innumerable multitude of fish of every shape, size, and hue; while the branches themselves swarmed with crustacea. * * * I could have wished the day forty-eight hours long, but I was the only one on board that derived any pleasure from the snaillike progress we made.

The arrival at their destination—Demerara—on this first voyage gives Mr. Bullen a chance for a beautiful bit of descriptive writing, especially in his account of the natural scenery there:

The nights rival the days. During the absence of the moon the blue-black vault appears like a robe of imperial purple, besprent with innumerable diamonds of a lustre unknown to earth's feeble gems. * * * But when the full-orbed moon in a molten glow of purest silver, before which the eye shrinks almost with pain, traverses the purple concave, * * * the night becomes a sweeter, softer day, in which the men may sit at ease reading or working, as fancy dictates. They dare not sleep in that white glare, lest with distorted features and sightless eyeballs they vainly regret their careless disregard of the pale beam's power. And as the stately satellite settles slowly horizonward, or ascends majestically toward the zenith, how dazzling the mile-wide pathway of shimmering radiance she sheds along the face of the deep! The whalers, with more poetic feeling than one would expect, call it the "moon glade," as though she must needs spread a savannah of splendor for her solemn progress over the waste of ocean.

So far only the pleasanter side of life at sea has been touched upon in these selections, but the book is full of all sorts of stirring incident, the first voyage, indeed, ending in a mutiny, which resulted in the members of the old crew involved in it receiving a sentence of two months at hard labor, a new crew being shipped. Later a curious illness attacked all on board, causing the legs and feet to swell enormously, the trouble culminating in a suppurating wound, horribly painful and hard to cure. Next followed shipwreck, the old Arabella going ashore on a coral reef and becoming a total wreck. Here the men spent a number of days happily enough, until, one of the small boats having been repaired, they finally reached the nearest port.

So the book goes on, from one adventure to another, the boy experiencing all sorts of hardships and all kinds of brutal treatment, all of which will be found as exciting as a novel, but it is impossible to even attempt mentioning them all. At last came a time when the boy was adrift in Liverpool, "still so puny in size and delicate in appearance, I knew it would be no easy matter to persuade any one to employ me. * * * Besides, I was penniless. I had so little clothes, but what I was wearing, that I felt sure no boarding master would take me in on the chance of my paying him out of my advance note here." A dreadful time followed, but a happy chance meeting with the Captain of a fine ship not only proved the temporary help the boy so much desired, but was in reality the beginning of better days.

Those who follow Mr. Bullen through these four years of a varied and eventful career will find themselves amply repaid not only by the incidents described, but by the clear, forcible style of his narrative. Space must be found for Bullen's concluding words; his summing up of a sailor's—an ordinary seaman's—mental condition:

With the close of this voyage, I felt I was a boy no longer. I was getting more confident of my ability to hold my own in the struggle for life, and although I saw nothing before me but a dreary round of the drudgery of the merchant seaman's career before the mast, the prospect did not trouble me. I had no plans, no ambitions, nobody to work for, no one to encourage me to try for better things. I lived only for the day's need. My only trouble, the possible difficulty of getting a ship. Of the future, and of what it had in store for me, I thought nothing—cared nothing—and yet I was not unhappy.

Mr. Bullen, even as a boy, was wise enough to keep away from the ordinary pleasures of the sailor's life; visits to museums, picture galleries, and the theatre keeping him occupied while in port, at other and all times finding in good books an ever-increasing satisfaction. It is without doubt to these unusual tastes for a boy, and especially so in one who was also a sailor, that Mr. Bullen owes his present culture and prominence.

If the author's later adventures are as interesting as those contained in the present volume, may we not hope for a continuation of this story? The book is a well-printed volume of about 400 pages, containing several illustrations, the story being a worthy successor to "Idylls of the Sea" and "The Cruise of the Cachalot." Indeed, the present story may be said to exceed them in interest, which is certainly high praise.

Austin Dobson's Memoir Amplified and Reissued.*

First issued by Walter Scott in 1883 in the Great Writers Series, edited by Prof. Hugh Robertson, this perhaps the most thoroughly interesting brief life of Goldsmith that has just been published again, and is, we believe, the first American edition. It is the work of Austin Dobson, whose familiarity with and love for eighteenth century authors and knowledge of the literary history of that period make him particularly fitted to write of the author of "The Vicar of Wakefield." Beginning with Goldsmith's ascentry, the family being of English origin but emigrating to Ireland some time in the sixteenth century, it is said that the Goldsmith family have a marked mental likeness, being "all equally generous, credulous, simple, and improvident."

Oliver was the son of the Rev. Charles Goldsmith of Pallas, who was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. At the time of Oliver's birth his father, who was curate to his wife's uncle, the Vicar of Kilkenny West, had an income from his farm and curacy amounting in all to only £40 a year, "And passing rich on forty pounds a year." Later, on Mr. Green's death, Charles Goldsmith succeeded to the vacant rectory of Kilkenny West, taking up his residence at Lissoy, a little village between Ballymahon and Athlone. His house was connected with the highway by a long avenue of ash trees, and had a pleasant garden and orchard at the back. The new living was worth £200 a year, and here Charles Goldsmith lived in a kindly, hospitable way, which his son sketched later in the "Man in Black."

His education was above his fortune and his generosity greater than his education. Poor as he was, he had his flatterers still poorer than himself; for every dinner he gave them they returned him an equivalent in praise. * * * He told the story of the ivy tree, and that was laughed at; he repeated the jest of the two scholars and the one pair of breeches, and the company laughed at that, but the story of Jobby in the sedan chair was sure to set the table in a roar. Neither his practice nor his precepts were those that make rich men. Learning, he held, was better than silver or gold, and benevolence than either. In this way he brought up his children to be "mere machines of pity" and perfectly instructed them in the art of giving away thousands before they were taught the more necessary qualifications of getting a farthing.

Growing up under such influences, is it at all wonderful that Oliver Goldsmith was in money difficulties all the days of his short life? His happiest school days were those passed under the care of the Rev. Patrick Hughes of Edgeworthtown, a friend of the older Goldsmith. Mr. Hughes understood the boy and recognized his morbid, sensitive nature, under its disguise of superficial obtuseness. It is said that returning once from some holidays the boy unfortunately asked a practical joker as to the best house—meaning best inn—in the neighborhood, and was gravely directed by him to the abode of the local magnate, Squire Featherston; the succeeding events, for the boy did not discover until he was about leaving the next morning that he was at a private house, were afterward utilized in "She Stoops to Conquer."

Owing to his father's having mortgaged his farm and tithes until a marriage portion of £400 for his daughter Catherine could be paid, Oliver had to go up to Trinity College as a "sizar" or poor scholar, who at that time was educated, lodged, and fed for nothing, but had to perform certain menial offices, which were not pleasing to Goldsmith. His career at college was not at all remarkable, but after various ups and downs he finally received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1749, his college days coming to an end.

When Oliver returned home his father had lately died, his favorite brother, Henry, was curate and teacher of the village school, and his mother, who lived in a small cottage at Ballymahon, too poor to do anything for him. It was decided he must enter the Church, and, although Oliver raised many objections, he finally agreed to make the needful preparations. But, for some reason, he was refused acceptance as a clergyman, and must try a new vocation. He next became tutor, but with equally small success. Then it was decided the law was the proper calling, but on his way to London he met a sharper at Dublin, who won all his money—£50, which had been given him for the expenses of his journey—at cards, Oliver returning once more to the arms of his family. But now a relation, Dean Goldsmith of Cloyne, suggested medicine, and a new purse was made up by Oliver's uncle, brother, and sister, and in 1752 he once more set out to seek his fortune. His destination was Edinburgh, which he reached safely, becoming a member of the Medical Society of Edinburgh in 1753, attending lectures, &c., "but the record of his social qualities, his tale-telling, and his singing, is richer than the record of his studies." This residence in Edinburgh was followed by wanderings over the Continent, the journey lasting an entire year:

At the time of Golsmith's arrival in England * * * his previous career could certainly not be described as a success. If his school days had been but moderately promising, his college life might almost be called discreditable. He had tried many things and failed. He had estranged his sole remining parent; he had sorely taxed the patience of the rest of his relatives, and he had latterly been living as a wanderer on the face of the earth. This was his record in the past. And yet read in the light of his subsequent story, he had unconsciously gone through a course of training and accumulated a stock of experience of which little or nothing was to be lost. He had looked at sorrow close and learned to sympathize with poverty; he had known men and cities; he had studied character in its undress.

So the memoir goes on from Goldsmith's first employment in London as an apothe-

*OLIVER GOLDSMITH: A Memoir. By Austin Dobson. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. 1900. $1.25.

Then, too, the friendships of "Nolly" Goldsmith are here recorded; the Hornecks and particularly "The Jessamy Bride," Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Dr. Johnson, as well as Burke, Garrick, the immortal Boswell, and many others. We all remember how Garrick's impromptu was followed by "Retaliation," which contains such fine pen portraits of Garrick:

Here lies Nolly Goldsmith, for shortness called Noll,
Who wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll!

On the stage he was natural, simple, affecting,
'Twas only that when he was off he was acting.

That of Burke and Reynolds was equally fine. Then, too, one would like to dwell upon the Chambers, 2 Brick Court, Middle Temple—"a couple of reasonably sized old-fashioned rooms, with a third smaller room, or sleeping closet, * * * wilton carpets, blue marine festoon window curtains complete; Pembroke tables, 'a very large dressing glass,' and his friend Sir Joshua's 'Tragic Muse' in a gold frame," all suggesting the necessity for frequent visits to "Filby" so Goldsmith might be attired suitably to live up to his rooms.

Nor can we touch upon his many friendships, only adding one story of Dr. Johnson, perhaps the most devoted of them all. After Goldsmith's death, Johnson, hearing some busybodies running down the former's work, "rose with great dignity, looked them full in the face, and exclaimed, 'If nobody was suffered to abuse poor Goldy but those who could write as well, he would have few censors.'" American readers who have never seen this memoir have before them a great pleasure, as may be seen from Mr. Dobson's final summing up of Goldsmith's character:

Let not his frailties be remembered; he was a very great man; and, what is perhaps more to the purpose of the present memoir, he was assuredly a great writer. In the fifteen years over which his literary activity extended he managed to produce a record which has given him an unassailable position in English letters. Apart from mere hack work and compilation—hack work and compilation which in most cases he all but lifted to the level of a fine art—he wrote some of the best familiar verse in the language. In an age barren of poetry he wrote two didactic poems which are still among the memories of the old, as they are among the first lessons of the young. He wrote a series of essays which for style and individuality fairly hold their own between the best work of Addison and Steele on the one hand and the best work of Charles Lamb on the other. He wrote a domestic novel, unique in kind and as cosmopolitan as "Robinson Crusoe." Finally, he wrote two excellent plays, one of which, "She Stoops to Conquer," still stands in the front rank of the few popular masterpieces of English comedy.

Kipling and Buchanan.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Let me express my pleasure in the editorial comment in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW on Mr. Buchanan's article in The Contemporary. It was to be hoped we should have to seek far for such a lack of fine feeling as is shown, for example, in Mr. Buchanan's allusion to the "Dedication" to the "Ballads." If Mr. Kipling lacks deep feeling, where among living writers may we hope to find it? You quote as an example of his strong feeling the envoi to the "Departmental Ditties." Let me suggest another, the verses beginning:

And they were stronger hands than mine.
That digged the ruby from the earth.

It would give me pleasure to see in your columns a word of protest against the lightly assumed attitude of depreciation which certain reviewers have adopted toward what Mr. Kipling has published within the year. Whether or not he has touched his highest level is the tone of this criticism kindly or even discriminating? Mr. Kipling's work can assuredly stand or fall on its own merits, but is this attitude quite creditable to the American people, and will not its chief effect be to suggest the worthlessness of an interest so quickly changed to ill-considered condemnation?

QUERIES AND ANSWERS.

Readers will permit us again to remind them of the necessity for inclosing their full names and addresses with letters intended for this department of THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW. Our mails are now heavily freighted with "queries and answers." We are glad to get them and shall welcome all that our readers are pleased to send—all, that is, that are not trivial.

"M. C. S.," New York City: "Writing in answer to James Price, New York, I would say that, judging from the comments of English periodicals at the time of her death in 1883, Miss Emily S. Holt's historical stories were exceptionally accurate in their presentation of the life of the times of which she wrote. In answer to another correspondent (F. Cornell) I inclose these verses, written by E. R. Sill:

In the deep night a little bird
Wakens, or dreams he is awake;
Cheerily clear one phrase is heard,
And you almost hear the morning break.

In the deep dark of loss and wrong
One face like a lovely dawn will thrill,
And all night long at my heart a song
Suddenly stirs and then is still."

Miss E. St. J. Seaman, 123 Pacific Street, Brooklyn: "What is the value of Mrs. Rowson's 'Charlotte Temple,' published by Fisher & Brother of Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, with no date?"

The first edition of "Charlotte Temple" was published in London in 1790. The first American edition appeared in Philadelphia in 1794. ("Printed by D. Humphreys for M. Carey.") These editions have some little value; the edition owned by our correspondent (and probably printed about 1810) has none.

Adam Weiffenbach, 2,039 Washington Avenue, New York City: "Please inform me in what public library I could find 'New York in the Revolution'?"

The New York Public Library, Astor, or Lenox branches.

T. L. Watson, 93 Sheperd Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "What is the value of a German Bible of 1656?"

About $10. Only the very earliest editions of the Bible in German possess value.

"F. J. M.," Newark, N. J.: "You would oblige me greatly by informing me through the columns of THE SATURDAY REVIEW whether or not the following volumes are of any particular value: 'Chartism,' Thomas Carlyle, London, 1840; 'Black Riders,' Crane, limited edition, London, 1896; 'Countess Kathleen,' W. B. Yeats, London, 1892; 'Catalogue of the Library of H. B. Humphrey,' Cambridge, 1871, priced; 'Nothing to Wear,' William Allen Butler, New York, (Rudd & Carleton,) 1857, illustrated by Hoppin; 'Two Millions,' William Allen Butler, New York, (Appleton,) 1858; 'Selections from the Works of Sylvester Genin,' 8vo, New York, 1855, engravings; 'De Animi Immortalitate,' Isaac Hawkins Browne, London, 1811, presentation copy, and 'Cotoni Posthuma,' (reprint Goldschmidt) of Cotton's 'Antiquarian Researches,' 1679.) Edinburgh, 1884."

They would bring at auction an average of 75 cents apiece.

A. Von W. Leslie, Waco, Texas: "H. H. Waldo, Rockford, Ill., who wishes a copy of Dwight's 'Columbia, Columbia, to Glory Arise,' will find the poem printed in Stedman and Hutchinson's 'Library of American Literature,' which is easy of access in almost any public library."

"L. D. B.," New York City: "Has a clean copy of Zola's 'J'Accuse,' which was printed in the Paris Aurore of Jan. 13, 1898, any value to amateurs?"

At the time of the Dreyfus trial it would have had considerable interest. Now its interest is only slight.

"A. L.," St. John's College, Washington, D. C.: "I would like to know where I can get works or articles on the late John Gilmary Shea. I am writing an essay on him, and find it difficult to obtain matter even at the Congressional Library."

There is an article on Shea by M. F. Vallette in The Catholic World for April, 1892. Our correspondent has probably such sources of information as Allibone and Appleton.

Miss Elizabeth Kellogg, Avondale, Cincinnati, Ohio: "Will you kindly direct me toward such information as is accessible to the reading public about Kenneth Grahame, author of 'The Golden Age,' &c., and very greatly oblige?"

There is little to say about Kenneth Grahame, save that he is Secretary of the Bank of England and a delightful author.

"Blue Grass," Louisville, Ky.: "Please tell me where I can get James Lane Allen's books and the prices?"

"The Choir Invisible," Macmillan, illustrated edition, $2.50; "A Kentucky Cardinal," illustrated edition, Harper & Brothers, $1; "Aftermath," (continuation of "A Kentucky Cardinal,") Harpers, $1; "Flute and Violin, and Other Kentucky Tales and Romances," Harpers, 75 cents; "Two Gentlemen of Kentucky," Harpers, 50 cents; "The Blue Grass Region of Kentucky," Harpers, $1.50.

"E. F. J.," Brooklyn, N. Y.: "What is a recent book on manners, &c., for men?"

Mrs. Humphrey's "Manners for Men," Mansfield & Wessels, 1,135 Broadway, 1898, 50 cents.

L. Otway, St. Louis, Mo.: "Kindly tell me something about Arthur O'Shaughnessy, the poet?"

He was born in London March 14, 1844, and educated privately. In June, 1861, he was appointed an assistant in the library of the British Museum, and in August, 1863, was promoted to the natural history department. His first literary success was his "Epic of Women," 1870, a volume of exceptional promise. His "Lays of France," 1872, was followed by "Music and Moonlight," 1874, and a posthumous volume, "Songs of a Worker," 1881. In 1875 appeared "Toyland," written with his wife, Eleanor Marston, (whom he married in 1873,) the daughter of Dr. Westland Marston, and sister of the blind poet, Philip Bourke Marston. A memoir of him, by Dr. Garnett, appears in Vol. VIII. of Miles's "Poets and Poetry of This Century," and in 1894 Mrs. Moulton published his "Life, with Selections from His Poems." A sketch and appreciation, by William Sharp, may be found on Pages 394-5 of "Lyra Celtica," Edinburgh, 1896, where his lovely "Fountain of Tears" is reprinted. His full name was Arthur William Edgar O'Shaughnessy. He died in London, Jan. 30, 1881.

Wanted and to Exchange.

It is still necessary to remind readers who send letters for this department of THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW that their full names and addresses should be given. We are pleased to note the wide interest taken in the department and are glad always to receive our readers' letters, but such letters cannot be printed unless the writers' names and addresses are given.

deal with books of value and interest. Most letters do this already, but some do not.

C. Walter Cushier, 308 West Twenty-second Street, New York City: "I would like to obtain 'Handbook of British Fungi,' by M. C. Cooke. 2 volumes."

John Hossack, 105 Princeton Avenue, Jersey City, N. J.: "I would like to hear from any one having pictures illustrating methods of work and machinery of production in use during the first fifty years of the present century."

O. S. Haas, 42 East Ninth Street, New York City: "I would like to dispose of an extremely scarce book, 'Obsequies to the Memory of Mr. Edward King,' 1638. Th. Buck & R. Daniel, Cambridge, 1638, containing Milton's 'Lycidas,' first edition."

Our correspondent should not part with his "Lycidas" for a song. Two copies were sold at auction in 1897. One brought £60, the other £70.

Clifton B. Gates, Jamestown, N. Y.: "I wish to sell an artist's Japan edition of Triumphs of Modern Art, Copy No. 103, and the same of World's Masterpieces of Modern Painting, Copy No. 58, in portfolios, with etchings and water colors as published."

J. Orr Kyle, 59 West Thirty-fifth Street, New York City: "I have duplicates of some numbers of the following magazines: 'Magazine of American History,' 'Philistine,' 'Chap-Book,' 'The Bibelot,' 'English Ex Libris Journal.' I will exchange or buy in order to complete my sets. I have also a lot of early copies of Harper's Magazine in numbers that I would exchange for any of the above."

Maurice H. Rosenzweig, 212 Clinton Street, New York City: "I wish to exchange with any of the readers of the SATURDAY REVIEW the following books, all bound in cloth: Charlotte Bronte's 'Vilette,' (illustrated;) Cooper's 'Sea Tales,' (first few pages torn out,) and 'Last of the Mohicans,' Disraeli's 'Lothair,' Hope's 'Father Stafford,' Benjamin Harrison's 'Speeches,' A. C. Lust's 'A Test of Grace,' (just published;) Mrs. Burnett's 'His Grace of Osmonde,' Louis Pendleton's 'Lost Prince Almon,' Verne's 'Mysterious Island,' Munchausen's 'Tales.' I would like to exchange these for standard authors. No novels. Essays and poetry preferred."

NAPOLEON AT ST. HELENA.
The Original Record made by Napoleon's Physician, Dr. O'Meara.
DR. O'MEARA, author of the famous volume, "Napoleon at St. Helena," left a journal of his daily intercourse with Napoleon in exile, less than half of which was drawn upon in his published work. The original journal, containing upwards of 180,000 words, was bequeathed by Dr. O'Meara to a friend, by whose heirs it has been placed in the hands of the Editors of The Century, and extracts from its pages will appear, beginning in the present number. The journal abounds in passages of the greatest interest, as bearing on the character and opinions of Napoleon, including matter which was suppressed by Dr. O'Meara at the time of the publication of his book in 1822. It details the life and conversation at Longwood without reserve.

THE first of a most entertaining series of articles. The author of "No. 5 John Street" is thoroughly familiar with the life of the French capital, and Mr. André Castaigne, who is making the pictures, himself a Frenchman, is thoroughly at home in Paris.
The first article describes official Paris, and the illustrations include scenes in the Chamber of Deputies, a ball in the Elysée Palace, the crowning of a Cardinal, night view of the Hôtel de Ville during a municipal ball, etc. Industrial Paris, or "Paris of the Faubourgs," will be the subject of the second article, with pictures of wine trucks at the wine market, collecting customs at a barrier, girls leaving a factory, etc. Four other papers will complete the series, and they will be followed by an article on the Paris Exposition, with pictures by Castaigne. The latter's illustrations of the Chicago Fair remain the most artistic pictorial record of those beautiful scenes.

Essays by Prof. Trent.*

Professor Trent, like Mr. Burroughs, has been stirred to a criticism of criticism by M. Brunetière's formal and austere philosophy. Like Mr. Burroughs, too, he accepts Arnold's idea of disinterested search after the excellent as the critic's most important function, and decides with him that it takes all sorts and conditions of critics to appreciate literature as a whole, but for self expression in criticism he would substitute self-effacement. His ideal critic is one who can put himself in the place of readers differing in culture and intelligence and discern the appeal made to them by their favorite books. This method makes it difficult to cherish vital preferences or a stimulating personal view of books; on the other hand, it is possible to gain from it the impartiality and emancipation of taste at which Mr. Burroughs says we should aim. The point upon which Prof. Trent lays most stress is the necessity of considering what he calls the "emotive" quality of a book without much reference to its intellectual qualities or deficiencies, "not much positive thought or intellectual power pure and simple" being necessary to literature as distinguished from "stuff," he thinks. Briefly this means, we suppose, that a book is "literature" if it move hearts, whether the hearts happen to belong to university professors or to Bowery factory girls. The Divine Comedy may be a higher grade of literature than the ballad of Little Billie, but neither excludes the other, and if the critic sees the charm of both he is the better guide for the public; or, in Prof. Trent's own words, he "sympathizes with the literary tastes of people of inferior culture" to "be able to help them to rise in the scale of taste and intelligence." Provided the critic's intellectual standard can bear the strain, this benevolent intent can at least do no harm to his readers, and he himself can get much more fun from his work for adopting a democratic method. If, however, he cannot claim the "broad culture" of which, as Prof. Trent truly says, "our teachers and journalistic critics are rarely possessed," he is in some danger of losing his perspective and falling into the Duke of Arden's mistake of seeing good in everything. Nor would Prof. Trent's formula for determining the presence of the literary quality in a composition help him materially toward just estimates. This amazing formula is worth quoting in full and runs as follows:

Nothing belongs to real literature unless it consists of written words that constitute a carrying statement which makes sense, arranged rhythmically, euphoniously, and harmoniously, and so chosen as to connote an adequate number of ideas and things the suggestion of which will call up in the reader sustained emotions which do not produce undue tension and in which the element of pleasure predominates, on the whole, over that of pain.

Every term of this description, Prof. Trent adds, should be kept in mind, "so that we may consciously apply it as a test to any piece of writing about the literary character of which we are in doubt."

We confess to some degree of doubt as to the literary character of Prof. Trent's essay on Shelley, certain passages of which certainly produce "undue tension" of emotion on the part of the reader. When we read "Here, alas! was the rock on which Shelley split—he had no common sense," or, "Poor Shelley—he was always, to use a homely metaphor, jumping from the frying pan into the fire with regard to the 'company he kept,' especially the women," or "Shelley is like an aeolian harp—the winds of his sad fate play upon him and immortal, weird, sad, and haunting melodies float away to us and enter our souls and abide there," we feel that Prof. Trent has at least escaped the defect of a too "intellectualized" mode of expression, to run perhaps to the other extreme. His impressive reiteration that Shelley—himself like his own maniac, "a nerve o'er which did creep the else unfelt oppression of this earth"—lacked common sense, reminds one of Mr. Freude's admission that Henry VIII. lacked delicacy.

On the whole, Prof. Trent's ideas about criticism seem to us rather more sound than his application of them. His paper on "The Spirit of Literature" is the embodiment of excellent advice to teachers and critics, and his conviction that teachers of literature would succeed better if they read more and criticised less, can hardly fail to carry weight with the more intelligent of his readers.

FRANCIS LIEBER.

A Biography That Is a Thesis Upon His Work and Influence.*

This biography of Dr. and Prof. Lieber is more than a mere account of his life; it is a thesis upon the work and influence of one of the profoundest scholars and most substantial public counselors that ever was lost to Europe and gained by America. Born in Berlin in 1800, as one of the younger sons of a prosperous iron dealer, who was soon overwhelmed by sacrifices he made for the country, his youth was passed amid the turmoil that followed Napoleon's onslaught upon Prussia, and he imbibed as a mere child that intense hatred of tyranny and despotism and that passionate desire for personal and political liberty which were the mainsprings of his long and active life. It was the stress of soul as well as the bodily hardships that he was compelled to endure in his youth that made him, as writer and teacher, the living force for liberty and the higher law that he was.

As one of the earliest students of Jahn, the originator of the German Gymnasia and Turners movement, he imbibed the ardency of that enthusiast for patriotism. At the age of only thirteen he saw his elder brother going off to resist the new uprising of the French power, and within a year, when scarcely fourteen, he himself marched with the Colberg regiment, only to be struck down at Waterloo, where his life was saved in the hospital almost as by a miracle.

Then followed the terrible rule of Austria and the effort of Metternich to crush out of Germany every thought of freedom. The lad's education was restricted and interrupted by governmental decrees and police hounding, increasing in annoyance and severity year after year, until it became almost unbearable, and occasional periods of imprisonment were welcomed as periods of peace for study. When Greece made its abortive rising for liberty in 1822, Lieber was one of a crowd of young enthusiasts who stole out of Germany and ran to her aid, only to be cruelly disappointed in the temper and substance of the people and cause which they sought to champion. Struggling in illness and penury to get home again, young Lieber fortunately secured the friendship of the great Niebuhr in Rome, and this resulted in years of association and the highest guidance in the direction of the historical studies in which afterward he himself became so eminent. Upon his return to Berlin he found himself so watched and harassed by a suspicious Government that the conditions finally became unendurable, and he fled from the country to England. Here he supported himself by teaching, &c., and made acquaintances which led to an offer of a position at Harvard, where he was to conduct the newly organized gymnasium and evening school. This was gladly accepted, and with vast enthusiasm this young, poetic lover of freedom entered the New World, and found himself not only welcomed, but lifted to heights of joy by the atmosphere of liberty, which he could now breathe unrestrained.

The Harvard work soon came to an end, and then Lieber proposed and found a publisher for the "Encyclopedia Americana," which he edited, largely wrote, and carried to success during the next few years. Among his contributors and co-editors were the leading men of letters in the country at that time, and this encyclopedia was for a long time the most authoritative American work of reference. It was finished, and again Lieber, now married to an English lady, was out of employment, and earnestly seeking a permanent place where he might have leisure enough beyond gaining a livelihood to write the books upon history and economics which had already taken shape in his busy brain, and for which the years of varied study of American institutions required by his editorial work had been a most fertile preparation. This opportunity came when he was elected to the chair of Political History and Economics in the South Carolina State College. In this position, which he regarded as an intellectual exile, and where the admiration and honor in which he was held as a scholar became more and more tempered with hatred for his anti-slavery and anti-Calvinism views, he remained twenty years, and during that time wrote three great books, "Political Ethics," "Legal and Political Hermeneutics," and "Civil Liberty and Self-Government." "It is upon these," says Mr. Harley, "that his fame will chiefly rest." The disunion sentiment rampant in South Carolina and other things finally made Dr. Lieber's position intolerable, and in 1857 he came to New York and entered upon that brilliant career as Professor of History and Political Science at Columbia which had so large a part in establishing the status of the modern university. This appointment was a source of great pride and satisfaction to him, and he worked with extraordinary assiduity as well as largeness of purpose to make it all that his high ideal of education demanded. Nevertheless, his department was abolished ten years later, and Dr. Lieber was given the Chair of Constitutional History and Public Law in the newly founded Law School, where he remained until his sudden death from heart disease in 1872.

Mr. Harley devotes a special chapter to Lieber's views on education, a high ideal of which he regarded as of great political significance. One of his earlier essays was upon the relation between education and crime, and he was in favor of the State undertaking the utmost possible breadth of public instruction. This chapter ought to be of great interest and value to teachers, and no publicist can afford not to read Lieber's philosophy of history, an admirable statement of which is contained in the present volume.

It was, however, in the more practical field of law, and especially of military law, that Lieber made himself publicly felt. He was constantly consulted by the Presidents and leading politicians of his time, and at the time of his death was umpire in the tedious settlements of the vast Mexican claims affair. His patriotism was mightily aroused by the civil war, and not only were his voice and pen forcibly on the side of the Union, but two of his sons were officers in the Northern Army, one of whom is now Judge Advocate General, United States Army. Great need was soon felt for a code of legal instructions for the guidance of officers in their conduct of military operations, small as well as great. Nothing of the sort existed, and the Government requested Dr. Lieber to prepare something. His success was so great that this code has remained, not only the military law of this country for its soldiers in actual service, but has formed the basis for similar European codes. It is founded upon the broadest principles of justice and equity, and insists upon the need of recognizing and preserving individual rights and responsibilities beneath the temporary relation of a soldier to his flag, or a belligerent to his foe.

Mr. Harley tells us that so universal were its principles and conclusions that but a single case arose in the course of the Franco-Prussian war that could not be settled by the rules of those "Instructions." This critical review of Dr. Lieber's work is timely and valuable.

The Fish We Eat.*

A very handsome volume, and well illustrated, with the title, "The Preservation of Fishery Products for Food," has just been issued by the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries. There are the six processes for the preservation of fish: The keeping of them alive, refrigeration, desiccation, canning, pickling, and smoking.

Certain fish, such as the cod, are taken at great depths. When brought to the surface, the water pressure no longer existing, the cod may be said to burst. The air bladder explodes. The cod are, then, dead as soon as they come to the surface. Of course, as food they are excellent; but the question arises, How can this strangulation be prevented? There seems to be no remedy for the cod, but this method for keeping the life in certain deep-swimming fish, as the red snappers and groupers, is most ingenious. Actual trachyotomy is carried on. A metal tube ¼ inch in diameter is forced into the fish, a little beyond the pectoral fin, the pressure on the air bladder is lessened, and the fish, thus relieved, can be kept alive. The method is ingenious, but certainly cruel.

A curious way of keeping alive an oyster is to muzzle it. Wire-bound oysters have, so it seems, a fairly long lease on life. Philadelphians will be glad to learn that the terrapin may be frozen in a cake of ice and be quite comfortable. Many are the methods in use for the preservation of shad. There are not less than 52,500,000 pounds of shad marketed annually coming from the Atlantic Coast of the United States. A very large proportion of these fish is sent into distant parts of the country. Cold storage has been brought to a great state of efficiency in this country. In regard to natural and artificial ice, the following, coming from the United States expert, is worthy of notice:

Natural ice being less cold, is generally more desirable for shipping fish than artificial ice, since it gives off its coldness quickly, and the moisture coming in contact with the fish, acts as a good conductor, and the fish is more rapidly cooled. But as artificial ice lasts longer, it is better for long distances, providing the fish have been thoroughly chilled before being placed in the shipping box.

The duration of the ice in the family refrigerator follows the same rules.

The world's annual production of dried codfish amounts to about 600,000,000 pounds. We have been every year exporting codfish worth some $737,000. Many curious fish products are mentioned in the volume under notice. There is the industrious Chinaman on the California coast, who prepares dried shrimp for his home market. He is so little wasteful that he keeps the shells of the shrimps and sends them to China, where they are used for manure. In Oregon we used to manufacture a very toothsome product made from the spinal column of the sturgeon. It found a market in Russia. The sea slug some years ago was prepared on the coast of Florida for the Chinese and Japanese. Fancy a business done in dried or smoked catfish! The "bloater" is the most appetizing of all methods of preparing the herring. How may you "bloat" a herring? The entire mystery is divulged in the work before us. Very clever was that party who tried to convert menhaden into sardines. But the menhaden was obstinate and refused to be converted.

It is an eminently wise thing to know what you eat and how food is prepared and as far as fish go Mr. Charles H. Stevenson tells all that is discoverable. Are we to disdain that perfect gentleman, Pliny? Did he not give us the method in use in his time for the preparation of "garum"? Anchovy paste sinks into utter insignificance when compared with garum, for Pliny quotes its price. Twenty pounds of it were worth "a thousand pieces of money."

Links Between Shiplake, England and the United States.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Dec. 23, 1899, your editor said some unsolicited but kind words of me and my works. A previous introduction to my brethren in the United States was from the critique of my book, "Passages from the Diaries of Mrs. P. Lybbe Powis," in the same paper, of Nov. 4. These sort of wireless telephonings between Shiplake and the United States being established, I fancy the readers of THE SATURDAY REVIEW may be interested to learn that between this small but romantically situated parish in the Old World and the mighty New World across the seas exist links of intense interest in their history.

In the year 1620 Edmund Plowden of Shiplake and his wife, Mary, née Marriner, sailed for America with a numerous company of emigrants, to establish the plantation of New Albion, as it was called. Edmund Plowden was the second son of Francis Plowden of Shiplake Court, Oxon., and Plowden, Salox, a very ancient Roman Catholic family, the first member of whom, who was seated at Shiplake, was Edmund Plowden, the celebrated lawyer, he being granted the estate and manor of Shiplake by Queen Elizabeth on the seizure of Sir Francis Englefield's estate, Shiplake forming a portion of it.

Edmund Plowden returned to England from Virginia in 1630. During his absence from England his sister, Anne, had married Sir Arthur Lake, son of Sir Thomas Lake, who had been Secretary to James I. and previous to that Clerk of the Signet to Queen Elizabeth. The influence of his new brother-in-law procured Edmund's introduction to Lord Strafford, and he appears to have accompanied Strafford to Ireland. In the year 1632 Edmund Plowden petitioned King Charles I., through Lord Strafford, for a grant of the territory of New Albion. The petition runs:

Near the continent of Virginia, sixty leagues from James City, without the Bay of Chesapeake there is a habitable and fruitful island, named Plowden, otherwise Long Isle, about sixty leagues from the main, near Del a Warre Bay, whereof your Majesty nor any of your progenitors were ever possessed of any estate, &c., * * * to enable the petitioners, their heirs, and assigns forever to enjoy the said Isle and the forty leagues square of the adjoining continent, as in a nature of a County Palatine, or body politick; by the name of New Albion, to be held of your Majesty's Crown of Virginia, and with such additions, privileges, and dignities therein, to be given to Sir Edmund Plowden, like has been heretofore granted to Sir George Calvert, knight, in Newfoundland, together with the usual grants and privileges that other colonies have for governing, &c., and we agree to settle with 500 inhabitants.

This petition was favorably received, and a royal warrant at Oatlands July 24, 1632, was issued under the Great Seal of England and signed by Sir John Coke, granting all that had been asked for. Between 1632 and 1634 Sir Edmund Plowden was engaged in fulfilling the conditions of the warrant, and various indentures for colonizing the territory in question were executed and enrolled in Dublin and in St. Mary's in Maryland, America. Having completed the conditions, Edmund Plowden was granted a charter, enrolled in Dublin, in seventeen pages folio, bearing date June 21, 1634. In this charter, after grant of land was specified, Edmund Plowden was permitted to confer honors upon the well-deserving citizens and inhabitants of the new province, and "to cut and stamp different pieces of gold such as shall be lawful, current, and acceptable to all the inhabitants." He was made a peer of Ireland as Earl Plowden, and Governor of the New Province of "New Albion." He was termed in the charter "Earl of Albion," also "Earl Palatine," and remainder was made to his eldest son, Lord Francis Plowden, and his two younger sons, George and Thomas. Earl Plowden now proceeded to New Albion and remained there several years. He resided principally at the Manor of Watsesset. He seems to have made an excellent Governor, as it is stated—

Plowden offered the fullest freedom and protection to all, and gave his voice in favour of mildness, charity, and love, and he deserves to be ranked with the benefactors of our race and New Albion is entitled to a higher place in the human progress than is often allotted to older and greater and more fortunate States.

How Edmund Plowden came to be dispossessed of New Albion, the few remaining relics of those days left, and other events relating to another link between Shiplake and the States must be left to another day.

EUROPE AFRAID TO ATTACK BRITAIN

THE GOVERNMENT IS SAFE

But the Parliamentary Session Promises to Be Stormy.

Disgust at Mr. Chamberlain's Subserviency to Rhodes and Beit—Ruskin's Popularity Less Great Than Supposed.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—"As the fleets and armies of England went forth to consolidate arbitrary power, the sound of war everywhere else on the earth died away. Kings sat still in awe and nations turned to watch the issue."

With these words your historian Bancroft closes the fifty-second chapter of his "History of the United States." The words exactly describe the world's attitude to-day toward this appalling conflict in South Africa. Strife is hushed among the nations, and throughout the earlier part of this week, while we waited for news from Buller, our enemies on the Continent almost ceased to abuse us.

When at the end of the week a brief moment of exultant hope was converted again into gloom and doubt there was less disposition shown abroad to jeer at us than has hitherto been customary. They all hate us, doubtless, but all begin to recognize that wiping out Britain as a great power could not take place without shaking thrones and dominions the world over.

***

THE CZAR WANTS PEACE.

For some weeks past we have been hearing much about Russia's designs upon Afghanistan, and busy newspaper correspondents gather up for our consumption rumors of extensive movements of Russian troops toward Herat, accompanied by siege trains and extraordinary amounts of ammunition.

These may all be true, but I doubt it. Russian soldiers and bureaucrats would unquestionably be delighted to do something toward checkmating us in Persia and on the frontiers of India, but I am more and more satisfied that the Czar means to have peace, because he is so intent upon developing his immense empire by means of railways and industrial undertakings of all kinds.

And neither Russia nor her ally, France, would care to see Great Britain replaced by Germany as the dominant moral and military force of Europe. We have our uses, they recognize, although they love us not.

To tell the truth, however, little attention is being paid by us at present to anything happening in the world, except on the battle grounds around Ladysmith. We have almost forgotten Lord Methuen and his curious inactivity north of the Modder River in our anxiety to see Gen. White's beleaguered army released and the Burgher forces driven back over the frontier. This accomplished, many hope that the end of the war would be in sight, and therefore all thoughts are concentrated upon the titanic conflict being waged among the eastern foothills of the Drakenberg Mountains.

But our hopes are not so strong as they were two days ago, and the feeling of dissatisfaction with the War Office increases daily in intensity. Only belated news reaches us, and even that in the most fragmentary and tantalizing shape.

***

FRAGMENTARY WAR NEWS.

We cannot form a guess of what is really doing all along the line of fire. Last night, for instance, a list of casualties was published in a manner that led the cursory reader to suppose that it represented our losses in the storming of Spion Kop. But it does not seem to be that at all. The regiments named in the return were part of Gen. Lyttleton's brigade, which had been put in charge of Potgieter's Ford, a vital point in our line of communications between Frere, Chieveley, and the front. The same day brought its news of some losses at Chieveley itself, and later information, quite as obscure and illusive, compels us to infer that the enemy has been making more or less determined efforts to break through our line of communications at both points.

Should this inference prove to be correct, and it can only be wrong on the supposition that Gen. Warren was so hard pressed as to require assistance from Lyttleton at the risk of a break in our communications, then the position of Gen. Buller's forces, scattered as they are among the hills and dells along a front of some twenty-five miles, is one of no small peril.

This will be sufficient to indicate to you the ground of our intense anxiety. Whether by design or accident, the republicans of the Transvaal and Orange Free State have succeeded in drawing us into a country where their undisciplined fighters can act with enormous advantage against our troops, and no civilian can possibly realize what the strain is to keep our men supplied with food and ammunition at the front.

***

BULLER'S RETREAT POSSIBLE.

Unless Gen. Buller succeeds within the next few days in breaking through the Boers' entrenchments, and so far threatening the routes by which they can go home as to compel them to take flight, it is by no means improbable that the destruction of his baggage animals may alone be sufficient to oblige him to fall back behind the Tugela.

Should that catastrophe occur Ladysmith must surrender, because, in spite of its brave resistance, and the bold words sent out to the world about its impregnability, its population and troops are all now at starvation point, if not past it.

In circumstances like these, when no authentic cheering news comes from any point, unless we may regard Gen. French's movements around the Boers at Colesberg as something suggestive of a turning of the tide, Parliament meets next Tuesday to commence a session that promises to be one of the stormiest of her Majesty's reign. Not that there will be any opposition powerful enough to throw the Government out. Its defeat can only occur should our armies in South Africa be driven to retreat, and even then I am doubtful whether the Ministry would go without being forced to first submit itself to the judgment of the country. Nobody wants its job, and, as I have before explained, the Opposition is completely disorganized, split into fragments composed of the Imperialist Liberals, the peace-at-any-price men, the Irishmen full of rebellious words, the Socialists, and some few men of sense.

COURTNEY A PROBABLE LEADER.

It looks as if the Right Hon. Leonard H. Courtney might emerge for a time as leader of the malcontents drawn from all parties, but disinterested and high minded as he is, he can never become the leader of a great party in the country, because he is a man of too much singleness of mind and independence of character to submit fully to party discipline

But just because parties are disorganized to an extent that makes the Ministry safe, criticism will have a scope greater than usual in debates. Angry Tories will feel themselves as free to pummel the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Lord Lansdowne, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer as the wildest Radical of them all. The policy of the war will be attacked, also the finances of the Ministry and the administration of the War Office, and efforts will be made from many quarters of the House to get at the truth about Chamberlain's alleged complicity with Rhodes in the Jameson raid.

Since the publication of that fragmentary correspondence in the Indépendance Belge, one can see that a ferment of wrath has been getting up in the minds of politicians of all sections over this business, and this mental attitude was fairly described by Mr. Courtney in a speech the other day as one of disgust. People are disgusted, not merely because Chamberlain seems to have known what was going on, and to have been too complacent to check it, but even more perhaps at the exhibition made of the Colonial Office's subserviency to the Rhodes and Beit faction. This was pushed so far as to allow the Chartered Company to pack the committee of inquiry into the raid in its own interests.

We know well enough that this kind of thing is frequently done in our Parliamentary life, but we do not like it to come before the public eye. Then it is a scandal, to be resented, denounced, and if possible rooted out, till the public forgets.

THE DEATH OF MR. RUSKIN.

Much has been made in the newspapers this week of the passing away of John Ruskin. Reading what they say might give you the idea that widespread popular sorrow has been felt at his death. This is not so. Ruskin was all his life the prophet of the select, not of the multitude. His curious periodical, "Fors Clavigera," was professedly issued for the benefit of workingmen, but comparatively few of that class read it, subscribed for it, or even knew of its existence.

In the world of art Ruskin had supreme influence along certain lines, but art is not a subject that fascinates the common people, and his excursions into the domain of politics and political economy struck one too much as if a knight of ancient chivalry had come back to tilt against a battery of modern artillery to bring round to him the general sympathy of the multitude.

Partly, however, Ruskin had himself to blame for the circumscribed range of his influence. Being a man of great wealth, at least down to a comparatively recent period, he was able to indulge in all kinds of fancies, and one of those fancies took the shape of discontent with the ordinary methods of book publishing.

That a book should be advertised and sent round to the press for notices became abhorrent to Ruskin's spirit, so he took his works out of the hands of Smith, Elder & Co., and for some time refused to allow his "Modern Painters," his "Stones of Venice," and others of his greater works to be reprinted at all. Such new things as he issued were for a considerable period to be obtained only from his friend and former amanuensis George Allen, who lived in the village of Orpington, Kent. Ordinary booksellers had often difficulty in obtaining copies of such books and pamphlets, and for some years the volumes were only issued in elaborate and expensive bindings, gratifying to the eyes of people of taste, but at prices by no means popular. Toward the close of Ruskin's life this rigor was relaxed. Reprints were allowed, still at high prices, however, and Mr. Allen developed into a London publisher of dainty and tastefully gotten up books by Ruskin and others.

Naturally, however, a system that prevented Ruskin's works from being brought under the public eye greatly helped to limit public knowledge of his writings, and only the cultured, and not all of that class, recognized him as, if not the greatest of critics and wisest of philosophers, at least as one of the greatest masters of English prose the country has ever known.

Ruskin's best works, taking all things into account, are to my mind "The Stones of Venice" and "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," but some of his minor volumes of essays, although occasionally wild in their ideas, are yet noble in their moral elevation and exquisite in their literary style. It is quite probable that now when he is gone, and cheap reissues of his books at popular prices will become possible, his influence will be greater and more widespread among the people than it ever was during his life.

INDIAN WAR CONTRIBUTIONS.

I must not burden you further with the Indian famine, heartbreaking though the news about it continues to be, but I should like to warn your readers against accepting too implicitly the statements circulated about the big sums which Indian native Princes are subscribing to our war funds, and about the volunteer troops being equipped in India for service in South Africa.

From what I know of Indian ideas, and I may say even of the views of Indian Princes, I do not believe that these subscriptions were spontaneous. Pressure is being put upon them to show their loyalty, and that at a time which could not be more ill chosen. Every rupee the wealthy people of India can find or spare ought to be devoted to relief of the famine sufferers, whose numbers promise soon to exceed four millions in spite of every effort made by the Government officials to keep them down.

GRAVE SITUATION IN CHINA.

Some few people here are languidly asking what is happening in China, but they get no clear answer. We cannot tell, and the mass of us do not care

Yet unless I misread the indications greatly, this Dowager Empress, a woman of comparatively low origin and not royal at all, is proceeding in a manner calculated to fan the flame of civil strife all over the empire. Her authority is dispensed by favorites, as that of female rulers invariably is, and these favorites are met by jealous intrigue, and sometimes by determination to resist, even to bloodshed, their pretensions.

In itself the substitution of a child as titular Emperor for a man too feeble of will to maintain his authority, and who is probably by this time dead, might mean little, but when it is considered that crafty self-seekers like Li Hung Chang still retain a dominant influence in the Empress's councils, and that all around her fortune seekers crowd, eager to make money by squeezing the native or cheating the foreigner, it is but reasonable to expect that something approaching internal disruption must be looked for.

The Japanese are said to be greatly excited over the news, and I am not surprised. Of course they blame Russia, but I do not believe that Russia had anything particular to do with this latest plot and revolution.

All the Western powers, however, may have to bestir themselves, and combine to prevent the "open door" from being banged in their faces. Not only so, but they may be driven to send naval and military forces to occupy various strategic positions in China, in order to protect their own subjects and trade, and perhaps also to prevent the spread of internal cleavages.

In short, I do not at all like the latest news from Peking, and feel certain that had our minds been less occupied with our own disastrous conflict in South Africa we should have been considerably excited about what may happen in the Celestial Empire at no distant date.

THE ASSUMPTIONIST TRIAL.

France is having a little effervescence over the condemnation of the Assumptionist Fathers, the religious order declared to be illegal and therefore sentenced to be dissolved and have its property confiscated. There have in consequence been rows in the Chamber, of the usual type, between Clerical and anti-Clerical partisans, and a certain amount of chatter in the press.

The episode, however, is really of very little importance, and is not likely to weaken the position of the Ministry, or in any way change the political outlook in Paris. It seems only a small incident in the eternal war that a freethinking republic is compelled by the nature of its constitution to wage against clericalism in all its forms.

A. J. W.

H. C. FRICK IN SHIPBUILDING.

Is Said to be the Financial Power Behind the New York Shipbuilding Company of Camden.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—A conference, having for its purpose, it is said, the bringing of additional capital into the recently incorporated New York Ship Building Company, located on the Delaware River opposite this city, was held here to-day between Henry C. Frick, until recently at the head of the Carnegie interests, and several other capitalists. Besides Mr. Frick, those present were Andrew Mellon, a wealthy banker of Pittsburg; Henry Phipps, H. L. Shaffer, and M. S. Schoonmaker, all of Pittsburg; Mr. McCook and Jay Phipps of New York, and Henry G. Morse of the shipbuilding company.

The company was incorporated with a capital of $3,000,000, and occupies an extensive area of ground along the Camden (N. J.) river front.

The conference is said to have been suggested by Mr. Frick, who is reputed to be the financial power behind the company, and who conceived the idea of increasing the capitalization to $6,000,000. Nothing definite was decided upon at the conference as far as is known. During the day a visit to the yards was made and the plant inspected.

CONGRESSMEN INVESTIGATE.

Committee Looks Over the Midvale Steel Works in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—The Congressional Committee on Naval Affairs visited this city to-day for the purpose of inspecting the Midvale Steel Works. Following the inspection the members of the committee were the guests of the Five o'Clock Club at dinner. It was due largely to the recommendation of this committee that Philadelphia was awarded a stone dock at League Island and an appropriation for the opening of a channel in the Delaware River.

A number of prominent citizens accompanied the committee on their tour of inspection through the steel works. The committee will visit this city again within a week to make an inspection of the harbor and the League Island Navy Yard.

At the banquet 135 covers were laid. The members of the committee present were George E. Foss of Illinois, Acting Chairman; ex-Gov. J. T. Hull of Iowa, also Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs; H. C. Loudenslager, New Jersey; Thomas S. Butler, Pennsylvania; Sydney E. Mudd, Maryland, and William D. Vandiver, Missouri.

PADEREWSKI LOST HIS CANE.

Kept an Ohio Audience Waiting Until It Was Found.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 27.—Paderewski kept a select audience in suspense forty minutes last night. The cause was not made known by Manager Boda until to-day, after the pianist had departed.

Paderewski was billed for a recital at the Great Southern Theatre. The seats were filled long before the hour for the programme to begin, and hundreds were turned away. At the expiration of a delay that seemed unreasonable, Manager Boda telephoned the artist's hotel to know what was the matter. Paderewski's manager answered that the pianist would not appear. When asked the reason, the manager said that the artist had lost his cane and would not go to the theatre without it. Manager Boda threatened to go before the curtain with this reason, but finally decided to wait a while longer. The cane was found at the theatre and Paderewski was advised, and in a few minutes he appeared, smiling and happy.

COMMISSION DIVIDED ON TRUSTS.

Congress May Receive No Suggestions for Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Industrial Commission may not make any recommendations to Congress for the suppression of trusts. It is reported that members are not agreed on the extent to which trusts can be handled by legislation, and it is quite likely that they will merely transmit to Congress the printed copy of the testimony taken.

On one thing, however, the commission's members are in thorough accord, and that is the subject of convict labor. They are convinced that goods made by convict labor should not compete in open market with the product of free laborers, and that such goods should be used only in State institutions. Some of the members are now framing recommendations on this subject. The commission was authorized by the law under which it was appointed to recommend legislation not only to Congress, but to the several States.

EDITOR AND PASTOR EXCHANGE.

Newspaper Man Will Occupy the Rev. Sheldon's Pulpit While He Is Running a Christian Newspaper.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 27.—The experiment of running a Christian daily newspaper for a week will not be the first newspaper venture of the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps." The Topeka Mail and Breese to-day recalled that he edited that paper one week in 1895. He introduced no innovations, nor did he change the tone of the editorial page. In an editorial written by him at that time on "What Is News?" he said:

"A definition of what is news requires a definition of what is not. It is not news, for example, to publish in a Topeka paper the account of a murder trial in California. It is not news to print hearsay. The news of the day is facts. Everything in the nature of supposition should have a column to itself headed 'rumor.'

"One definition of a newspaper would be a journal of information concerning what people ought to know, and not what they want to know. A paper is not obliged to publish what the public demands if that demand is vicious."

E. W. Howe, the author and editor of The Atchison Globe, in the editorial columns of his paper, says he will take the place of the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon as pastor of the Congregational Church in Topeka during the week he is running The Topeka Capital as a Christian newspaper. Among other things Mr. Howe says:

"The Rev. Mr. Sheldon's desire to publish a newspaper for a week is evidence that he does not believe a sufficient amount of religion is injected into the columns of the newspapers. Neither is there enough common sense or ability in the average sermon. If we fail to make out as much of a case against preachers as the Rev. Mr. Sheldon makes out against newspapers we will buy a Bible and join the church."

Mr. Howe has had experience on the lecture platform, and his ability as a writer is well known.

DEWEY WILL VISIT NEW YORK.

Series of Entertainments Planned Here for the Admiral and Wife.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Extraordinary interest is manifested in this brief society paragraph published in The Post this morning:

"Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Hague gave a dinner last evening in honor of the Admiral of the Navy, Mrs. Dewey, however, not being present. This interesting invalid is still confined to the house, but hopes to be able to accompany the Admiral to New York early next month, where a series of entertainments are planned in their honor."

BRYAN SPENDS A QUIET DAY.

Remains in His Room at Washington and Answers Letters.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTGON, Jan. 27.—Col. William J. Bryan's day in Washington, up to the time of his visit to the Gridiron Club, was This is largely due to the fact that he has been in Washington so recently that there was little to call for new conferences with National leaders.

It was shortly before noon when he walked into the Metropolitan Hotel, where he always stops. He did not register, and was assigned to a room on the second floor, just off the parlor. He ran up stairs, disdaining the elevator, and disappeared within his room, where, with the exception of the time he spent at luncheon, he remained for the most of the day.

He spent nearly all the time writing answers to letters. He had few visitors, and those who did call did not stay long. None of them were of National prominence. Late in the afternoon he went out and was gone some time. He spent most of the time in the office of The Washington Sentinel. He reached the hotel again at 7:15 o'clock, and dashed up to his room in a hurry, for the carriage was to call to take him to the Gridiron dinner at 7:30. Col. Bryan shaved himself and got into evening dress in little more than half an hour, and was at the Gridiron Club only a few minutes late.

SUNDAY CRUSADE IN BALTIMORE

The Police Are Determined to Enforce the Old Blue Laws.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 27.—Old Sunday blue laws, for years more honored in the breach than in the observance, will be rigorously enforced to-morrow by order of the Grand Jury. Police Marshal Hamilton to-night stated that the law would be carried out to the letter. The people are indignant, and the leading newspapers denounce the action of the Grand Jury, and warn that body to be careful lest it carry the old law too far, and cause a reaction which would damage Baltimore's reputation.

Here is a partial list of those who will be reported to the Grand Jury if they sell anything or do any work to-morrow:

Cigar dealers, grocers, meat dealers, messenger boys, hackmen, coachmen, saloon keepers, drivers, bootblacks, fruit dealers, soda water dealers, ice cream dealers, newsboys, lunchroom dealers, clerks, typewriters, confectioners, and stationers.

Marshal Hamilton says that, while necessary to the public, telegraph messenger boys are not exempt. The cabmen at the railway station will have to give their names to the policemen. Whether any attempt will be made to stop the issuing or publication of the Sunday newspapers is not yet known. Several of the biggest drug stores will close entirely, so that people will not be able even to get prescriptions filled.

RANCHERS SEEK NEW FIELDS.

Texas Cattlemen Start for Argentina to Engage in Business.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Texas, Jan. 27.—The Mallory Line steamer Lampasas, due in New York about Jan. 30, took out a party of Texas cattlemen, consisting of William Veck, Jeff Woodward, and J. M. Sewell, together with Mrs. Crocker and four daughters, all of whom are on the way to Argentina to engage in cattle raising. From New York the party sails for Southampton, England, on the steamer St. Louis, and from thence to Buenos Ayres.

These people are from the San Angelo district, in Tom Green County, in Western Texas. They assign as the reason for leaving Texas that the range has been cut up into farms, rendering it difficult to secure grazing lands at reasonable figures, hence they are going to South America, where pasture lands are open.

A number of inquiries have been received from cattlemen in the Indian Territory, Wyoming, and Oklahoma concerning rates to South America, and a number of other cattlemen have signified their intention of going there and embarking in the business.

Yale's Old Buildings Must Go.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 27.—President Hadley's announcement that some of the buildings constituting the Brick Row were to be torn down has caused a commotion among Yale undergraduates. At present there are but three of the original buildings standing, North College, Lyceum, and South Middle. Of these North College was the last to be built, having been completed in 1821. The other two buildings, formerly called Connecticut Lyceum and Berkeley Hall, were completed as early as 1804. The traditions clinging to these old dormitories is so dearly cherished by Yale men that it has been voted to leave South Middle standing as a memorial to the time when the college was in its infancy.

JAPAN MAY ATTACK RUSSIA

Great Naval Preparations Suggest Such an Intention.

TO OPPOSE DESIGNS IN CHINA

Sailing of a New Battleship from England Falsely Construed as the First Hostile Move.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Some of the afternoon newspapers associated the departure to-day of the new Japanese battleship Shikishima with possible complications in regard to the situation in China, especially as it was announced that the Shikishima would endeavor to traverse the Suez Canal by divesting herself of her armament. Up to the present time no ship of such size has traversed the canal.

It is not true that the departure of the Shikishima was directly due to the situation in China. The date for the sailing was decided on many weeks ago, and a farewell party was held on board of her previous to the deposition of the Emperor of China. But, though exaggerated importance was attributed to the departure of the new warship in the afternoon newspapers, those in England most cognizant of the secret aims of Japan, and especially those who are fulfilling her naval contracts, have for some time past thoroughly believed that she meditated striking a blow at Russia.

If this impression be correct, and there is the highest and most conservative authority on which to base it, it is not unlikely that Japan's hand may be forced and that her intended coup will be attempted before her plans are completed. It may be that Japan only meditates for the present a demonstration to prevent Russia from accomplishing the designs with which various correspondents have credited her since the change in China's Emperor.

Two powerful war vessels, built for Japan on the Clyde, will soon be ready to sail, while others are under course of rapid construction. Their strength has not attracted much attention, but their importance as international factors can be judged from a statement made to-day by one of England's greatest shipbuilders, who declared that the vessels building for Japan were the most powerful in the world and could destroy the best British ships in fifteen minutes.

Several of Japan's vessels in course of construction would have been completed before now had not Japan encountered financial difficulties. The British builders would not let the vessels sail until everything was paid for in cash. To accomplish this Japan induced a syndicate of English bankers to advance the money, and their action has been the subject of a good deal of private criticism in the inner Admiralty circles, when it was realized what tremendous naval power Japan was accumulating. Though Great Britain's strength was not impaired, it was thought unadvisable for British capitalists so materially to assist Japan to become a dangerous rival.

A well-known naval expert says that if Japan puts in commission the ships scheduled for service in the near future she will be ready for war within six months, and can then defy Russia, and, as the Japanese and Russian ships at present in the Far East compare, Japan's fleet would have an excellent chance of controlling the situation.

The battleship Shikishima, which was laid down at the Thames Iron Works in March, 1897, was launched Nov. 1, 1898. She is 400 feet long and 75 feet 6 inches wide, and has a draught of 27 feet 3 inches. Her displacement is 14,850 tons; indicated horse-power, 14,500, and speed, 18.5 knots. Her armament consists of four 12-inch guns in barbettes, fourteen 6-inch, quick-firing guns, all mounted in casemates; twenty 12-pounders, and eight Maxim guns. Her complement of officers and men is 741.

RUSSIA AND AFGHANISTAN.

Transfer of Troops Admitted to be a Precautionary Measure.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 27.—The Herald publishes a pointed article discussing the recent experimental transfer of Russian troops to Kushk, and says plainly:

"Russia is obliged to take precautionary measures, owing to the disturbance of the balance of power in consequence of recent events. It is unjust, therefore, to blame Russia if she is making preparations regarding the long strip between Persia and Afghanistan."

STEEL PLANT FOR WATERTOWN.

Addition to the United States Arsenal May Be Made.

Special to The New York Times.

WATERTOWN, Mass., Jan. 27.—In all probability a steel plant will be established at the United States Arsenal here. The need of such a plant has been apparent to the officials here for some time. The force of men at the present is kept busy turning out the new guns for Nantasket, Rocky Point, Baltimore, and Galveston, Texas.

Two six-inch rapid-fire carriages are to be sent to Rocky Point. These differ somewhat from the larger ones. Although the principle is the same, they can be sighted from above or below the parapet, and fired by electricity, but cannot be discharged until in position, when connection is made with the electric current. Two six-inch rapid-fire guns are to be added to the fortifications at Nantasket. The second of the ten-inch all-round fire disappearing gun carriages has been finished and tested and will be shipped to Galveston.

The employes of the arsenal have enough work on hand to keep them busy for a long time, and when the steel plant is added the force of men will have to be greatly increased.

William Rockefeller, Jr., to Build.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 27.—William Rockefeller, Jr., who purchased the country home of T. F. Secor last Spring, and made it the Summer residence of himself and family last season, it is said, will build a large residence on a knoll on the farm this Spring. The site commands an extended view of Long Island Sound, the Catskill Mountains, and lower end of the Green Mountain range. It is also reported that William Rockefeller, Sr., will erect a mansion on his farm, just opposite, for his daughter, Mrs. McAlpin.

Torpedo Station Shops Shut Down.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 27.—On account of the short supply of coal remaining at the torpedo station and the fact that the supply asked for some time ago has not arrived, Commander N. E. Mason, the Inspector in charge of the station, has shut down the manufacturing shops of the station. Some forty machinists have been laid off.

THE RED FLAG IN CHICAGO.

Strikers Threaten a Demonstration at the Funeral of a Labor Leader —Police Prepared.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—"If the strikers carry the red flag at the funeral of Edward O'Connor, as it is reported they intend to do to-morrow, the Police Department will carry the Stars and Stripes and will see that the principles for which the United States flag stands are not violated," said Chief of Police Kipley to-day.

The Police Department will be present in force at the funeral of O'Connor, who was the Secretary of the Chicago Metal Workers' Union and was killed last Tuesday by one of the non-union workmen at Winslow Brothers' factory. The Chief has made special arrangements to stop any unlawful celebration and has given orders that the funeral must be orderly.

Special policemen from private detective agencies have been sworn in to watch the interests of the factory. Chief of Police Kipley authorizing their appointment. The Chief says he is ready to take all steps to prevent any further trouble. Members of the firm of Winslow Brothers called upon him to ask for the special service, and it was granted.

CLERGYMAN FROZEN TO DEATH.

The Rev. Henry D. Strodach, Formerly of Brooklyn, Overcome by Cold at Reading, Penn.

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Penn., Jan. 27.—The Rev. Henry D. Strodarch, a well-known Lutheran clergyman, was found this morning lying unconscious in the City Park. An ambulance was summoned and he was taken to the City Hall, where he died.

Mr. Strodach had been ill, and was being treated at St. Joseph's Hospital. Last evening he declared he felt well enough to take a little exercise, and left the hospital. He entered the park, which is near the hospital, and was not seen by any one knowing him until this morning, when he was found in an unconscious condition.

The park is situated in an exposed section of Reading. It was very cold here last night, a northwest wind blowing a gale. It is believed that Mr. Strodach, who was weak from sickness, was overcome by cold in the park, sank to the ground and was almost frozen to death during the night.

Mr. Strodach was fifty-three years of age, and was born in Germany. He came to this country when six years of age. He was graduated from Muhlenburg College, Allentown, and subsequently became a student at Mount Airy Lutheran Seminary, near Philadelphia. One of his first charges was at the Lutheran Church at Dushore, Penn., and from there he was transferred to St. Paul's, Norristown, where he remained for thirteen years. From there he went to Brooklyn, where he took charge of St. Paul's Church. He remained there for twelve years. Later he came to Reading and supplied several pulpits. During the last year he had been in charge of a congregation at Pine Grove, Schuylkill County. A widow survives him, together with a son, the Rev. Paul Z. Strodach, who has charge of a Lutheran mission in New Jersey.

The Rev. Mr. Strodach left Brooklyn about five years ago. While he was pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, at South Fifth and Rodney Streets, a division occurred between the older and younger members over the question of using the English language in the services. Many of the younger members seceded from the church, and organized what is now the English Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, at Bedford Avenue and Hewes Street. Mr. Strodach remained only a short time after the secession of the young people. It was through Mr. Strodach's efforts that the handsome edifice at South Fifth and Rodney Streets was built.

WILL HELP PHILADELPHIA OUT.

Senator Hanna Believes Money Can Be Raised.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—It is now generally understood that Chairman Hanna of the Republican National Committee will take a hand in the dispute which threatens to interfere seriously with the success of plans for holding the Republican Convention in this city. Word was received to-day that the National leader had determined to do so, and an early visit to the city will follow. It will be a simple matter for Mr. Hanna to arrange the affair and to smooth out all the rough places that now appear on the surface.

It is said that Chairman Hanna on his last visit to this city became firmly convinced that the committee in charge of the arrangements would meet with failure. He said on different occasions that he had no doubt of the ability of Philadelphia to acquit herself proudly, but he also declared that the movement seemed to lack a competent head.

It was for the purpose of straightening out this feature that he called on Mayor Ashbridge and discussed the situation at length. He urged upon the Mayor the necessity of prompt and decisive measures, but the latter informed him that under the prevailing conditions he could not interfere.

Mayor Ashbridge consented to take hold of the money already collected and the entire management were placed in his hands. To this all agreed with the exception of W. S. P. Shields, who declined to yield on the ground that he was recognized as the official head by the Republican National Committee.

Mayor Ashbridge is ready to proceed with the work as soon as he has the proper assurance there will be no interference from those now in charge.

GAINS FOR SENATOR MORGAN.

Elections in Alabama Seem to Insure His Re-election.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 27.—In the Democratic election in Marengo and Crenshaw Counties to-day Senator John T. Morgan swept the field over his chief opponent for re-election, Gov. Joseph F. Johnston. The result gives Morgan 19 votes for re-election to date to 11 for Johnston.

To-day's election evidences a strong Morgan sentiment, and his return to the Senate seems almost certain.

MRS. PLATT IS WORSE.

Condition of the Senator's Wife Not Thought Critical.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Mrs. Platt, the wife of Senator Platt of New York, who is seriously ill at the Arlington Hotel, in this city, for some time past has been subjected to attacks involving the heart, and a few days ago was again taken with her old malady.

Upon inquiry to-night it was learned that her condition, though not believed to be critical, was worse than it was this morning.

BLOWN INTO THE RIVER.

Wind Carries Man, Woman, Horse, and Carriage from a Bridge.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Jan. 27.—While returning from a dance early this morning, Henry Noble and Miss Cynthia Davis of Milltown were blown, with their horse and carriage, from a bridge into a stream about 15 feet below. It was early in the morning when they started to drive to their homes, several miles away. Before they started they raised the carriage top to protect themselves from the wind, which was on their backs. The wind rocked and swayed the vehicle dangerously, but Milltown was nearly reached before the accident occurred.

As they were crossing the bridge the wind caught the carriage top like a parachute, lifting it in the air, and hurled the entire outfit into the stream below.

It was only after a hard fight against the numbing water that Mr. Noble finally succeeded in reaching the bank with his companion.

BULLER'S POSITION FULL OF DANGER

He Must Win or Risk Having His Communications Cut.

EXPERT INDICATES THE PERIL

Rumored in London that the Army Is in Full Retreat.

Asserted Also that the War Office Is Withholding News from the Front of the Gravest Import.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Spenser Wilkinson, whose articles on the war situation have attracted such attention here and abroad, wrote the following review of the situation last night, after the War Office had given out a telegram from Lord Roberts, dated at Cape Town Saturday, saying there was no change in the situation:

"The affair of Spion Kop appears very like a reverse at the decisive point of the decisive battle. According to Gen. Buller's telegram, Gen. Warren determined to take the hill because it commanded the enemy's other positions. Having taken it Tuesday night, he abandoned it Wednesday night, presumably because he was unable to hold it.

"The published words of Gen. Buller's telegram have the tone in which a reverse is announced. Whether the mishap can be made good it is impossible to say.

"A General attacking has, to some extent, the power of making his own decisive point. Gen. Warren may yet best the enemy by success at some other point, or he may retake Spion Kop and keep it; but, unless in one way or another the battle now going on can be won, there is no probability of Ladysmith being relieved.

"Gen. Buller's army, unless successful, will be in a critical position, for its retreat would be a difficult operation. The main Boer force is as near to any point on the railway as is Gen. Warren's wing of Buller's army, and the Boers have the advantage of speed. For this reason, as well as because of the importance of his purpose to relieve Gen. White, we may expect Gen. Buller to do his very utmost before giving up the attempt, and in this necessity lies the best hope of success.

"The American civil war showed how rifled firearms, by rendering assault difficult, produced battles lasting several days, and as since then the range and rate of fire have been greatly increased, the prolongation of the duration of battles was to be expected. But without a fuller knowledge than the telegrams as yet afford, it is not possible clearly to interpret the episodes of the unfinished fight.

"The report from Boer sources that Mafeking has been relieved is credible, for Col. Plumer has been persistently working in that direction, and there has been time since he was last heard of near Gaberones for him to cover the intervening distance. Moreover, the Boers have wisely been concentrating their forces at more decisive points, but it requires a report."

An eminent British General, reviewing the campaign, thus summed it up:

"First of all, we underestimated the enemy. Secondly, we knew nothing of the power of modern weapons when opposed to each other in the hands of tolerably equal forces. Thirdly, we deserted strategy to satisfy sentiment. By that I mean Ladysmith and Kimberley appealed to us, and we answered as quickly and as unthinkingly as does an electric receiver to a transmitter.

"We have learned many things, but, chiefly, we have learned that long-range guns and rifles minimize tremendously the advantage which formerly accrued to the aggressor. Yet I thoroughly believe, and I am not speaking without experience, that had any continental nation undertaken the same task with the same force, it would by this time have been wiped out. There are a lot of things which might have been learned had we watched your land fighting at Santiago. But we did not. As a result we did not have nippers to cut wire, and we knew nothing about Mausers. But the appreciation of our shortcomings only makes us the more determined. It may be six months, and it may be a year, but we shall achieve our object."

An important meeting of the Defense Committee of the Cabinet, at which Lord Salisbury presided, was held at the War Office this afternoon, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, came to London purposely to attend, and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, gave up other engagements for the same reason. Lord Wolseley, the Commander in Chief of the forces, was also present.

In connection with this meeting the rumor was reiterated that the War Office is concealing the gravest kind of news from the Upper Tugela River. The reports even go so far as to say the forces of Gen. Buller are in full retreat. It is impossible to confirm or deny the reports, as the officials maintain silence. They say they have nothing for publication. But it is evident from the War Office announcements that the casualties reported by Gen. Buller occurred in Gen. Lyttleton's brigade, which apparently was not engaged at Spion Kop, and that there has been severe fighting not yet reported.

RUMOR OF WARREN'S DEFEAT.

Berlin Has an Unconfirmed Report That the British Have Suffered Heavy Losses.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Some of the papers here claim to have a telegram from Pretoria saying that Gen. Warren was enticed into Spion Kop, where the Boers fell upon him; that seventeen of his cannon were captured, and that Buller's hasty retreat over the Tugela River alone can save him.

The alleged Pretoria telegram adds that the British losses were 800 men killed and 1,500 wounded. The dispatch comes through Brussels and does not receive much credit in this city.

It was also said in this city to-day that the officials of the German Foreign Office had received information confirming the reports that the division of Gen. Buller's army commanded by Gen. Warren had been crushed by the Boers.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The War Office has no news of the catastrophe to Gen. Buller's forces reported from Berlin and discredits the story. Neither has the War Office any explanation—at least for publication—of the abandonment of Spion Kop, and there are no advices in this connection from independent sources. The disposition to-day is to regard the evacuation as not so serious as at first thought, and commentators are abusing the military authorities, both at the front and at home, for publishing hasty accounts of an incomplete, half-understood operation, thus alternately thrilling and depressing the nation.

There is no mention here of the reports circulated in the United States that Gen. Clery has been defeated by the Boers. The last heard of Gen. Clery was that he was participating in Gen. Warren's movements.

The War Office announces that the casualties reported by Gen. Buller yesterday occurred in the battalions of Gen. Lyttleton's brigade, which, so far as known at the War Office, was not engaged in the capture or defense of Spion Kop. It appears, therefore, that they are additional to the considerable casualties which Gen. Buller has reported as having occurred at Spion Kop.

BETHUNE'S MEN SURPRISED.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—A special dispatch from Colenso, dated Wednesday, Jan. 24, says that Commandant Lucas Meyer's commando surprised and surrounded a strong body of Gen. Bethune's troops, killing or wounding twenty-three and capturing fifteen.

HAS MAFEKING BEEN RELIEVED?

LORENZO MARQUES, Delagoa Bay, Jan. 26.—It is reported on good Transvaal authority that Mafeking was relieved Tuesday, Jan. 23.

Mafeking was invested on Oct. 15 by the Boers of the South African Republic. Gen. Cronje was in personal command of the forces until called to command the army which repulsed the expedition under Gen. Lord Methuen sent to relieve Kimberley.

Col. Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell, who had been Lieutenant Colonel of the Fifth Dragoon Guards since 1897, has commanded the British force at Mafeking. It consists of about 2,000 men, comprising a battalion of the Lancashire Regiment, the First Battalion of the Munster Fusiliers, with about 1,000 volunteers enrolled in South Africa. A number of sorties have been made by the garrison, which has acted with the greatest gallantry throughout the siege.

Mafeking is about 160 miles north of Kimberley. It was recently reported that Col. Plumer, with a force of between 1,000 and 2,000 rough riders, was near the beleaguered garrison. The relief, however, has been accomplished by the withdrawal of the burgher force for use against Methuen.

BOERS TELL OF HARD FIGHTING.

BOER CAMP, Modder Spruit, Upper Tugela River, Tuesday, Jan. 23.—The British are now endeavoring to force with 40,000 troops the Spion Kop route to Ladysmith. The firing on Gen. Botha's position yesterday was terrific. The grass was fired, rocks dislodged, and trenches pierced, but the battle was practically one-sided, the Federals only firing thirty shots. A ball from a shell landed in Gen. Botha's pocket.

The only Boer casualties were some horses wounded. The firing ceased at dark, but was resumed this morning in the vicinity of Ladysmith and here, but up to noon it lacked vigor.

GALLANTRY OF BRITISH TROOPS.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—From the field of party strife and military criticism it is a relief to turn to an extract from a letter of an officer at the front, who writes:

"An orderly was bringing some water to a wounded man lying on the ground near me, shot through the abdomen. He could hardly speak, owing to the dryness of his mouth; but he said:

"'Take it to my pal first. He's worse hit than me.'

After reading this one can understand that Gen. Buller did not slop over when he wired: "The men are splendid."

DR. LEYDS ARRIVES AT BERLIN.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—The North German Gazette this afternoon says that Dr. Leyds, the Diplomatic Agent of the Transvaal, who has arrived here for the celebration of the Emperor's birthday, was received by Count von Bülow, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, to-day.

The Lokal-Anzeiger publishes a report of an interview with Dr. Leyds, in which he is quoted as saying his presence in Berlin has nothing to do with politics, but is due merely to the invitation to the diplomatic dinner which he had received from the Imperial Chancellor. He proposed to remain some days, but had no political designs.

Regarding mediation, Dr. Leyds said the Boers had no occasion to appeal to any one. Everything was going splendidly. As to the conclusion of peace, his personal opinion was that Great Britain would have to return a large portion of the territory she had seized from the Boers, and the Federal Republics would, of course, obtain every guarantee that not a hair of the heads of their kinsmen would suffer.

No words, he continued, need be wasted about the absolute independence of the two republics.

Ladysmith, Mafeking, and Kimberley, Dr. Leyds continued, were simply prisons, with the sole difference that the British had to consume their own provisions.

SALISBURY TO STAY IN POWER.

Copyright, 1900, The Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Though criticism of the Government and its methods of handling the war is unabated, it is safe to say that when Parliament meets, Tuesday next, nothing serious will result. There will be the usual motions of censure with, perhaps, more than usually impassioned denunciations of the various departments of the Administration, especially the War and Colonial Offices. But such is the patriotism of the average Englishman and such is the strength of the Conservative organization that it will be surprising if Lord Salisbury's majority is even appreciably weakened.

This mere tally of votes, however, must not be construed as a real index of national feeling, for many a man will go to the Government lobby who, outside, has privately declared some one ought to be hanged for maladministration, and that if Lord Salisbury did not disassociate himself from the system or culprits responsible for the national humiliation, he must eventually take the consequences. The inner circles of the Government are perfectly well aware of such an eventuality, but they have no fears for the immediate future, implicitly believing in a successful climax of the war and trusting it will offset the initial blunders.

Another cogent reason for prophesying that the session will be barren of changes affecting the balance of power is that the Opposition, apparently, is hopelessly divided. Nothing showed this better than Mr. John Morley's speech at Forfar Jan. 24, when, for the first time, he publicly sneered at Lord Rosebery, who numbers among his devoted adherents such brilliant Liberals as Mr. H. H. Asquith and Sir Edward Grey. Lord Rosebery's magnificent speech this week and the speeches which he has recently delivered have been convincing men of all parties of his exceptional breadth of mind, patriotism, and ability to face a national crisis sanely and perhaps it is not stretching the bow to say he, to-day, commands British confidence to a greater extent than Lord Salisbury. Yet it is impossible for the Liberals to unite on him and, as The Saturday Review says, "he is so admirable out of office that no one would risk putting him in."

With Mr. Morley so bitterly opposed to the Rosebery section of the Liberals and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman such a non-committal nonentity that his own party press scarcely ever refers to him, the Liberals have no leader upon whom to unite, even should they cohese sufficiently to make a determined attempt to oust the Government, so it is probable the Opposition's tactics will be of the guerrilla order, contenting themselves with putting up Sir Charles Dilke and others to criticise individual points, and while not directly challenging a vote upon the morality of the war and the Government's waging of it for fear of incurring the accusation of being unpatriotic, achieving the same end by vigorous academic criticism of the antebellum diplomacy, bringing up the Jameson raid skeleton and demanding the production of the withheld correspondence, which was referred to by Mr. B. F. Hawksley, counsel for Mr. Cecil Rhodes, in the letters recently published by the Independance Belge.

This line of policy, however, will not prevent the Irish members and most of the Advanced Liberals from bringing to vote most sweeping measures of censure. But the Liberal leaders of all sections are likely to abstain from supporting the war itself, which has now been in progress over three months, and the British position is worse than when Parliament was hastily assembled to grant supplies.

From the English point of view, there is not a cloud on the sky of international relations. The war is far too engrossing to permit people to pause and consider the effect on Great Britain of the apparent change of régime in China, while Congressional action on the Nicaragua Canal or the proposed increase in the armament of the United States scarcely causes a ripple of interest. The Foreign Office, apparently, has not the slightest belief that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is in danger of violation, and so far has taken no steps in the matter.

Neither do the pro-Boer or other meetings in the United States any longer attract serious attention or comment, for the majority of the British have made up their minds that the United States is friendly to them, and they put aside any manifestations to the contrary as due to local political causes which cannot be taken as in any way representing National opinion.

BRITISH CABINET DEFENDED.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Joseph Chamberlain, who expected to attend the banquet of the Birmingham jewelers and silversmiths this evening, was unable to be present owing to a holding of a meeting of the Defense Committee. His place was taken by the Right Hon. Jesse Collings, Under Secretary of State for the Home Office, and J. Austen Chamberlain, Civil Lord of the Admiralty.

The former, replying to a toast to "Her Majesty's Ministers," deplored the attitude of the press in regard to the war in South Africa. He said there had been no muddle in its conduct; and the facts, when known, would show there had been no war in which more foresight, skill, and care had been displayed by the Government than the present one. The reverses, he declared, only increased the determination to prosecute the work to the end. The war involved the question whether Great Britain should maintain her position or sink into an insignificant third rate power.

J. Austen Chamberlain, in the course of his remarks, said that if Great Britain had shirked her responsibility, the price paid would have been the loss in the near future of South Africa and her separation in the not remote future from those great branches of the Anglo-Saxon stock whose loyalty—which is due to their confidence in Great Britain's power to see right done her subjects in every portion of the world—was so dear to Great Britain.

PROF. SMITH WRITES A LETTER.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Prof. Goldwin Smith writes to The Speaker one of the most misleading letters which could possibly be put before the British public. It commences with saying:

"I suppose the donors of the Maine thought they were paying a compliment to America in calling it by that name, but really they were pricking the American conscience, as there are few things more certain than that the Maine was blown up by the ignition of the coal in her bunkers. The same accident has happened to three American vessels since, one of them commanded by the same Captain of the Maine, though in these cases the vessels were saved. Nothing is more certain than that the Maine was not blown up by the Spaniards."

There is more in the same strain, including, as proof of his contention, the remark that "No more now is heard of the monument which was to be erected to the crew of the Maine."

MORE VOLUNTEERS DEPART.

HALIFAX, N. S., Jan. 27.—The second detachment of the second Canadian contingent to South Africa embarked on the Pomeranian to-day, marching through the city on their way to the transport. After inspection, they were addressed by Lieut. Gov. P. M. B. Daly and Mayor Hamilton, who wished them godspeed. The line of march was crowded with people, who cheered the departing troops.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The last detachment of the infantry section of the London volunteers, numbering 134 men, were entrained this morning for Southampton, where they will embark to-day for Africa. The route from Wellington Barracks to Nine-Elms Station was thronged with cheering spectators, but not in the same degree as on previous occasions, so the order of march was undisturbed.

The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs accompanied the troops to Southampton. The battery section and ammunition column, completing the regiment, will leave on Feb. 3.

Only a very few of the regulars are left in England, and these are bitterly disappointed because they are unable to get out to South Africa. The shipment of raw yeomanry to South Africa and keeping these men home has given rise to further sharp criticism in military circles.

The War Office has decided to embody two additional militia battalions and another battery of artillery.

Lord Dunraven, who is Chairman of the committee having in charge the raising of a force of mounted sharpshooters for service with the Yeomanry in South Africa, has appealed to the public for subscriptions in aid of this object. He says he already has 400 applicants, whose shooting records are high, and many of whom have had experience in the bush.

The amount needed is £20,000, of which £2,000 has already been subscribed.

Natives of India Avow Loyalty.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 27.—A monster meeting of Hindus and Mohammedans in the Town Hall here to-day passed a resolution expressing unswerving loyalty and attachment to the throne and deciding to offer prayers for the victory of the British in all places of worship. The meeting also subscribed 63,000 rupees toward the Mansion House Fund for the relief of the widows and families of the victims of the South African war.

Macrum Prepares to Sail.

Cargo of the Beatrice Sold.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The American shippers whose goods were on the British ship Beatrice, seized off the African coast by British warships, have had news to the effect that the vessel was released six weeks ago, and that the goods which were landed at East London have in large part been sold. Therefore it is believed that this incident is closed.

The Pro-Boer Mass Meeting.

Arrangements for the pro-Boer mass meeting to be held to-morrow evening in the Grand Central Palace, Lexington Avenue and Forty-third Street, have been completed by the Executive Committee of the General Committee to Aid the United Republics of South Africa. Several labor societies have announced their intention to be represented. The Seventy-first Regiment Band will furnish music. Ex-Judge George M. Van Hoesen will preside. The list of speakers includes ex-Congressman George M. Van Voorhis, Congressman William Astor Chanler, Robert B. Roosevelt, Augustus Van Wyck, United States Senators Turner of Washington and Mason of Illinois, Congressmen De Armond and Cochran of Missouri and Bailey of Texas, ex-Congressman Timothy J. Campbell, William L. Brown, and Judge Thomas W. Pittman.

John Hays Hammond on the War.

John Hays Hammond of the Outlander Reform Committee repeated his account of the events which led up to the Boer war before an enthusiastic audience of 200 members of the Southern Society. In the course of his remarks he explained the topographical difficulties with which the British have to contend at the present stage of the conflict. He added: "I am of the opinion that when they have been forced back on to their lands, as they will no doubt be as soon as the English cease thinking in their complacent way that they can whip anybody, the Boers will begin to be homesick and long for the seclusion of their farms, and after one or two reverses will give up and go home."

To Withdraw Her Divorce Suit.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Arthur K. Lee and wife of New York arrived at the Palmer House last night. They came to Chicago to have withdrawn a suit for divorce began Oct. 4 by the wife.

GOEBEL GAINS ONE POINT

Test Vote in the Kentucky Legislature in His Favor.

TAYLOR ADHERENT UNSEATED

Republicans Admit They Have Received a Setback, but Insist that They Will Fight It Out.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 27.—The first actual test of strength between the Republican and Democratic forces in the Goebel-Taylor contest came to-day, and by the admission of the Republican leaders, proved a victory for Goebel. The Democrats claim the result of to-day's struggle as decisive, with the Republicans, although admitting a defeat, declare that they will fight to the finish, and have still strong hopes of retaining Gov. Taylor in his seat. The fight to-day came on the vote of the House in the contest brought by H. S. Van Meter of Fayette County for the seat heretofore held by Henry S. Berry. Both sides realized that the test of real strength would be made on this issue, and every effort was made to get out the largest possible vote.

There were before the contest 59 Democrats, including Speaker Trimble, in the House and 41 Republicans. The latter claimed confidently that they would be able to swing at least 50 votes, with excellent chances of two or three additional. The Democrats claimed to be certain of 52 votes. The vote in favor of Van Meter was 51 to 45. Hayes (Rep.) and Sledge (Dem.) were absent. Berry had no vote because of his personal interest in the contest. Speaker Trimble did not vote.

As soon as the session began, W. A. Burkamp, Chairman of the committee which had heard the evidence in the contest, rose to speak in behalf of the adoption of the majority report, which he had presented yesterday. Under special rules of the House, adopted yesterday, each side was to have not less than twenty nor more than fifty minutes for argument, and the member presenting a report to have thirty minutes to speak for his cause. Mr. Burkamp made an elaborate legal argument in support of Mr. Berry, as did Representative G. A. Holland in behalf of Van Meter. Representative Lafferty of Harrison County rose to explain the vote he intended to cast.

Mr. Lafferty is a Democrat, and it was accordingly understood that if he felt called upon to explain anything it was because he intended to side with Mr. Berry. He was allowed the floor, and said that it had been reported that he was to vote in defense of Mr. Berry. He intended, he said, to vote in defense of himself and his ideas of what was proper.

"I just want to read a legal decision," said Mr. Lafferty, producing a pamphlet, "which I am surprised that at least one side of this contest has not brought into evidence. I don't see how, after reading this decision, any man can vote against Mr. Berry."

A dozen Democrats were on their feet with protests that, inasmuch as the main question was then before the House, which was the adoption of the minority report as a substitute for that of the majority, Mr. Lafferty was out of order. The Chair ruled against Mr. Lafferty, who sat down with the remark: "I only wanted to explain my vote, but if the House don't want to hear my explanation I don't care."

Mr. Burkamp then rose to take his thirty minutes allowed to him under the rules, as having presented the majority report. He announced that he wished to divide his time with Representative Slack, the House leader of the Republican minority. The Speaker ruled that he could divide his time with nobody, the rules providing that the member presenting the report should have thirty minutes, and that he only should have it.

The vote on the motion to substitute the minority report in favor of Mr. Van Meter for the majority report in favor of Mr. Berry then began. As the call proceeded Representative Baird, who was considered doubtful by both sides, declined to vote. Cochran was the first Democrat to vote for Berry. Egbert followed him, then came Grider, Lafferty, Orr, Hinton, and Willingham. When the call was finished the vote was 46 to 46, several members not voting.

Egbert changed his vote, making it 47 to 45 in favor of Van Meter. On the call for absentees, Baird sided with Van Meter, Democratic cheers greeting him as he announced his vote. Three more Democrats who had not responded to the roll call voted for the minority report, and the clerk announced the total 51 to 45. The majority report as amended by the minority report was then adopted, and Mr. Van Meter was declared a member of the House.

E. G. Sebree, the Republican campaign manager said to-night:

"They knocked us out. There is no doubt about that. I felt sure of 50 votes, of course including Hayes, and counted on 10 Democratic votes for Berry. However, this is not the vote for Governor, although the seating of Van Meter increases the odds against us. I presume the Democrats will decide the other contests now pending as this one has been decided. We will fight it out to the end, however. The people may be sure of that."

The Democratic leaders, without exception, claim that the seating of Van Meter foreshadows accurately the seating of Goebel.

The House now stands 60 Democrats, including Van Meter and Speaker Trimble, and 40 Republicans, the Senate 26 Democrats and 12 Republicans. The Democrats on a vote in the Gubernatorial contest can have but a possible maximum of 24. As Goebel will have no vote, and Senator Hill, a Goebel man, is incapacitated by illness and has never qualified, both sides admit the Senate to be very evenly divided. Seventy votes are necessary on joint ballot to seat Goebel as Governor.

ALLEGED BRIBERY IS EXPLAINED.

Col. Whallen Tells Why He Paid Money to a Legislator.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 27.—The trial of State Senator S. B. Harrell, charged by Col. John H. Whallen with securing money under false pretenses, was begun here to-day. The case grew out of Harrell's charge made at Frankfort that Whallen paid him $4,500 to vote against Goebel in the contest now before the Legislature.

Col. Whallen, the first witness, told of his meetings with Harrell in this city. Harrell, he said, wanted $10,000 to stop the contest, saying he had a letter that would damage Goebel. Whallen said he and Harrell agreed that the latter was to get $5,000 to stop the contest. Col. Whallen agreed to this after informing Harrell that he was not bribing him to vote, but simply paying him to produce valuable evidence.

According to Whallen, Harrell said he had accepted $500 from Goebel's managers and had the promise of the superintendency of the Hopkinsville asylum. Whallen said he gave Harrell $500 and $4,500 was deposited in a box at the Louisville Trust Company's vaults. Then, the witness continued, an agreement was signed by himself, Harrell, and two witnesses, which read in part as follows:

"In consideration of $5,000 I agree and bind myself to stop the contest in the Legislature between Goebel and Taylor, $500 of which is to be paid in cash that I may be able to return the $500 they paid to me on contract.

"In consideration of the $5,000, I agree and bind myself at the proper time to make a full statement of contract with Goebel's managers. Should I fail to make the exposure or stop the contest, I agree to return the $500 in cash and lay no claim to the remaining $4,500."

C. H. Ryan and Frank Dugan, who signed the alleged agreement as witnesses, then gave testimony corroborating Whallen's account of what occurred at the meeting with Harrell.

INSURANCE MEN ARE AT ODDS.

Differ as to Whether Agents Are Changing Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Edward O'Brien, general attorney of the New York Life Company, said to-day:

"There is absolutely no truth in the reports that our agents here are leaving us to go with the Equitable. Of that whole number I know of but one who is going into the service of the Equitable."

Walter M. Hodge, Inspector of Agencies of the Equitable Company, said:

"I am signing contracts every day with insurance men. I do not care whether they come from the New York Life or some other company, as long as they are good men. I have already signed contracts with some of the New York Life's men, and would not be surprised if more came to us, but I do not care to give any names now."

MR. CARNEGIE GUEST OF THE LOTOS CLUB

Sees a Great Future for Steel Industry of the United States.

HOW TO DISTRIBUTE CHARITY

Believes in Helping Those Who Help Themselves—Tribute of President Lawrence.

Andrew Carnegie was the guest of honor at a dinner given last evening at the Lotos Club. Over 200 members of the club and guests were present, the President of the club, Frank R. Lawrence, presiding. Those who sat at the guests' table included, besides Mr. Carnegie, Seth Low, Abram S. Hewitt, W. Bourke Cockran, the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, the Rev. Mr. Thomas R. Slicer, John Kendrick Bangs, William H. McElroy, Howard R. Butler, and Chester S. Lord.

The menu cards at Lotos Club dinners are always beautifully decorated and appropriate in design, but that of last evening's dinner was even more elaborate than usual. The term "card" can hardly be applied to it, for it consisted of eight large pages.

The cover was decorated with a thistle in colors, while on the inside page, printed on thick Japanese paper, was an excellent portrait of the guest of the evening, surrounded by a design of bluebells and heather, and with the arms of Scotland and the United States and other appropriate designs. The following quotation from Mr. Carnegie's "Triumphant Democracy" appeared to the right of the portrait:

"Upon no foundation but that of popular education can man erect the structure of an enduring civilization. This is the basis of all stability and underlies all progress."

After dinner the Chairman rose and in the course of an introductory speech said: "The Lotos Club approaches the completion of its thirtieth year. It is now old enough to be ranked among the permanent institutions of New York. From its beginning its members have found it good to dine sometimes together, usually in honor of some guest of distinction, often a man illustrious in some department of art or science, yet at times to greet one of our own members who has endeared himself either to us or to mankind in general.

HIS CLAIMS TO ESTEEM.

"To-night we give greeting to a fellow-member who has many claims upon our esteem. Were Mr. Carnegie only the author of his very delightful books, there would be a sufficient tie between him and ourselves to justify the present occasion; but he has devoted himself of recent years to purposes so worthy and so beneficial to mankind that we forget his lesser deeds, and we hail him to-night as a philanthropist and as a public benefactor. [Loud applause.]

"Here in this country, where most men are earnestly engaged in the pursuit after wealth, this gentleman is just as earnestly engaged in distributing it. This task has some advantages, for he will not find the competition excessive, and he is certain of ultimate success. [Laughter and applause.]

"Through means of his providing, art galleries, museums, and free public libraries have sprung up on almost every hand. Through these gifts he is doing incalculable benefit in diffusing knowledge, and placing within the reach of men and women the means to help themselves.

"How highly the world should honor every such man! And what an answer is furnished by the career of Andrew Carnegie to the argument which we constantly hear about the dangers to the public good, resulting from the encroachments of wealth!

"Every New Yorker, every man of the present generation, who has walked the streets of this city as a boy, knows the great pile of brownstone, which stands on the east side of the city, with its simple yet splendid dedication, 'To Science and Art.' There is no more noble monument in all the land.

"From Cooper Union thousands of young men have gone forth in every direction, and, taking advantage of the training there acquired, have become skilled in many of the arts and industries which are building up our country.

"It is fortunate for New York, fortunate for our whole people, fortunate for the advancement of industrial skill and knowledge, that when the work of the Cooper Union required to be enlarged, Andrew Carnegie was ready, out of his boundless liberality, to supply the means, and many as are his claims upon public gratitude, we, in this city, can pay him no higher compliment than to assure him that henceforth, in the minds of the people of New York, at least, his name will be forever linked with that of Peter Cooper." [Loud applause.]

MR. CARNEGIE'S REPLY.

On rising to reply, Mr. Carnegie was greeted with prolonged cheering. He spoke as follows: "There is a certain school of modern painters who regard the painting of a portrait as the production of a high work of art; but the last thing they desire is to make a likeness. I must regard your Chairman as one of the leaders of that small but powerful school.

"It is fortunate that the recipients of such honor as you confer upon me to-night are quite aware that the altogether too flattering compliments paid are to be taken in a Pickwickian sense. I quite understand this. The recipients should also understand that they are paid after dinner. It makes such a difference.

"I made an address to a Baptist society last week at the request of a young multimillionaire, the son of the richest man in the world. He shuns delights and lives laborious days and labors among his poorer and therefore more fortunate associates for their good. My views on the uses of wealth were given, but the newspapers published detached scraps, which gave a very false impression of what those views were.

"I was speaking of the best uses which individuals could make of their surplus wealth, what we may call private charity, and I expressed the opinion, which I repeat, that the truly helpless, those who live by begging or by alms, the idiotic, the confirmed drunkard, and the class generally known as the submerged tenth, should be the care of the State and not of the individual. Being human they should be housed, fed, clothed, educated, and bathed, but they should be isolated and not permitted to marry.

"When I speak of this subject I am reminded of the first article I ever wrote. I said in that article that $900 out of every $1,000 that was spent on private charity had better be thrown into the sea. The editor who used my article said to me, 'Better make it $930,' and so it appeared that way.

DISTRIBUTION OF CHARITY.

"Years ago I distributed charity indiscriminately, and in doing so committed perhaps the greatest evil I have committed in my life. Let a multi-millionaire take his millions to the slums and call the people together, saying: 'There is a wrong distribution of wealth in the world; you have not got your share; I give to each one of you his share in my millions.'

"Let that be done in the morning, and let the millionaire return at night to see what good his action has done, and he will find not happiness but pandemonium. Let him distribute another million every day for a month, and at the end of that time what ought we to say to him? We ought to say, 'Go on your knees and crawl for pardon. You have done more harm in a month than you can ever undo in all your life.'

"The name of philanthropist is a dubious one to apply to any one, Mr. Chairman. I didn't quite like it when you applied it to me. It usually means a man who has more money than sense. Now my sympathies go out to those who help themselves. I am not looking for popularity.

"My preference for free libraries as a means of helping the swimming, not the 'submerged,' tenth is that libraries give nothing for nothing. In order to get benefit from them a man must help himself, must read and study. You cannot boost a man up a ladder if he does not do a little of the climbing himself. It is only pouring water into a sieve to give money to those who have no desire to improve their condition.

"Reference has sometimes been made to the share I have in the work of insuring for our country supremacy in steel, a supremacy which obviously carries with it future supremacy in so many different departments of industry, for steel is the great foundation article, on which so many other articles rest.

"The cheapest steel means before long the cheapest ships, as it to-day means the cheapest agricultural instruments, bicycles, motor cars, wire, nails, and the thousand and one things of which steel is the chief part.

SHIPBUILDING CENTRE HERE.

"It goes without saying that we are to stop exporting steel in crude forms, and more and more to export it in manufactured finished articles, from needles to ships. As Historian Green says, 'the future home of the English-speaking race is to be found not on the banks of the Tweed or the Thames, but on those of the Hudson and the Mississippi.' So I predict that the future seat of shipbuilding is to be found not on the shores of Britain, but upon our Atlantic seaboard.

"I see nothing to prevent this country of ours from being the chief source of the supply of steel and the articles made from steel for the rest of the less-favored world. Our supplies of the raw materials—iron-stone, coal, limestone—are superior to those of any other nation in any known part of the globe, and we have in the American workingman which our stimulating climate and our free schools and, I hope, our free libraries produce, a workman superior to any other that has appeared upon the earth—more intelligent, quicker, more versatile, more progressive and more fairminded, more industrious, more sober, and, let me add, altogether more of a self-respecting man than any other nation has been favored with.

"I wish, however, to disclaim a great part of the credit which has been placed to my account. I was fortunate enough to travel a great deal in early life, and when I visited my uncle in the highlands of Scotland I had an opportunity to see what was being done in Great Britain in steel manufacture. We were then twenty years behind the times. I saw what the Briton had done, and I said to myself that what the Briton could do the American workman could do better. I have often told my friends over there that one American is worth two British workmen, as workmen—and he is.

"Sometimes reference has been made to the books which I have inflicted on a long-suffering public. This I can say for them: I have never written one word that I did not believe to be true. I have never supported a cause I did not believe to be right. The most valuable citizen is not the man who follows public opinion, but the man who, when all are mad, dares to speak of the sacred blessings of peace.

"One thing I may claim. You have had many more distinguished guests than myself at this club, but you never had one who was more resolved so to lead his life that you will never have cause to regret your action in making me your honored guest to-night."

Mr. Carnegie's address had been frequently interrupted by applause, and when he concluded he received an ovation, the guests rising to their feet and cheering for a considerable space of time.

BOURKE COCKRAN SPEAKS.

The Chairman then introduced W. Bourke Cockran, who made an eloquent address, in the course of which he said: "Your President dwelt on the distribution of wealth as though it was more credit to a man than the acquisition of wealth. This suggested to me the propriety of saying something less about the individual millionaire than about the class he represents. The millionaire has ceased to be an isolated individual, and is rapidly developing into a class. Nobody is less popular in the community than he and nobody is more envied.

"Mr. Carnegie alone among the millionaire class seems to have properly gauged the functions of the millionaire, and to have acted upon his discoveries. As a matter of fact, if we exclude the fortunes made by the capitalization of pulls, [loud laughter,] I don't think any millionaire makes his fortune except by giving the public the value of it.

"I am not sure that to get 5, 6, or 7 per cent. for his money is not the best form of activity for the millionaire. He cannot increase the product of his capital except by employing more labor, and either increasing wages or sustaining them.

"There is no better philanthropy than to increase the rate of wages. And it is not so pleasant for the millionaire to do this. It is not so pleasant as to play the grand seigneur. Some millionaires are taking an interest in education, but I don't think many of them know much about it. It is like the parson who started saloons. He made doubtful cocktails, and I think it would have been better for him to stick to his own work. It is not at all a bad thing for the community for a man to succeed in his occupation and to stick to it.

"The feature of the civilization of the nineteenth century is the development of mechanics. That means the use of coal and iron and the improvement of the lot of the laborer. A man who understands the laborers who work for him, and the relation of capital to labor, is the greatest benefactor of his kind.

SEES A CENTURY OF PEACE.

"I believe we are now witnessing the last expiring effort of barbarism to lift its head again. The coming century will be a century of peace and good will. Men will come to realize that the words of the Master are true: that next to loving the Creator comes the love of man to man. Peace makes for the prosperity of a nation, and all nations will participate in the universal prosperity that will come in the era of universal peace."

Seth Low followed Mr. Cockran. He referred to Mr. Carnegie's fortune as the greatest that was ever gained in legitimate business, and said that in profiting himself he had profited an infinite number of others. "The greatest of Mr. Carnegie's benefactions," Mr. Low added, "are the numerous and splendid libraries he has established. A library is like the sun—it gives light. It has this character of all-wise giving—it gives light not to the giver but to the user."

Dr. MacArthur was the next speaker. He said that he and Mr. Carnegie had one point in common. "We both," said Dr. MacArthur, "come from good, Highland Scotch mothers. As I remember the love that existed between this man and his mother, I must attribute his success to the good influence, the high ideals, and the lofty example of that Highland Scotch mother."

Short speeches were made by William H. McElroy, George W. Smalley, the Rev. Mr. Thomas R. Slicer, and Charles Stewart Smith. The last-named speaker said that he considered that a large share of the inspiration that Mr. Carnegie had received had come from Mrs. Carnegie, and he proposed that a toast to her be drunk.

The toast was drunk standing. A. Henry Savage Landor was to be the last speaker, but the toast to Mrs. Carnegie seemed to finish the evening's proceedings suitably, and he asked the guests to excuse him. The dinner came to an end soon after midnight.

IRON PRICES ARE SLASHED.

Carnegie and Jones & Laughlins in a War of Prices.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—The Post will say to-morrow:

"Slashing of prices has been started by two of the largest steel and iron concerns in the country. The cuts are affecting two of the products, and there is danger of others being disturbed. It started with one class of material, and a second has followed in sympathy. The firms to the contest for business are the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, and Jones & Laughlins, Limited. The products thus far sought to be put on the market are tank and boiler plates.

"One month ago tank plates sold at $62.50 a ton. Now they are selling at $45, a cut of $17.50. Boiler plates readily brought $62.50, and after the decline on tank material started it has reached the fifty-two-dollar mark. It is possible that it will ultimately follow closely in the footsteps of the tank product.

"As yet no efforts have been made looking to a re-establishment of prices, and as both are determined, with plenty of financial and other facilities, the near future will be watched with interest in iron and steel circles."

BIG DRY DOCK FOR BROOKLYN.

The Morse Iron Works and Dry Dock Company was incorporated at Albany yesterday with a capital stock of $550,000. It is designed to be an enlargement of the Morse Iron Works, located at the foot of Twenty-sixth Street, Brooklyn. E. P. Morse, a Director of the latter, and one of the incorporators of the new corporation, said last night:

"The company has options on a large strip of land from First Avenue to the channel, along the water front at Bay Ridge. The company proposes to build a dry dock 800 feet long. That will be the largest private dry dock on the Atlantic Coast, and will accommodate a vessel of any size. It will be built in sections, two or three of which will be finished by next November, and will be used for smaller craft.

"A two-story brick machine shop, 600 feet in length, will also be built for the repairing and overhauling of ships. As for shipbuilding, that may come later.

"The contracts for the work will probably be signed within the next two weeks."

RAPID TRANSIT BOND SITUATION

Surety Companies or Individual Bondsmen Ready to Act.

CAPITAL BACKS MR. McDONALD

His Attitude Toward Guaranteeing Corporations—His Counsel and President Orr Make Statements.

The bonding problem which Contractor John B. McDonald has had to meet, and which has necessitated his asking President Orr of the Rapid Transit Commission for the extra ten days specified in the resolution of the board, was practically settled yesterday, it was stated, and it only remains, it is further said, for the new construction company which Mr. McDonald proposes to form to take over the work on the tunnel to choose between two propositions. These propositions, according to the statements of the contractor's advisers, are, the one, the acceptance of the terms proposed by the surety companies; the other, the question of the members individually going on the contractor's bond for the amount required. De Lancey Nicoll, Mr. McDonald's counsel, yesterday intimated that the latter is the probable course. President Orr and others closely connected with the contractor also intimated that this plan might be adopted.

The surety companies have denied all along that there were any differences between them and Mr. McDonald on the question of a rate, yet Mr. McDonald has stated unequivocally that he thought the rate proposed by the companies, 1 per cent., too high for such a large contract. The companies have stated that they wanted Mr. McDonald to ally himself with some responsible financiers who would be able to guarantee them above the amount they can become surety for, and they intimated yesterday that in the formation of the construction company he had done just that, and that, therefore, many of the difficulties had been removed.

MR. McDONALD'S ATTITUDE.

According to the statements of counsel, now that the surety companies have become satisfied and are willing to act, Mr. McDonald is not so ready to accept their aid as he was before. It has occurred to the members of the proposed company, it is asserted, that they are entirely able to furnish individual bonds for the amount required that would be beyond cavil and that by this means a saving of $50,000 a year could be made by them from the outset. Mr. Nicoll said yesterday that this question was being very seriously considered, and had been talked about at a meeting of the members of the proposed syndicate yesterday. No definite arrangement has been made, he said, and there will be other meetings before it is finally settled.

Mr. Nicoll also stated yesterday that the contract will be taken by Mr. McDonald individually. Later, he said, it will be turned over to the proposed construction company, with the consent of the Rapid Transit Commission, and no hitch in this regard is expected on account of the standing of the men interested.

MR. ORR ON THE COMPANY.

President Orr said yesterday that the Rapid Transit Commission would accept individual bonds that were satisfactory, and that the members at no time had made any stipulation that surety companies would have to furnish the security. "What further I know about the formation of the company or its personnel," Mr. Orr said, "I am not at liberty now to state. I know only the names of two or three persons who will be connected with it, and these, as well as the others I have heard spoken of, are men of the soundest financial standing. I cannot give their names now. I apprehend no trouble whatever regarding the subsequent question of the assignment or transfer of the contract from Mr. McDonald to the company."

On the same subject Edward M. Shepard of counsel to the commission said:

"The formation of a construction or other company by the contractor is the contractor's own business until he shall have his arrangements complete. When he is ready to make the cash deposit of $1,000,000 and to give the bonds the Rapid Transit Board will execute and deliver the contract. If then he desires to have the contract transferred to a company, the board will no doubt then require from him proper evidence as to the character and responsibility of the company. Meantime he is not bound to consult either the board or its counsel about the formation of the company. If the proposed company be organized on lines satisfactory to the board, I assume that the board would approve a transfer of the contract to such a company upon its assuming the obligations of the contract."

MR. NICOLL'S STATEMENT.

"The question of whether the members of the company will personally furnish the surety or whether the surety companies will be asked to act, is one that is being gravely considered, and there was much talk about it at a meeting of the members to-day," said Mr. Nicoll. "We have no desire to make a mystery of any of our movements, and it will not be long before we will be in a position to talk freely about our plans.

"Of one thing the public can be assured. Mr. McDonald will get the contract and will be able to furnish the necessary bonds within the required time. This is a pretty big thing and needs careful handling, and any one interested in it feels that he wants to be protected. I can say that there is nothing in the story of any surety company wanting a slice of the contract. Under the new conditions they are willing to help the contractor in every way, but only remains for us to choose the method of giving the bonds and the contract will have been completed. We expect to have the construction company incorporated next week."

At the office of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, of which Andrew Freedman is Vice President, it was said yesterday by a financier who had attended the conferences between the members of the proposed company and the surety company representatives that the men behind Mr. McDonald were amply able to give bonds without recourse to surety companies, but that it was possible they would rather let the surety companies go on the bonds than assume all the risk themselves.

HENRY B. PLATT'S DENIAL.

Henry B. Platt of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland denied that his company had asked for any share of the contract to build the tunnel. He said that his company was already on Mr. McDonald's bond for $400,000 for the construction of the Jerome Park Reservoir, and the officers had perfect confidence in him.

"The work of building and operating this road," he said, "is a great undertaking, and the possible death of the contractor while the work is in progress makes the problem a different one from the mere building of a public work.

"It is not true that any stockholder of this company desires to become a member of the construction company. We are in the bond business for legitimate profits, and there are all we wish. It is true that we have consulted with other companies in reference to Mr. McDonald's bond, because we naturally wish to know who our companions are, should we decide to become one of the surety companies."

President Lyman of the American Surety Company said that his company wished to know exactly who were interested with Mr. McDonald before it would go on his bond for such a large amount. He said that he expected no trouble in the matter finally.

SAYS TROUBLE IS OVERCOME.

It was said yesterday by an official of a surety company who has been present at all the conferences between John B. McDonald and the representatives of the surety companies that the difficulties in the way of the execution of the construction bond had been surmounted and that the bond would be ready for filing with the commission before the end of the week.

According to this official, those present at the final conference included Mr. McDonald and the lawyers representing the various interests, together with John R. Bland, President of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Baltimore; Thomas F. Goodrich, Vice President of the National Surety Company; James Bond, President of the American Bonding and Trust Company of Baltimore, and a representative of the Lawyers' Surety Company, of which Joel B. Erhardt is President.

"The newspapers have been misinformed on some points," said this official. "The question which has led to some delay in the execution of the bond was not one regarding the rate of compensation to be paid to the surety companies. There is now no disagreement whatever upon that point. The companies have fixed a rate which, I believe, is conceded to be reasonable by Mr. McDonald and the men who are backing him, and it is settled that his bond is to be guaranteed by the surety companies.

BIG MEN IN THE COMPANY.

"In order to afford the guarantees which the surety companies required, Mr. McDonald has obtained the support of some of the leading financiers of New York, who are to form a construction company, with a capital of $5,000,000. The incorporation papers will be filed early next week, and this company will become jointly responsible with Mr. McDonald to the surety companies for the execution ow the contract. Mr. McDonald himself will be a stockholder in the construction company."

The rapid transit amendment providing for the issuance of parts of the $35,000,000 in bonds for the construction of the tunnel by the Board of Estimate and the Controller without recourse to the Municipal Assembly, reached the Mayor yesterday. The bill was passed by the Legislature on Thursday, following the urgency message of the Governor. Mayor Van Wyck at once announced that there would be a public hearing on the matter at 10:30 o'clock on Wednesday morning, which is the earliest time under the law that it can be had, the law requiring that a hearing be advertised for at least two days. As the Mayor approved the measure before it was sent to Albany, it is reported that he will accept it for the city, and that it will be returned to Albany on Wednesday afternoon. The Governor will at once sign it.

Controller Coler expressed the opinion yesterday that this act will remove every shadow of doubt about legal form and regularity from the rapid transit bonds, and that they will sell in such lots as may be selected, for a large premium. His estimate of the premium is about $2,000,000, so that the city will not have to pay interest on more than $33,000,000 of bonds for the construction of the road.

WORK ON THE SIMPLON TUNNEL.

Consul at Berne Reports Progress on the Undertaking.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A report to the State Department from Consul Frankenthal, at Berne, records the progress of one of the greatest engineering enterprises of the century, which was begun Nov. 13, 1898, when the first blow was struck on the Simplon Tunnel. This tunnel will be twelve and a half miles long—the longest in the world—is to be completed in five and a half years, and is to cost $13,413,500. It will be the third tunnel connecting Italy with outlying countries by rail, and will save forty-three and a half miles between Paris and Milan.

There are many engineering features of this great undertaking, briefly referred to in the Consul's report, which make it of extraordinary interest to civil engineers. All of these were the inventions of Engineer Brandt, who died a year after the beginning of the work. Up to the date of the report—Dec 12 last—two and one-fifth miles of the tunnel has been completed.

LEARY REPORTS FROM GUAM.

Says Typhoid Epidemic Is Waning, Work Is Progressing, and Thanksgiving Service Was a Success.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The latest official news received here regarding the condition of affairs in Guam, the mid-Pacific possession of the United States, is contained in a report just received by the Secretary of the Navy from Capt. Leary, U. S. N., Governor of Guam. The report is dated Government House, Agana, Guam, L. I., Dec. 7, 1899, and is as follows:

"During the past week the epidemic of typhoid fever ashore seems to be waning, and I am pleased to report that nearly all of our men now in the hospital are doing well, and that there have been no deaths in the command since the three already reported, but unfortunately at this important period the Yosemite's ice machine is again out of commission, and the sick are crying for ice.

"We have been able to secure an additional force of native laborers to work on the sewer ditches, and the work is progressing favorably, as is that on the evaporating plant.

"I will take this opportunity to commend Lieut. Leopold for the excellent services that he has performed at this station, for his zeal, ability, and energy, and especially for his courageous determination to overcome obstacles and utilize all possible resources available or procurable for a successful termination of the difficult task assigned to him.

"The Thanksgiving Day service on shore at the Roman Catholic church was a great success, and was attended by a larger congregation than has ever gathered together before in this island. The entire assemblage seemed to evince a sincere, earnest, and devout interest in their first American Thanksgiving Day service, and reports from other villages assure me that the day was properly respected throughout the island, all of which is most gratifying to us as being representative of their cordial and faithful acceptance of the radical change of government.

"It is a pleasure to report that in response to my General Order No. 5, more than 200 people have already enlisted in the ranks of domestic and civil reformation, a small army of children are jubilant, and the wedding bells are yet a-ringing."

OLD HULK RECALLS A TRAGEDY.

Removal of New York Steamer Wreck Revives Memories of Disaster.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Texas, Jan. 27.—For nearly twenty-five years the wreck of the iron steamship City of Waco, sunk just outside the entrance to the jetties at this port, has been a menace to navigation, lying, as she did, in thirty-five feet of water, and directly in the track of vessels. After repeated appeals to the Government, the Engineer's Department was granted authority for the removal of the obstruction, and a contract was made to blow up the wreck and to leave a clear space of thirty-five feet of water over the débris.

The work was completed to-day, the remnants of the iron hull having been blown to pieces, and all that remains to be done is the removal of a few pieces of the machinery sticking out of the mud at the bottom of the Gulf.

The removal of the wreck recalls one of the most heartrending tragedies ever occurring upon the Mexican Gulf Coast, the destruction of a large steamer with all on board within plain view of a seaport, and in the midst of a fleet of fifteen steam and sailing vessels.

The City of Waco, owned by the New York and Texas Steamship Company, generally known as the Mallory Line, arrived on her last voyage from New York on the afternoon of Monday, Nov. 8, 1875, and came to anchor in the outer roads, as there was a strong southeast gale prevailing and a high sea running, which rendered it impossible for her to pass the bar at that time, but it was decided to make the attempt the next morning.

The gale increased after nightfall, being accompanied with thunder and lightning. About midnight the steamer suddenly broke into a mass of flame, and although the cries of those on board could be heard by the near-by vessels such a heavy sea was running as to render it impossible to launch a boat and no help could be given. The flames continued to eat into the ship until she burned to the water's edge and sank at her anchors.

SAILORS BLOWN OUT TO SEA.

On a Burning Ship, Wind Makes Them the Sport of the Waves.

CHATHAM, Mass., Jan. 27.—The terrific northwest gale, the heaviest blow for nearly a year, came very near claiming the lives of five Rockland seamen to-day, whose vessel, the schooner Helen, Capt. Hutchins, after losing both her fore and main sail through their catching fire from the burning cargo of lime, began to drift seaward.

Fortunately a friendly tug was near, and with the assistance of the life-saving crews of the Orleans and Old Harbor stations the five men were taken off, all badly frostbitten, while the schooner also was saved.

The crew had a terrible experience yesterday afternoon last night, and this forenoon battling with the fire and the mighty seas that were breaking over the little schooner, threatened with the great accumulation of ice to sink her.

Killed While Boarding a Train.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 27.—An unknown man, probably thirty-seven years of age, was killed while attempting to board a moving coal train on the Lehigh Valley Road at West Portal this afternoon. His head and one leg were cut off. On papers found in the man's clothing was found the name "Henry Fenders."

EAST RIVER TUNNEL PLAN

Councilmen on the Delay to Long Island Road's Application.

Members of the Railroad Committee with Which It Has Slumbered Hold Different Views.

The public hearing on the application of the Long Island Railroad Company for its tunnel under the East River will be heard in the Council Chamber to-morrow at 2 P. M., after about ten months of waiting on the part of the company, a delay which various members of the Council committee with which the application has slumbered interpret differently.

A great many people interested in rapid transit development have often wondered why the Long Island Company's application has been buried out of sight for so long a time, especially since the Atlantic Avenue Commission reported favorably upon the project, of which the tunnel under the East River to Cortlandt Street Ferry is an important link. A legislative bill bearing upon the commission's report was subsequently passed, but since then the Municipal Assembly up to a short time ago had apparently forgotten the subject.

The application for a franchise was sent in due course to the Municipal Assembly and referred to the proper committee. There it rested. For months there was considerable gossip around the City Hall concerning the delay, which, however, amounted to nothing. There seemed to be no political reason for the delay, and recently, since the new board was organized, mysterious hints have been thrown out from various quarters of a "hold-up" of the Long Island Company's franchise.

Renewed interest was given the project last week, when President Baldwin of the Long Island Company stated it was the intention of the company to begin building the tunnel simultaneously with the one to be built in Manhattan, providing the company could get the franchise it has been waiting for so long. Last Friday a notice was issued of the hearing to-morrow.

Members of the Council Railroad Committee who were seen yesterday expressed various divergent views on the matter. One or two of them seemed to know little or nothing about the tunnel, and one man thought he had voted for some such sort of a scheme several months ago, but he could not tell what happened then, and since that time he had forgotten all about it, he said, believing it dead.

Councilman Cassidy, a member of the committee from Queens, said: "We had one hearing nearly a year ago, and then another application was made three weeks ago. The first application died a natural death. It was among about twenty others of a similar character, but these seemed to be paper affairs, and we had no assurance from the representatives of the companies that they wanted a franchise for a bona fide scheme.

"We believed that these people desired to simply secure a valuable franchise to hold until they had a chance to sell out at a profit to some company really intending to build. Therefore these applications remained in committee.

"What I believe to be the Long Island Railroad Company's application appeared before us under the name of the New York and Long Island Terminal Railroad Company. Mr. Baldwin is President of both companies. Now, if the Long Island people want a franchise, why don't they ask under their own name in order to give the application a substantial flavor.

"I understand their last application is made under the same title. Personally I feel that if the city can satisfy itself that the application is genuine and can get from the Long Island Company adequate compensation, the franchise ought to be given to it.

"As the application bears directly upon the depression on the company's tracks as reported by the Atlantic Avenue Commission, I do not think that if the city grants a franchise it ought to pay one-half the cost for the depression of the tracks, as the bill provides. Considering the value of the franchise, the road ought to relieve the city of that expense.

"The bill as passed gives the company the right to use the street above the tunnel when built, and they can go ahead and use the street for trolleys if they like. A railroad company ought to pay for all these things. The Long Island Road has received valuable franchises which it has never paid for. They run their cars over the bridge to-day and don't pay a cent. I regard that privilege as a franchise. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company gets a rental for that, but the city gets none.

"It would be a great boon for the company to get into Manhattan. It is easy to see what it would be to have a terminal in this borough which doubtless would connect in time with the trunk lines centring in this city and in New Jersey, but I for one want to see the Long Island people show their hand.

"If they want this privilege, let them come out and say directly that it is for the company. We do not want any paper projects thrown at us with the real backers hiding in the dark. There has been no such thing as a 'hold-up' in the sense in which that is meant."

Councilman William J. Hyland, who lives up in the Bronx, said he knew very little about the proposed Long Island tunnel, but he would be willing to vote for it, providing the people of Brooklyn want it and really need it. "I am more interested in rapid transit up this way," said he.

"Come to think of it, there was an application up a year ago in committee from the Long Island Railroad Company, I am sure, and I feel sure I voted for it when it was brought up. I do not know what became of it, though. I guess it died a natural death.

"Do I know why? No, except that there was no one to take a sufficiently deep interest in the application. The Brooklyn members ought to know. I was instrumental in calling this last hearing. Harry Hart said they wanted a hearing, and I said: 'Go ahead, Harry.' I suppose the Brooklyn League has been writing letters about the tunnel. At this meeting six or eight months ago I don't know who voted for or against the franchise."

Councilman Harry C. Hart appeared to have the haziest possible idea of the matter, and was reluctant to discuss it. He declared in answer to a question that the application had been discussed by the committee several times. Asked what took place at the meetings when the application came up for discussion, he excused himself from answering on the ground that he was too busy," and also required time for reflection.

"What has been the cause of the delay in reporting on the petition, if it has been discussed several times?" queried his interlocutor.

"A question of law, I fancy," replied Mr. Hart, hesitatingly.

He would not say what this question of law was, and declined to talk any further.

Councilman Martin Conly candidly declared that the application had never been considered by the committee.

"What became of it after it was referred?" Mr. Conly was asked.

"It died, just died, like a good many other things that were left over from the old Board of Aldermen," he said.

"Do you mean that it did not come up for consideration at any time?"

"That is what I mean. It never came up once—just died."

"You presumably knew it was understood that the company was prepared to undertake the work forthwith. Were you in favor of the tunnel plan or opposed to it?"

"I didn't know whether they were ready to go on with it or not. Didn't know a thing about it, and don't know anything about it now. I never gave it a thought, for, as I told you, it never came up for consideration. It died—just died."

MYSTERY IN PRIEST'S DEATH.

It Is Thought Father Sullivan was Murdered in Springfield, Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 27.—An aspect of mystery surrounds the death of the Rev. Father James Sullivan, whose dead body was found early this morning by the janitor in the rear of the residence of Vicar General Hickey, which is back of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and the police are of the opinion that a murder was committed.

Father Sullivan was pastor of the Catholic church at Liberty, Adams County, Ill. He came to this city yesterday, and left the St. Nicholas Hotel about 4 o'clock in the evening. Accompanied by John W. O'Brien, an acquaintance, he walked as far as the Jefferson House, one block north of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where they parted. That was the last seen of him alive. His hat, overcoat, and coat were lying on the ground beside the body when found. There was no money, but a silver watch was found in his pocket. In one pocket was a ticket issued by a Quincy pawnbroker for a gold watch.

The mother and brother of the dead priest reside at Worcester, Mass., where the remains will be shipped.

COLLEGE BOYS CAUSE A RIOT.

Serious Trouble at Ninth Regiment Armory Over a Baseball Game—Attempt Made to Seize Arms.

The indoor baseball game played last evening between teams from the College of the City of New York and the Ninth Regiment at the armory in West Fourteenth Street ended in a riot.

The college boys and their adherents were not satisfied with the decision of the umpire in the second half of the fifth inning. The first protest was made to the umpire direct. This had no effect, and some of the college boys started in to make things lively. Their first move was to threaten the umpire. This was followed by a more serious demonstration, when a crowd of the students rushed to one end of the drill floor and tried to break open the cases in which the guns are kept. The protests against the umpire's decision had excited the students to such an extent that a crowd of those who had been sitting in the galleries rushed down to the drill floor and joined with the others in the attempted raid on the guns.

Meanwhile members of the Ninth Regiment, under the direction of an armorer, had gathered near the guns and were doing their best to prevent the students from breaking open the cases. Some one called the nearest policemen, who by persuasion and threats of arrest succeeded in clearing the armory.

A group of college boys stood on the street in front of the building for some time waiting for the umpire who had incurred their displeasure. The man was taken out of one of the other doors by the police, however, and escaped the threatened trouble.

At the time of the outbreak the score stood 11 to 9 in favor of the regiment team. The college boys up to that inning had held the score a tie, and the protest was against a decision of the umpire's which admitted 2 runs against them.

The only serious damage done as a result of the trouble was the wrecking of the large blackboard on which the score was posted.

The umpires, against whom the college boys became incensed were Messers. Lichtenstein and Jenks. As a result of the trouble orders will be issued by Col. Morris of the Ninth Regiment that the members shall not play with outside teams in future.

GAINS A DAY'S WATER SUPPLY.

Department Increases Capacity of Sodom and Carmel Reservoirs.

Special to The New York Times.

FISHKILL LANDING, Jan. 27.—The storage capacity of the Sodom and Carmel reservoirs for supplying New York City with water will be increased 300,000,000 gallons during the coming Summer by improvements which have been ordered by Commissioner Dalton, upon plans drawn by Chief Engineer Birdsall, at comparatively small expense.

It is proposed to raise the lip of the Sodom dam two feet by an iron work, supplemented by wood. This is the largest dam in the system and drains ninety square miles. Its normal capacity, aside from storage, is 30,000,000 gallons daily, and the gates are left open for this amount of water to escape. The elevation of the Carmel reservoir will be even greater. This is the second largest reservoir in the Croton system. During the two months of the extremely dry Summer 100,000,000 gallons were drawn from it daily, and there still remained another month's supply at the same rate when the heavy draught was stopped.

The material for the improvements has been ordered and the increased storage capacity will be ready for next Summer's use.

Chief Engineer Birdsall of the Department of Water Supply said last night that the proposed improvement of the Sodom and Carmel reservoirs would add 300,000,000 gallons to the supply, which is approximately the amount of water consumed in one day. There was nothing extraordinary about the use of planks made fast to the sills of the dams, Mr. Birdsall said, as the practice was followed nearly every year. By its use, the department is able to compound the water which falls early in the Spring, and while the supply will not be materially increased the fact that the city is able to hold enough for one day's needs is important, and might obviate considerable trouble.

Awards for Reservoir Lands.

Special to The New York Times.

FISHKILL LANDING, Jan. 27.—The Commissioners for the appraisal of additional lands taken for double reservoir No. 1 at Brewsters for the New York water supply system have just made their report. Eighty parcels of land were taken, the claims aggregating $369,350. The Commissioners allowed $162,597.03. The fees of witnesses were $8,088.95, and of Abram J. Miller and Frederic S. Barnum, who appeared as counsel for all the claimants, $5,342.79. For mineral rights $910 was awarded. The Commissioners appointed to make awards for lands taken for the Shenelda reservoir have filed their fifth and last report. The total amount awarded claimants was $400,490.

PHILIP D. ARMOUR, JR., DEAD.

Younger Son of Chicago's Millionaire Packer Stricken with Congestion of the Lungs in California.

PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 27.—News has been received of the sudden death of Phil D. Armour, Jr., at Montecito, near Santa Barbara. Young Armour was ill but twenty-four hours, and his death was due to congestion of the lungs. He was thirty-one years of age. He left Chicago three weeks ago in excellent health. Young Mr. Armour left Pasadena the first of last week, and had been at Montecito about ten days.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—The news of the death of Philip D. Armour, Jr., at Montecito, Cal., came as a complete surprise, as it was known that when he left for the Pacific Coast he was in the best of health. A telegram from a member of the party that accompanied young Mr. Armour from Chicago when he went to California to join his father conveyed the information to J. Ogden Armour, a brother.

It is undetermined whether the remains will be shipped to Chicago or interred in California, where the senior Armour has decided to live permanently.

Philip D. Armour, Jr., with his wife and two children, Philip D. III. and Lester, aged seven and five, respectively, went to California three weeks ago, the double purpose of the visit being apprehension for the health of Mr. Armour's oldest child, and a desire to be near Philip D. Armour, Sr., who had preceded them with his wife a fortnight or more.

P. D. Armour, Jr., was born in Milwaukee, but when a small child came with his parents to Chicago. He attended Phillips Andover Academy, and later Yale, but after two years left the university and traveled extensively in Europe. Soon after his return from Europe, and when he was barely of age, he married May, the daughter of John T. Lester.

Mr. Armour was a member of the Chicago, the Calumet, the Athletic, and the Wheaton Golf Clubs. He was one of the three members of the firm of Armour & Co., the other two being his father and his brother, J. Ogden Armour. He was not an athlete, but always had reasonably good health, and his sudden death will cause a great surprise to all who knew him.

The crew of four men were rescued by Howard E. Bell, who keeps a life-saving station on Calves Island.

INDIAN WAR PENSION BILL

The Senate Committee Acts Favorably on the Measure.

SURVIVORS OF EARLY WARS

Widows of Those Who Fought the Red Men Will Participate—Cost to the Government.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A number of wars, the very names of which are unknown to many Americans, are recalled by the action of the Senate Committee on Pensions in favorably reporting a bill to grant pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars from 1817 to 1842 inclusive. The first name on the list, the Seminole war, is of course well known, but the names that follow are those of the Fevre River war of 1827, the Sac and Fox war of 1831, the Sabine war of 1836-7, the Cayuse war of 1847-8, the Texas and New Mexico war of 1849-56, the California war of 1851-2, the Utah war of 1850-3, and the Oregon and Washington Territory wars from 1851 to 1856. The Seminole wars in Florida from 1842 to 1858 are also included.

The bill, which was introduced by Senator McBride, pensions everybody who served thirty days in any of these wars and was honorably discharged, and also pensions widows. Senator Gallinger has reported an amendment to the McBride bill annulling all contracts heretofore made between the veterans of these wars and pension attorneys or claim agents.

A former Pension Commissioner was once asked for an opinion as to the cost to the Government of the passage of such a bill. He estimated it at $730,656 for the first year and figured that the average pensionable period would be seven and two-thirds years.

There are, it is said, only 5 survivors of the Seminole war of 1817, and 120 widows. Of the Lafevre war, there remain but 14 survivors and 107 widows. Of the Sabine war, there remain but 221 survivors and 155 widows. Of the Cayuse war, there are 144 survivors and 82 widows. Of the Texas and New Mexico Indian wars, there still survive 1,448, with 890 widows. Of the California Indian war, there still survive 476 and 230 widows. Of the Indian wars of the Territories of Oregon and Washington, prior to 1856, there still survive 2,399 and 1,340 widows.

The committee in its report says: "The latest of these wars occurred forty years ago, and the estimated age of the survivors is fixed at sixty-five years, while estimated age of the Seminole survivors is ninety-four years.

"To the inestimable services of these pioneer men and soldiers we deem it unnecessary to refer. History recognizes the results they have achieved. In the South and West they endured the greatest privations, sacrifices, and sufferings. We owe to them largely, if not entirely, the acquisition of the vast empire of the Pacific Northwest.

"It having been the policy of the Government and the uniform course of legislation that service pensions should be granted at the expiration of forty years following the wars for which such pensions have been granted, it will be seen that this period has now been reached as to all the wars mentioned in the present bill, while as to some over seventy-seven years have elapsed since the war. Most of these old survivors are in needy circumstances, while all are in old age, and, as estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions, the average pensionable period cannot extend beyond about seven years hence."

WIFE WANTS A SEPARATION.

Mrs. White of Boston, Who Married Employer's Son, Seeks Relief.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—Mrs. Lucy White, the wife of R. H. White, Jr., has applied to the Probate Court for a separate maintenance, accusing her husband of neglect to support her, of abusing her, and of paying too much attention to other women. Mr. White, the respondent, is the son of R. H. White, the dry goods merchant, and he married his wife five years ago, when she was a saleswoman in his father's establishment. The marriage enraged Mr. White senior, and it was several years before the young couple received the parental blessing.

Mrs. Bartlett, the bride's mother, was also opposed to the match, and she, it is said, has never welcomed her son-in-law to her home.

Young Mrs. White is living with friends in Roslyndale, and has been with them since her separation from Mr. White some five weeks ago. These friends had learned of the abusive treatment which Mrs. White claims was shown her by her husband and wished to have her remain with them. Her friends say that her husband has neglected her, has been away from home a great deal, and has made female acquaintances, which last-named fact was the formal cause for the legal proceedings.

ANTI-BRYAN PLOT IN KINGS.

Hugh McLaughlin, Mr. Brewster Thinks, Wants Hill or Van Wyck to Head Ticket.

Eugene V. Brewster, one of the leaders of the Chicago Platform Democracy in Brooklyn, declared yesterday that that borough was the headquarters of a conspiracy to deprive William Jennings Bryan of the Democratic nomination for President. Mr. Brewster alleges that Hugh McLaughlin wants to have either ex-Justice Augustus Van Wyck or ex-Senator David B. Hill head the Democratic ticket. The conspiracy against Mr. Bryan, Mr. Brewster says, has ramifications in every State in the Union.

"I have told Mr. Bryan of the situation in Kings County," said Mr. Brewster, "and have asked him to come over here to the Academy of Music to speak. I hardly think he will, because he does not wish to make more than one speech in New York now. I know, of course, that he takes no part in local politics, but here is a bit of National politics.

"I don't know whether Mr. McLaughlin wants to nominate Hill or Van Wyck for President, but I do know that Gorman is behind the National movement to defeat Mr. Bryan. Perhaps he wants the nomination himself. There is also an element trying to bring Grover Cleveland to the front again."

MURDERER CLIFFORD'S CASE.

Gov. Voorhees Refuses to Lay It Again Before the Court of Pardons.

Charles J. Peshall, the Jersey City lawyer who secured the second stay granted to Edward Clifford, who killed Assistant Division Superintendent William G. Watson, at Weehawken, on March 5, 1896, yesterday sent to Gov. Voorhees a telegram asking that Clifford's case be again laid before the Court of Pardons. In support of his request, Mr. Peshall said he had a petition, signed by all the members of the Legislature, asking that Clifford's sentence be commuted.

Gov. Voorhees sent this reply: "The matter has been finally disposed of, and further agitation can only result in raising in the prisoner's mind false hopes which are sure to end in disappointment.

"FOSTER M. VOORHEES."

When Clifford was resentenced to be hanged on Feb. 9 his counsel applied for a writ of certiorari, on the ground that the insanity proceedings had in the case should have been before a jury and not before Judge Lippincott. The argument will be heard this week. Should the writ be denied counsel will take an appeal. This will act as a stay.

Travelers' Sound Money League.

President H. W. Dearborn will issue a call within a few days for a convention of the Commercial Travelers' Sound Money League. The present plan is to hold the convention in this city the latter part of February, and to have speeches delivered by Senator Chauncey M. Depew, ex-Mayor Charles F. Warwick of Philadelphia, Edward Lauterbach, and others. Since the campaign of 1896 the league has been incorporated and reorganized. Among the members of its Advisory Committee are Senator Hanna, J. H. Manley of Maine, Postmaster Cornelius Van Cott, Edward Lauterbach, and Col. A. A. Pope of Boston.

Mme. Calvé Not to Sing To-night.

Maurice Grau had arranged for Mme. Calvé this evening to make her only appearance in concert this season. He was informed by her yesterday that she was suffering from rheumatism, making it absolutely impossible for her to appear. In consequence of her indisposition, Mr. Grau is compelled to substitute Miss Suzanne Adams. Prices had been advanced for the concert because of the expected appearance of Mme. Calvé, and they will now be reduced to the regular amount. Persons who purchased tickets at the advanced rate may either have their money refunded or retain their seats and get the difference between the regular price and the amount paid for the seats.

INSANE MOTHER TRIES MURDER.

Four Policemen Necessary to Save Her Children's Lives.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—In a fit of insanity to-day, caused, it is believed, by too close attention to church duties, Mrs. Anna Kudzen attempted to murder her husband and six children, and was only subdued after a terrible struggle, in which Kudzen had one eye destroyed and a policeman named Peters was severely scalded with a kettle of boiling water which the frenzied woman threw at him.

Kudzen was awakened by the screams of his children and saw his wife standing near their beds holding a potato masher in one hand. Kudzen asked her what she was doing.

"Never mind," she replied. "The Lord has told me to kill them all."

Kudzen immediately seized her and sent his children for assistance, but it took the combined strength of Kudzen and four police officers to subdue the woman. One of the children was slightly scalded by the water thrown at the officer.

Insurance Agent Found Dead.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Jan. 27.—Fred Lee, a prominent insurance agent of this State, was found dead in the river here early to-day. He probably was murdered. The affair is a mystery.

AUTHORITIES IN CUBA CLASH.

HAVANA, Jan. 27.—The Discusion says the order of Gov. Gen. Wood instructing military commanders not to interfere in the functions of civil authorities except in extreme cases virtually gives Gen. Emilio Nunez, the Civil Governor of Havana, and not Gen. Ludlow, the Military Governor, power in the matter of the budget.

Gen. Nunez says the matter of the budget is only one instance of what will result from his undefined prerogatives. If Gen. Ludlow be empowered to use his own discretion as to whether or not he shall attend to certain matters himself, the position of Gen. Nunez as Civil Governor, it is asserted, will become farcical.

MR. PAYN NOT TALKATIVE

Sees Chairman Odell, but Refuses to Discuss the Situation.

Mr. Odell Hopes the Controversy Will Be Settled at a Caucus of Senators on Tuesday.

Louis F. Payn, Superintendent of the State Insurance Department, it was said yesterday, realizes that he has to go, and at last believes that his successor will be named by Gov. Roosevelt to-morrow night and will be confirmed by the Senate at an early day. Mr. Payn was not in a talkative mood when he visited the Fifth Avenue Hotel. He refused to talk with reporters, except to admit that he had seen Chairman B. B. Odell, Jr., of the Republican State Committee.

Mr. Odell intimated early in the day that he would give out a statement to the press, and shortly before going up town to a dinner with Leader Charles Hess last night said:

"I had a pleasant interview with Mr. Payn. I do not understand that he will resign or withdraw. I am hopeful that the controversy will be satisfactorily settled and within party lines at a caucus of Republican Senators, which I am informed will be held on Tuesday.

"The nomination of Francis Hendricks of Syracuse will, I understand, be sent to the Senate on Monday. I do not know whether there are enough votes to confirm his nomination, nor will I know until I go to Albany, possibly on Monday. But I believe Mr. Hendricks will be confirmed."

Mr. Odell declined to say anything about the attitude of the organization in the matter. It is understood, and neither Mr. Odell nor Mr. Payn will affirm or deny it, that Mr. Payn asserted that he could control at least six votes in the Republican caucus just so long as he wanted them.

Senator Platt did not come over from Washington yesterday on account, it was said, of the illness of his wife. Some of Mr. Payn's friends intimated that the Senator did not care for another interview with Mr. Payn just at this time. Mr. Payn left the Grand Union Hotel in the early afternoon, ostensibly for Albany, but it was intimated that he might have gone to Washington.

Le Grand C. Tibbits, ex-Senator from Rensselaer, and one of the few Republicans who voted against the confirmation of Mr. Payn three years ago, suggested that the organization had sacrificed Mr. Payn because Senator Platt feared that his retention in office would materially strengthen the hands of ex-Gov. F. S. Black, who, in many quarters, is strongly suspected of a desire to depose Mr. Platt as leader of the State organization.

No matter how the controversy results politicians believe it will be the cause of serious factional differences in the Republican Party.

COLORED REPUBLICANS DINE.

Edward Lauterbach Comments on Their Loyalty—Boom for Lieut. Gov. Woodruff.

The Young Men's Colored Republican Association of the Borough of Manhattan gave a dinner last night in the West Side Lyceum, Fifty-second Street and Seventh Avenue, to the colored Republican workers of the city. About 100 guests sat down at 9:30 o'clock, and the speaking began about an hour later. W. H. Butler, President of the association, presided, and Charles W. Anderson acted as toastmaster.

Edward Lauterbach, who was warmly welcomed, was the first speaker. So far as he was concerned, he said, he would never forget the unselfish loyalty of the colored men of the Republican Party. They at all times stood by him. While he was Chairman of the County Committee he was often at odds with Mayor Strong and the City Government. There was maladministration by men who called themselves Republicans, but who were the greatest enemies the Republican Party had ever known in this city. It was then that the loyalty of the colored Republicans was shown, and they never asked for anything in return.

Because of their patriotism and sincere Republicanism, it had become the fashion to say they were Republicans because they couldn't help it. He would say, however, that they were Republicans because more than any other people in New York or elsewhere they were especially Americans. They needed not to be naturalized. Many of them could trace their Americanism back to Revolutionary times. He called on them to show their party loyalty by helping to reelect President McKinley. Mr. Lauterbach's remarks were often loudly applauded.

Letters of regret were read from Senator Thomas C. Platt, Gov. Roosevelt, Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, Secretary of War Elihu Root, and Charles A. Hess. On motion of George E. Wibecan, Jr., who represented the Brooklyn colored Republicans, a resolution was unanimously adopted heartily indorsing Mr. Woodruff for the Vice Presidency. Speaker Wibecan spoke of Mr. Woodruff's "incorruptible patriotism" and integrity of his private character.

Other speakers were Judson W. Lyons, Senator Elsberg, Job E. Hedges, Assemblymen Henry and Gherardi Davis, George R. Manchester, Henry Burrell, Aldermen Matthews, Ordman, and Parsons, Bishop W. B. Derrick, and T. Thomas Fortune.

McCARREN TIRES OF INQUIRY.

Senator May Resign from Committee Now Trying Mr. Coffey.

Democratic politicians in Brooklyn were much interested yesterday in a report that Senator P. H. McCarren had become tired of serving on the special committee of the County Committee, which is hearing the charges against Senator Coffey, and intended to resign. Mr. McCarren, it was said, does not fancy the alleged farcical manner in which the inquiry is being conducted.

One of Senator McCarren's associates in Willoughby Street said yesterday afternoon that he did not know that the Senator contemplated resigning from the committee.

"I don't think he would get out merely because some people were trying to make a farce out of the affair," he continued. "Such action would in effect look like a moral victory for the Coffey people. If the Senator does resign, however, it will be because he is very busy in Albany and cannot find time to attend the sessions of the committee."

Socialist-Labor Party Convention.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 27.—A National Convention of Socialist-Labor Party representatives began a session in the Common Council Chamber in this city to-day. Fifty delegates from various parts of the United States were called to order by Henry L. Slobodin, who is the National Secretary of the party. Temporary organization was effected by the election of Frank A. Silverman of Rochester as Chairman and Richard Kitchelt of Buffalo as Secretary. The following Committee on Rules to govern the convention was appointed: Messrs. Katz of New Jersey, Fenner of Massachusetts, Gerber of New York, Edlin of California, and Crowell of Missouri.

Strike in a Montana Mine.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 27.—A. M. Holter of Helena, Vice President of the recently organized Frisco Consolidated Mining Company, which corporation owns the principal mines of the Coeur d'Alene (Idaho) region, has received telegraphic advices from Manager McDonald of a rich strike made while drifting from the 1,000-foot level of the Helena-Frisco Mine. The magnitude of the strike may be regarded as almost phenomenal.

Factory to Move to End a Strike.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—The strike at the Temple Glove Factory at Jamaica Plain, which began several weeks ago, is still on; and to-day Louis Weisner, junior member of the firm, said that the plant would in all probability move to Gloversville, N. Y., before March 1. About sixty girl operatives are out.

Labor Troubles in Germany.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—During the first nine months of last year, 78,300 persons in the German Empire engaged in strikes, the majority of the troubles occurring during the Summer months. Detailed statements of these strikes are furnished in a report to the State Department by Consul Worman, at Munich.

TRYING NEW AIR MOTORS.

Unsatisfactory Power System on Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Streets to be Abandoned.

The Metropolitan Street Railway Company is experimenting with new air motors for use on the Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Street lines. The experiment will continue for several months in the hopes that a thoroughly satisfactory system may be found eventually. Ever since the present air motors have been in use there has been more or less trouble. The "chuck-chuck" and "swish-swish" of the starting and stopping of the motors has been an annoyance to pedestrians and horses at street crossings. The dirty trail of oil left along the tracks has helped to aggravate the feeling that has arisen against the cars in use. The worst drawback, however, is the fact that many times the line has been compelled to go back to the old horse-car system of transportation.

President H. H. Vreeland, in speaking yesterday of the tests being made, said:

"When we put the air motors on the line we did not lay rails for the new cars. Because of an accident to the machinery supplying the power, we have been running the horse cars on the lines for two days. We have been experimenting with what is known as the 'Hardy' motor, since Thursday. To give this motor a thorough test, new rails, specially adapted, will be laid. The horse-car rails are not suited for the use of air motors. To the fact that we did not relay the rails when we began to use the air motors, but merely changed the wheels on the cars, the jarring sensation experienced by the passengers on the line is probably due."

PLAN TO INCREASE MARRIAGES.

Jersey City Company Will Pay $250 to a Couple After Certain Rules Have Been Complied With.

A new matrimonial business scheme that has been introduced from Germany, where it is said to have failed to succeed, has been started in Jersey City, at 47 Montgomery Street, after the principals had taken legal advice that it was not against the laws of that State. By paying an initiation fee of $30 a man or a woman may, if a thousand initiation fees have been paid in, get $250 on their marriage.

Charles A. McGuire and Franklin B. Packard are, respectively, the President and Secretary of what is called the Mutual Home Aid Association, which has got up the scheme, but their home addresses do not appear in either the Jersey City or the New York City Directory. The association was opened about two weeks ago, and the principals are said by the people in the building to have come from New York.

The principals say there are thousands of people in this country who are kept from entering the state of matrimony by lack of means, and it is their purpose to reach them and remove the great obstacle from their path. Their circulars, which bear blank applications for membership, say that "the association is not an insurance company into which a person must pay his money for perhaps years and only hope to get something out of it for other persons after he is dead. Nor is it a beneficial society, in which a member must wait until he is sick to obtain a benefit. It is far in advance of all these inasmuch as it pays its certificate holders the benefit when they enter that state which all look forward to—matrimony."

No matter how anxious and in how great a hurry a couple may be to get married, they will have to exercise their patience until 1,000 membership certificates of what is called a circle, at $30 each, are sold by the association. If the circle is complete, couples may begin marrying, and the association will then proceed to assess the members 30 cents each to pay itself for its trouble.

The promoters will also retain $50 out of the $250. Should, however, a circle not be completed within a reasonable time, the promoters promise to refund the initiation fees to the members.

VICTIM BAGS NO SWINDLERS.

Rittenberg Travels Far, but Vainly Looks for "Green-Goods" Men.

William F. Rittenberg, a lumberman, whose home is in Valentine, Mich., yesterday gave up his search for "green goods" men who had obtained $600 from him on a promise to send him bills worth $3,000 by express, and returned home after vainly seeking for a chance to shoot the swindlers.

Rittenberg, while in a logging camp last Fall, received a "green goods" circular, telling the usual tale of plates, which had been stolen from the Government, and within a few days he decided that this opportunity was to be preferred to the swinging of an axe in a lumber camp. When he reached this city on Dec. 10 he registered at the Yonkers Hotel in Yonkers as "O. Zumsell" in accordance with the instructions.

One of the "green goods" operators, who described himself as J. B. Hoffman of 124 Bond Avenue, Baltimore, soon called, and after showing a sample of the bills, took Rittenberg by a circuitous route to a house in Greenpoint, where the lumberman paid over $600. The counterfeit money was placed in a valise, he said, and it was agreed that it would be safer if expressed to Michigan. The contented Rittenberg then started home, and soon received a letter and a batch of alleged newspaper clippings, which stated that the valise had been confiscated by United States Secret Service agents, while on its way to the express office.

At the suggestion of a friend, Rittenberg returned to this city, and reported his troubles to the police, and then to the Federal authorities. The swindlers not being located, Rittenberg started out himself with a revolver, saying: "I'll catch them fellows myself." For two weeks he has been hunting for them in the saloons on Sixth Avenue and along the Bowery.

Becoming discouraged yesterday, he concluded to go back to the timber district of Michigan.

GOV. GEN. WOOD AT SANTIAGO.

Observes Signs of Improvement on His Tour of Inspection.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Jan. 27.—Gov. Gen. Wood, Gen. Chaffee, and Col. Black arrived at noon after an overland trip from Manzanillo. Gen. Demetrio Castillo headed a party of Cubans who went by special train to San Luis and rode from there fifteen miles on horseback to meet Gen. Wood. A thousand persons were gathered at the station to meet the Governor General's party.

A peculiar feature of the antagonism of the Cuban patriots toward the Americans is displayed in the effort of the Cuban Club to excel the Americans in the demonstration in honor of Gen. Wood. To-night a reception and banquet, the most elaborate ever given here, occurred.

Gen. Wood says he observed numerous signs of improvement on the plantations and in the mines along the route of his trip. The party will leave for Guantanamo and the north coast Tuesday morning.

Birdsall; "Thoughts of Yesterday," Amy Willets; "Odds and Ends," Elizabeth H. Cocke Thayer; "The New Century," George R. Ellsler; "College Fraternities," Lila K. Willets.

Five Altars for a Chicago Church.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—The Church of Notre Dame, (French,) one of the most beautiful edifices in this city, has contracted for five marble altars of the famous stone of Carrare, Italy. The new altars will cost $50,000, and will be dedicated on Easter Sunday. The beautiful stained glass windows in this church are said to be unsurpassed by any church in this country. Other improvements in the church will bring the total outlay up to $100,000. Not one cent of debt will be incurred by these changes, as the parish fund is one of the strongest in this city.

PUERTO RICO MAY SUFFER

American Interests Protest Against Removal of Tariff.

TOBACCO MEN TAKE THE LEAD

It Is Said the President Has Changed His Mind About Free Trade for the Island.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—It was only a few days ago that Representative Payne of New York introduced a bill providing for the extension to Puerto Rico of the advantages of free trade with the United States, and reciprocal freedom of trade in the other direction, and declared that the bill was to be passed. This was in accord with the recommendations of the President and the understanding that unless free trade was given to the people of Puerto Rico they must at once suffer many inconveniences resulting from the transfer of authority from Spain to the United States, the loss of Spain's trade, and the failure to secure equivalent advantages from the United States.

There was a great howl of indignation from the protectionist part of the Republican Party. Remonstrances from every interest that feared a reduction of profits were made, and a particular objection was lodged here from the seed-leaf tobacco growers of Connecticut. The resistance to the free trade proposition took form in the proposed amendment offered by Senator Platt of Connecticut to the Puerto Rico bill already introduced in the Senate, by the terms of which the Puerto Ricans are to pay 80 per cent. of the United States tariff and enjoy a 20 per cent. reduction on all goods dutiable sent to the United States.

The Republicans have not yet adjusted themselves to the change that appears to have come over them, but some of the papers of that party, presumably well informed, assert that the President himself has changed his mind, and that he will consent to the application of a tariff against Puerto Rico that will save the interests that feel a menace in the proposition for Puerto Rican free trade.

The abandonment of the free trade proposition, which Puerto Ricans say is vital to them, is not to be accomplished by direct methods, but upon the declaration that the announcement of a free trade plan for Puerto Rico might be taken as an admission that Puerto Rico has become a part of the United States; and is therefore entitled to be treated with on terms of advantage like those to be enjoyed by any State or Territory. The Constitutional shield thus interposed against all our new possessions is to be made broad enough to justify Congress in refusing Puerto Rico the opportunity to thrive.

Mention has been made of the fact that in the caucus of Democrats of the Senate it was suggested by a Democrat that the opposition take the ground that the recommendation of the President be pushed by the Democrats with all the power they could muster. It was also mentioned that this suggestion met with no expression of favor. Democrats still entertain the idea that upon this proposition there could be no ground for dispute, and that the chance was one not to be ignored by a party divided on most other questions. It is apparent to many Democrats that free trade between the United States and Puerto Rico is to be prevented in the interest of certain American producers who might have their profits slightly curtailed if the plan was adopted.

GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO.

Senate Committee on the Island Discusses the Foraker Bill and Makes Changes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Senate Committee on Puerto Rico has decided, so far as it can decide, that the island whose affairs it has under its particular care shall be known as Porto Rico, and not Puerto Rico, as fixed by a recent Executive order. The question came up to-day in the meeting of the committee in connection with the Foraker bill providing a form of government for the island, and the decision upon the spelling of the name was unanimous.

The committee went over the bill in detail, deciding upon many changes in phraseology and some alteration in the general provisions of the measure. Probably one of the most important changes was to strike out the word "constitution" wherever it appeared in the original print of the bill, which extended the provisions of the Constitution as well as of the laws of the United States to the island. The change was made because of the opinion generally expressed by the members of the committee that our Constitution is not suited to the Puerto Rican people. The opinion was also quite general that the extension of the Constitution was not necessary. Some of the Senators expressed the opinion that the natives of the island were not yet prepared for jury trials.

Another important amendment provided for the retirement of Puerto Rican coins, and the substitution for them of coins of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to redeem the silver coin known as the peso, and all other silver and copper Puerto Rican coins now in circulation at the present rate of 60 cents in the money of the United States for one peso, this rate to be applied in the exchange of all other coins. No coins but those of the United States are to be legal tender in Puerto Rico for more than three months after the passage of this act.

Another provision authorizes the President to appoint an officer of the army to be Governor of the island, notwithstanding any present laws to the contrary, but the appointment of such officer is made optional with the President. All laws enacted by the Puerto Rican Legislature are to be reported to Congress, which reserves the right to annul them if considered necessary.

The provisions of the bill relating to the questions of the tariff, the Federal courts, the internal revenue, and a Delegate in the Congress of the United States were passed over until a full attendance of members of the committee could be secured, one or two of the members being absent during a greater part of the day. There was, however, more or less discussion of the provisions relating to all these subjects, and especially to that giving free trade to the island with the United States proper.

The consensus of opinion of the members present seemed to be favorable to a slight duty, amounting to 25 or 30 per cent., on articles imported into the United States from other countries. It was decided to amend the provision relating to a Congressional Delegate so as to require that if the provision is left in the bill, the Delegate shall read and write the English language.

The provision for the election of members of the lower house of the Puerto Rican Legislature was left unchanged, but there was considerable discussion of an amendment suggested by Senator Fairbanks abolishing the Legislature and putting the Government entirely in the hands of a council to be appointed by the President of the United States, this council to consist of twelve members, and only five of them to be residents of the island.

The committee will probably meet again Wednesday to complete the bill.

Puerto Rican Exports and Imports.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The War Department gave out for publication to-day the following summary of imports and exports of merchandise in the Island of Puerto Rico during the month of July, 1899. The total value of merchandise imported for the month was $864,205. Articles of food and animals amounted to $391,509, or 46 per cent. of the total imports. Manufactured articles to the value of $336,158, or 39 per cent. of the total imports. Merchandise to the value of $789,730 was exported from the several ports in the island during said month. Products of agriculture amounted to $622,019, or 79 per cent. of the total; manufactures to $144,526, or 18 per cent. of the total.

AMNESTY FOR THE FILIPINOS.

It Is Said When Otis Gives the Word the Government Will Be Ready to Grant Pardon.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—An amnesty proclamation will be issued to the Filipinos whenever Gen. Otis reports that the situation in the islands justifies such action, which it is now believed he will soon do. This proclamation will grant amnesty to all who will lay down their arms and return to their homes within a specified time, and will notify all others that they will be treated as outlaws.

This policy was suggested at the Cabinet meetings about two months ago, when it was reported that the insurrection was practically at an end. It was then said that a policy of treating all insurgents in arms as brigands was considered, but that Gen. Otis reported that the time was not yet up. It is now believed, however, that the rebellion is practically put down, and that a few more aggressive movements like those of the past few days will see the end of Aguinaldo's so-called army.

PRAISE FOR NAVAL FIGHTERS.

Men in Watson's Fleet Commended—The Admiral Reports Deaths.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Admiral Watson cables the department to-day of the part taken by the navy in Kobbe's campaign, and says, "Capt. Rodgers commends Moore of the Helena, Gilpin of the Mariveles, Moale, Cook, Yuenzli, Castleman, and Cadet Evans for services rendered during the expedition."

The Admiral also reports the following deaths in the fleet: Lawrence Orson Adams, apprentice, of the Solace; W. P. Walker, ordinary seaman, of the Wheeling; Henry Thomas, landsman, of the Bennington; James Franklin, ordinary seaman, of the Castine, and P. C. Fenaney, private marine, of the New Orleans.

NAVY TAKES COALING STATION.

Admiral Watson Occupies Isabella and Establishes a Garrison.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Admiral Watson reports this morning that he has taken possession of Isabella coaling station and established a marine garrison there under command of Lieut. Long. A short time ago, feeling the need of a coaling station for the use of the smaller vessels in the Philippine Archipelago in the southern islands remote from Manila, Admiral Watson dispatched a vessel to look into the conditions at Zamboanga, where the Spaniards had maintained a garrison and a small coaling station for many years. It was found upon investigation, however, that the harbor at that point was not suitable for naval vessels, owing to shallow water, and attention being directed elsewhere, a small but perfectly protected and deep harbor was found on Basilan Island, where the Spaniards had already established a coaling station. The navy took possession of this, garrisoned the place, and is taking steps to add to its coal supply.

The Solace sailed to-day from Manila for San Francisco, and on the way she will touch at the new coaling station, as well as at Iloilo, Cebu, and Guam, and thence, returning to Yokohama, will strike across the Pacific for San Francisco. She will carry the bodies of Capt. Nichols, who died while in command of the Monadnock, and Capt. Ingate of the Marine Corps, who died at Guam from a surgical operation.

DENTISTS FOR THE ARMY.

Effort Is Being Made to Appoint One for Each Regiment.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A strong effort is being made to open the army to dental surgeons, and a bill has been prepared for introduction in Congress authorising the appointment of such surgeons with the rank of Major, so as to allow one for each regiment. Adjt. Gen. Corbin and Surgeon Gen. Sternberg disapprove the proposed legislation.

A similar move is being made to have veterinary surgeons incorporated into the regular establishment as commissioned officers, but, like the dental surgeon scheme, the plan is said to lack the favor and support of the military authorities.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—A new fourteen-pounder semi-automatic rapid-fire gun, made by the Vickers-Maxim Company for the United States Navy Department, was tested this week in the presence of the United States Naval Attaché, Lieut. Commander Colwell, and the Admiralty officials. Twelve rounds were fired satisfactorily and 2,500 feet initial velocity was secured with seventeen tons pressure. The weapon will now be shipped to the United States.

DR. PARKHURST ON SALOONS

Sunday Beer Selling, He Says, Should Be Made Legal.

Better, He Declares, than Unenforced Law, and a Weapon Against Tammany Spoliation.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, in a talk at his home last night on the moral and political conditions in New York, expressed himself to a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES as in favor of permitting the sale of beer during certain hours on Sunday.

"I believe," he said, "that it would be better if it were provided by law that saloons should be open for certain hours on Sunday, and that they should be allowed to sell beer as well as soft drinks; but I would not include the privilege of selling either whisky or any other distilled liquor in such a statute.

"There would be three chief advantages, which would be derived from allowing the saloons to remain open part of the day each Sunday.

"In the first place, it is not so degrading to public morals to have an imperfect law on the statute books, provided it is enforced, as it is to have a more perfect law that is absolutely ignored.

"In the second place, just so much opportunity would be taken away for traffic between the police and the lawbreakers.

"In the third place, it would secure us the undivided support of the German population, and the direct benefit of such a gain is due to the fact that a combination between native Americans, Germans, and Hebrews ought to enable us to gain a steady victory over Tammany.

"I don't suppose that so long as the present administration is in power any such law would be enforced, or, for that matter, any excise law. Tammany is naturally opposed to any such scheme, because a legal provision for the Sunday opening of saloons would tend to destroy its revenues, and the revenues of Tammany Hall are its only raison d'etre. Tammany cannot afford to favor such a plan.

"Restricted Sunday opening would surely weaken the Tammany organization, and would go a long way toward securing another city administration.

"You cannot make Tammany enforce any excise law. You cannot compel that set of freebooters to enforce the excise laws any more than you can compel a burglar to give up his stealing. Tammany would no more favor the Sunday opening of saloons than it would favor the licensing of disorderly women.

"This effort which is now being made to clean up Harlem cannot succeed. The method is ill-advised. The only way to clean up Harlem is to change the administration. Tammany would drive the women off the streets and into houses, because it would make more if they were not on the streets.

"You cannot change a single spot on the leopard, and the only thing to do is to kill the leopard—or, if you prefer, the tiger.

"A law with limited provisions and strictly enforced is infinitely better than the most rigorous statute, either enforced laxly or not administered at all. An unenforced law tends to deprave the public conscience.

"The only remedy lies in a change of the city administration. Any such cleaning up as that crusade on the lower east side is of little value. I told the Society for the Prevention of Crime that if the Police Commissioners would give me fifty picked men I could clean up that district in a few weeks, but Tammany does not want it cleaned up. However, I have no method for dealing with these evils. What I am after is to stop the turning of these evils into revenue producers for Tammany Hall by means of unenforced laws."

TRIED TO BURN DRUG STORE.

Authorities Say Five Indiana Men Conspired to Commit Arson.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Jan. 27.—Dr. J. C. Casto and four of his clerks were arrested to-day for a conspiracy to burn and blow up his drug store this morning. The fire was discovered in its incipiency, and after it was extinguished dynamite and powder were found to be placed where they would work the most destruction. Not less than thirty lives were endangered.

Long fuses were attached to barrels of oil. Ingenious connection between the place where the fire was started and the oil paints and the like in a stairway had been made. Holes had been cut through the floor to make draughts. From thirty to forty pounds of dynamite was found, and gunpowder was in a number of places.

Schooner Industry Ashore.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 27.—The schoner Industry is ashore on the rocks at Cockenoes Island, near the entrance to Norwalk Harbor, pounding badly, and probably will be a total wreck. She was abandoned by her crew during the gale of yesterday, while bound from Bridgeport for Harlem River. Capt. John Merritt and a seaman named Meyers, who comprised the crew of the vessel, had a narrow escape from death, being taken from the schooner in an exhausted condition by the lighthouse tender Cardenia. Owing to the high sea which was running to-day, it was impossible to approach the vessel, but she is in a very bad position, and it is thought she will go to pieces.

At the new Catholic Church of Monticello, which was erected last Summer at a cost of $30,000, two plate glass windows measuring 18 by 30 feet were blown in and demolished and many valuable altar pieces were broken. The windows alone cost about a thousand dollars. Many small buildings in the path of the storm were blown down and many chimneys blown from the houses.

BLAZE IN FIRE-PROOF BUILDING

Firemen Have to Break Down the Doors Before They Can Enter—Damage About $25,000.

Fire and water did damage to the extent of $25,000 in the eight-story brick and granite fire-proof building, 15 to 19 West Fourth Street and 263 to 271 Mercer Street last night. The fire was discovered by Policeman Upham of the Mercer Street Station, who happened to be at Mercer and Fourth Streets, when he heard glass falling. He looked up and saw flames leaping from the top story of the building.

When the firemen, under Chief Croker, arrived at the scene they found it necessary to break down the massive doors before they could enter the structure. After forty-five minutes' work the flames were extinguished.

The floor where the fire occurred is occupied by the Brooklyn Waist Company. The seventh floor is occupied by J. Frederick Lenhard, hat and cap leathers. Other tenants are Steinberg Brothers, pantaloons; M. Goldberg, Waring Hat Company, Charles Lyford & Son, Tenny & Dixon, and Levitt & Shonberg.

When the fire was discovered there was no one in the building. Chief Croker believes the flames had been spreading for some time. He says that when his men reached the top floor they found the floor so hot that it was with difficulty they were able to remain in the place.

REGISTER HOWE'S BIRTHDAY.

Comments on Fee System to Employes Who Remember Him.

Register James R. Howe of Brooklyn yesterday received a basket of flowers, a gold matchbox, and a leather cigar case from the employes of his office. The day was the sixty-first anniversary of his birth.

In accepting the gifts Mr. Howe said, among other things: "I hope you will pile up the fees that they may be such an object lesson that no one will dare hereafter to go into office and take as his emoluments fees which in a year amount to as much as the average man can earn in a lifetime."

The business was started about 20 years ago by William Kairer, who was murdered by Theodore Lambert, a colored burglar.

MR. FALLOWS'S TEACHERS' BILL

Explains the Provisions of His Measure for the Settlement of the Salary Question.

In speaking of the teachers' bill, which he introduced at Albany last week, Assemblyman E. H. Fallows said yesterday:

"The endless friction in our schools, I am convinced, is due more to the absence of some satisfactory system of paying teachers' salaries than to anything else. If they could be determined once for all on a satisfactory basis, with the assurance of steady yearly promotions for merit, there would be little need for other changes in the law. The uncertainty as to teachers' salaries and the complete control of a political Board of Estimate over them are clearly shown in the budget for 1900. The Ahearn law was never intended as a local schedule. It was supposed that the city officials would allow money enough for regular yearly increments. Unfortunately they did not do so. It is with this condition that my bill is concerned, although I differ with the Ahearn law as to the salaries to be paid after the fixed periods of service. They should be much higher.

"Now, there are various ways of remedying this condition by legislation. One is to enact the schedule in effect in September, as Mr. Ahearn's amendment would do. The other way is the one I have followed in my bill. It provides the following minima, which are considerably higher than those suggested by Senator Ahearn: No teacher shall receive less than $900 and no male teacher less than $800. After ten and fifteen years of service no woman teacher shall receive less than $1,080 and $1,320, respectively. Men after twelve years' service shall receive not less than $2,400. No Vice Principal, first assistant, or head of department serving as such shall receive less than $1,440, while men in those positions shall be paid not less than $2,500. These rates are also to be the minima for Principals of schools of less than twelve classes. Between the minimum salary of all teachers there shall be a regular yearly increase until the highest minimum is reached.

"The teachers come up for trial of merit in the seventh and twelfth years. This would guarantee fitness on the part of the teachers, but

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

As Governor of his State, George E. Lounsbury of Connecticut hasn't had much of a chance to attain prominence. He now proposes to secure a little bit of a niche in the Temple of Fame. To that end he contemplates calling a National convention of two delegates from each State to meet in New Haven some time in March or April to decide upon a National flower, which shall be recommended to Congress for adoption. A city florist has kept track of what has been done in this direction by the various States, under the lead of New York, and there seems a wide divergence of opinion as to which flower may take a place alongside the lily of France, the rose of England, the thistle of Scotland, and the shamrock of Ireland. Largely through the efforts of the late Col. Elliott F. Shepard, New York's school children, at a vote taken on Arbor Day in 1891, decided for the rose as against the goldenrod, a typical American flower. This was done after a vote the year previous which showed no majority for any one blossom, though the goldenrod had a slight lead among the more than 125 varieties voted for. Since then Iowa has declared in favor of the rose, North Dakota for the wild rose, while Georgia has said the Cherokee rose of its hedges is its favorite. Alabama, Nebraska, and Oregon have declared for the goldenrod. These two flowers are the leaders in the race for popularity. Other States, either by vote of school children, popular vote, or legislation, have made choices for State flower which serve to indicate how they would vote on a ballot for a National flower. The choices, according to the tabulator referred to, are these: Maine, pine cone and tassel; Vermont, red clover; Rhode Island, violet; Massachusetts, mayflower, (trailing arbutus;) Delaware, peach; Minnesota, moccasin; Michigan, apple; Montana, bitter root; Colorado, columbine; Idaho, syringa; Kansas, sunflower; Oklahoma Territory, mistletoe; Utah, sago lily; Nevada, sage brush; New Mexico, cactus; California, poppy; Washington, rhododendron, and in Illinois, where a vote was taken as to a choice, there was almost an equal division between the rose and the violet, the former being a slight choice. Florists rather favor the adoption of the American Beauty rose, as an essentially American production and one that will grow in any State of the Union, as well as because of its intrinsic beauty.

"Tom" McManus, once a welcome model at many of the studios in this city, has turned up in a Connecticut poorhouse, a complete physical wreck from pulmonary disease. McManus was once a well-known character down-town, particularly in the vicinity of Harper Brothers' publishing house, for he was for a long time a model for Edwin A. Abbey and C. S. Reinhart when they were engaged as illustrators on the publications of that firm. He also posed for Gilbert Gaul for some of his military figures, and was pretty well known about the studios of figure painters, for McManus was of splendid physique and apt at his work. He served a term in the army, another in the navy, and while in the latter service acquired the seeds of the disease that will soon cause his death. Broken in health, he drifted to his native State, where he is now a public charge, unable to work and waiting for the end.

"It seems as if the Government were making a mistake in retiring our army and navy officers early in their sixties," said E. J. McKay, a Pittsburg railroad man while chatting at the Waldorf yesterday afternoon. "Business men are considered to be in their prime at that age, and our Judges are often at their best at ages that would retire them from active life if they were in the army or navy. Only last week I had occasion to go to Waynesburg, in Greene County, Penn., to transact some business with the President of the Farmers and Drovers' National Bank there. He is E. M. Sayers, and is not only the active manager of the bank, but a practicing attorney as well. He told me he was ninety years old, though I never should have suspected it, for he is more active than some men I know at not much more than half his age. Greene County, by the way, is just now the centre of a boom of the sort that characterized the oil region some thirty years ago. Vast deposits of oil, natural gas, and coal have been uncovered, and there are at least two railroads that are getting ready to break into that district toward the development of which nothing has ever been done, as no one has suspected how rich it was in natural resources. A tinplate mill and a big brick kiln are to be built there at once, and the veteran Mr. Sayers is as active in planning for the development of the territory as any resident of the district. Nothing goes on in that section that he is not conversant with, and he knows more than a lot of the professional 'scouts' who are there spying out the land for their employers. Yet, according to our National bureau theories, he should have retired from active life twenty-six years ago. Bah!"

While ice is in the river and there is no chance for them to cast their hooks, the contingent that fish the waters of the Hudson whenever the weather permits, wander over to the river banks and watch the construction of a new fishing house. It is about opposite the foot of One Hundred and Thirteenth Street, a frame building of two stories that was about half inclosed on Saturday. From the river front of the house there is to be built a wide fishing platform that will give those having the privileges of the house a chance to cast as often as they may wish. The Hudson River Bass Fishing Club is the name of the organization erecting the house, and a jolly lot of old fishermen they are. During the season when bass are running they spend all their spare time trying to land the striped beauties of the salt water. Many of them have hair whiter than any snow we have seen here this Winter; men who have a sufficient income to keep them in comfort, and with no greater cause for worry than the run of the fish, the quality of the bait, and the value of tackle. Such of the members as are not of this class are younger and well-to-do Germans, who are both persistent and successful fishermen.

Wanderers on the lower Bowery find in the windows of one of the saloons there a collection that divides interest among the denizens with the shows of the pawn brokers. Admirers of the collection are young fellows of the Bowery type whose chief end and ambition in life is to figure as a "champeen middleweight" prize fighter. It is to this class that the crafty saloon keeper caters. So he has arranged in his window a lot of boxing gloves appropriately labeled as having been worn by "Jim" Corbett, "Kid McCoy," Peter Maher, "Jim" Jeffries, "Mysterious Billie Smith," and a host of other "heroes" of the prize ring. They are a badly battered and shapeless lot of gloves, but the gamins of that section gaze at and gloat over them as fondly as does a collector of a different stamp over some precious bit of blackletter.

Windstorms such as prevailed on Thursday and Friday raise the mischief with the big stand of the billposters and cost some one a lot of money. All about town yesterday there were evidences of the havoc wrought. The wind had stripped costly posters from the boards—which, by the way, are generally galvanized iron nowadays—and left but scant remains of the gorgeous sheets that were pasted up perhaps a week ago. Most of these sheets were the costly lithographs of the theatres and patent medicine or tobacco men, and each costs several cents to print, without counting the cost of the rent of the stands and the posting. "Take it far and near," said one of the men who was superintending the mending of the ravages of the wind, "it has cost advertisers considerably more than $1,000 in this city, without counting the cost to the people who have bills posted in Brooklyn. Such a storm as we have just had is worse than any but the most driving of rainstorms. If there is but a corner of one of the bills that is not properly pasted down, the gusts of wind catch it, keep pulling away at it until more of the sheet gets torn from its fastening, and finally, before you can say 'Jack Robinson,' the whole stand is gone, and new sheets all through are the only things that will mend the damage. With all the companies and theatres he has in his control, the largest sufferer from the storm will be Charles Frohman. Several of his attractions are fixtures at his theatres, and the bills that were up before the storm would have done him until the runs of the plays were ended. Now we will have to get new paper to take the place of that torn down, which will cost him a good bit and make a material hole in his profits. The Tobacco Trust is probably the next largest sufferer in this way from the storm."

Our Mackintosh business has grown to such proportions that we deem it good business policy to separate it from the Men's Clothing and Women's Clothing Departments it was formerly an adjunct of, and inaugurate a separate and distinct store, in charge of a Mackintosh expert, who will devote his entire time and attention to still further develop our Mackintosh business. You will find the Mackintosh store on the second floor, section 26, near elevators, commodiously housed and supplied with every desirable style of rain-proof coat known to the trade. The Daily Story of The Big Store.

SIEGEL COOPER Co.

Sixth Ave., 18th and 19th Streets.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28, 1900.

A Sale of Shirts

that Will Eclipse Anything Yet Attempted in Shirt Values.

Last year we sold just about at this time a lot of shirts, and we got into trouble about them because we said plainly whose shirts they were. We have got the lot again—the annual clean-up of the factory—but only upon promise NOT to mention the maker's name. Our own labels are sewed over the original shirt labels of every shirt, but after you buy them there's nothing to prevent you from ripping them off again, and then you'll see one of America's foremost brands. Perhaps you are clever enough at guessing to know it anyhow. However, all we are permitted to print is the fact that we will offer for sale, beginning with Monday,

1,000 Dozen Men's Fine Shirts, white as well as colored, perfectly laundered, without a flaw or blemish, colored shirts having attached link cuffs, white shirts being in open or closed front styles, the lowest priced one in the lot being worth $1.50 each, at . . . . . 65c. each

It is not Half Price, it's less than Half Price now. All sizes, all sleeve lengths.

Another Wonderful Neckwear Sale.

And, What Is Most Remarkable---the Goods Are, Without Exception, the Latest "Advance" Spring Styles of 1900.

It's a long story—we'll make it as short as we can. A prominent firm of neckwear makers—one that makes a specialty of Cravats for the exclusive trade of New York—dissolved partnership, each partner expecting to continue in business for his own account. This prevents us from naming them. In order to realize quickly on their assets they sold us, for cash, of course,

All Their Finest Neckwear, Made Up for the Coming Spring, at Less Than the Cost of the Silks Used.

Much of the Neckwear was made to order for some of New York's swellest retailers, and you'll see their names on boxes and ties. Now you can buy them for a song, for we'll sell the entire immense lot at prices that will astonish you. Just see here:

One lot of MEN'S TECKS, 4-IN-HANDS, BOWS, SHIELD BOWS and STRING TIES—a superb assortment of styles and colors, will be sold for, each 12½c

One lot of MEN'S AND BOYS' TECKS, PUFFS, 4-IN-HANDS and IMPERIALS, worth all of 50c., will be sold for 19c

One lot of MEN'S TECKS, PUFFS, ENGLISH SQUARES, 4-IN-HANDS and IMPERIALS, worth up to $1.50, will be sold for 35c

One lot of MEN'S WIDE-END TIES and BOWS, in newest and richest styles, worth 50c. and 75c., will be sold for 25c

Neckwear sales will come and neckwear sales will go, but we doubt if ever there will be another chance like this.

Ten Thousand Dozen Collars and Cuffs for Men, Women and Boys, every one of them pure linen and of very best make, will go on sale Monday at 1-3 of Real Values.

Of course there is something the matter with them, but that something you care very little about. The shapes are all right—every new correct style being liberally represented, and not a passe collar or cuff in the lot. They are new, clean and perfect goods. The workmanship is all that can be desired. What's wrong? The stamping. They are stamped wrong, and stamped imperfectly. That's all. It's nothing you care about—yet it was cause sufficient for the goods to be rejected, and so here they are, an enormous lot of 10,000 dozen collars and cuffs to be sold at prices, as we said, just ⅓ of their real worth.

Collars, worth 15c. and 20c. each, for . . . . . 5c. each.

Cuffs, worth 25c., for . . . . . 9c. pair.

All sizes, from 12 to 20. No restrictions of any kind; you can buy as few or as many as you want.

THE LOWELL OF THE SOUTH

Spartanburg and Its Great Cluster of Cotton Mills.

HOW THE INDUSTRY GREW

A County in Which More Than 400,000 Spindles and About 2,500 Looms Whirl Night and Day.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., Jan. 27.—The further one goes in South Carolina, proceeding from Augusta, Ga., to Columbia and then northwestward, the more fascinating and astonishing become the evidences of industrial development and the promises of future commercial importance. Before you reach this "Lowell of the South," as Spartanburg County is called, you may have passed the great stacks of dozens of cotton mills, all smoking in proof of use, with the mills beside them aglow with light at night, to enable the second shifts of operatives to keep the supply of cotton goods pouring out of the mills without the slightest avoidable interruption.

Uninformed visitors from the North may be disposed to smile at the adoption of the description, "Lowell of the South." Lowell does not smile at it. For this is the great cotton manufacturing centre of the South, the county that has set the example which other counties are following with advantage and great profit. Augusta, Ga., talks with pride of her 200,000 spindles. Columbia, with scarce five years' experience in cotton manufacturing in real earnest, also boasts of 200,000 spindles and a promise of speedy increase; Spartanburg County calmly shows the record of twenty-four cotton mills, capitalized at $5,110,200, with 410,640 spindles and 12,454 looms, turning into cloth about 250,000 bales of cotton each year.

HISTORY OF THE INDUSTRY.

Cotton manufacturing is not a new thing at Spartanburg. As long ago as 1812 the Buena Vista Mill was erected, and is said to have done a lively business, although it is related that its first pound of yarn sold for $3.50, and that 30 feet of it would not bear its own weight. The present Pelham Mill Company, incorporated in 1883, built its mill in 1889, started with 5,000 spindles, and has been increased in capacity until now it operates 11,000 spindles. A knitting mill was added in 1897, which now runs 70 machines on full time, making cheap and medium grade hosiery for women and children. This is one of the small concerns of the county. Its capital is but $150,000. The Clifton and Spartan Mills Companies have each $1,000,000 capital; the Pacolet, with three mills, has $700,000 capital; the Enoree Mill has a capital of $400,000, and there are several mills with more than $300,000 capital each.

Each mill is a history in itself of the progress of the industrial movement in South Carolina. But all of them acknowledge an influence, the wisdom and sagacity of a leader who pointed out the way with a confidence, foresight, energy, and ability that entitle him to the honor in which his memory is held. D. E. Converse, a Virginian, born in 1828, who lived in Three Rivers, Canada, during his boyhood, took a position in a cotton mill at Cohoes when he was twenty-one years of age. In 1854 he went to Lincolnton, N. C., where he was employed several months in a cotton mill, and in 1855 he reached Bivingsville, S. C., and bought an interest in a factory with 1,300 spindles and twenty-six looms. With A. H. Twitchell, born at New York Mills, Oneida County, N. Y., who served in the Confederate Army during the civil war, he in 1870 formed a partnership under the name of D. E. Converse & Co.

These men became the managers and directors of the Clifton and Glendale Mills, the Glendale having 17,280 spindles and 518 looms, a pay roll of $60,000, 450 operatives, and consuming 7,500 bales of cotton each year. The Clifton Mill, an outgrowth of the Glendale Mill, incorporated in 1880 with a capital stock of $200,000, has become three mills, with $1,000,000 capital, 100,792 spindles, 3,250 looms, and with the Glendale mills is turning out 10,000,000 pounds annually of sheetings and drills for export. Mr. Converse died last October. Not, however, before he had endeared himself to a host of employes and to the community in which he had lived by the endowment of a noble institution, of which it will be a pleasure to say something later.

THE GREAT MILL AT SPARTANBURG.

Right in Spartanburg is one of the great concerns for converting cotton into cloth—the double mill of the Spartan Mills Company. Part of it is old; the newer half was built to keep up with the increased demand for South Carolina productions. Its million dollars of capital and its 74,000 spindles tell the story of development, as do all the other mills, and it is one of the establishments that relied upon steam and not upon water power to accomplish its work. Its newer building is one of the most substantial of all mills. About two miles from the centre of the town, out in the pleasant suburbs of Spartanburg, is the Arkwright Mill. Begun in 1836, and opening with 11,000 spindles and 347 looms, it is now running, or will soon run, 22,000 spindles and 700 looms. There are about 500 persons employed in the mill.

Aside from the two mills just mentioned, most of those attributed to Spartanburg, and really in the county of that name, are at greater or less distances from the town. It seems to be the intention of the mill managers to make each mill or group of mills the centre of a settlement and a community by itself. The Pacolet Mills, operated by the Spartan Mill Company, are three buildings, with water power, 57,000 spindles, 2,100 looms, and the ability to consume 30,000 bales of cotton each year. The Valley Falls Mill is a creation of the last season. Its factory is but six miles from town, on the Asheville branch of the Southern Railway, and with its 6,000 spindles it will eat up 3,000 bales of cotton each year in producing brown sheetings. The Pelham, Fairmont, Cowpens, Fingerville, and Arlington are other mills that would be described in similar language with the differences being only those of capacity in spindles and looms and in the consumption of the cotton grown all about in the county and beyond.

EFFECT ON POPULATION.

These great mills have made of a once diminutive but pleasant town a large and thriving one, with a future that must be full of comfort to those who choose to settle down here almost under the shadow of the hills of the Blue Ridge. In 1870 the population was but 1,500. In 1880, after the development of cotton spinning and weaving had begun, it had increased to 5,500. Judging by the public school attendance, it is now considered a moderate estimate to put the population at 17,000. With the influx of builders, of mill operatives, of persons interested in the direction of new enterprises, all sorts of business have marched along, until now the number of wholesale houses is impressive, the increase in the number of churches and schools and of the quality of all such structures tell of the prosperity of the mills, running night and day, and of the share that the people of the town have in it.

The natural attractions, the scenery, the water supply, the health statistics, invite more comers from the mountain and the lowlands. The statement that more than 1,000 houses have been built in the last year ought to convey an idea of the activity prevailing in this bustling little city, with its quaint, old-fashioned, irregular public square, ornamented with a fine bronze statue in honor of Morgan, the patriotic rifleman of the Revolution. The stores are many and well stocked. Along the street are seen many mountaineers, the tall, athletic men of the type found in Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee, and you are told that there has been a greater infusion of them in recent years than before the industrial era set in. The schools are not only in good buildings, but are said to be as efficient as the best in the South.

CONVERSE COLLEGE.

A short drive from the centre of the town to the eastward brings the visitor to Converse College, an institution broadly established and liberally endowed by E. D. Converse, the gentleman whose enterprise encouraged and guided the recent development of the cotton manufacture in this part of South Carolina. Within certain limits it is an independent institution. It is Christian but not denominational, and the founder took great pains that his intentions should be carried out. The situation and grounds are superb. Upon the highest spot in Spartanburg, elevated 1,200 feet above the sea level, with fifty acres of ground about the establishment, and commanding a view of the near-by Blue Ridge that is exquisite, there are fine brick buildings costing $120,000, that are complete in every detail. The main building is 400 feet long and 100 feet deep, and contains 175 rooms. Then there is a chapel, and spacious wings increasing the capacity of the college, a gymnasium fitted up with all appliances that the students can use, and a climate that President Wilson, who directs the college, says is unsurpassed for healthfulness. The auditorium, in the southeast wing is one of the finest of assembly rooms, with a stage and powerful organ, opera seats, and no echo.

Mr. Converse would not permit Converse College to be called a frame college, but it is exclusively for girls. The Directors are cultivating a taste in the section for the highest class of music. Each Spring a musical festival is organized, when the auditorium is filled on several nights with patrons who come to hear the great chorus assembled to render standard music, assisted by an orchestra and a few of the very best soloists that can be engaged. The town has great pride in Converse College, both as an institution and as a manifestation of a new spirit of public interest in education that has not been characteristic of the South.

There is another educational institution in Spartanburg, older than Converse College, with a name familiar to the Southern Methodist Church. This is Wofford College, founded by the Rev. Benjamin Wofford, who died in 1850, four years before the college was opened. It has large and commodious buildings in ample grounds and has a record of 400 graduates since it was founded. It is controlled by the Methodist Church in South Carolina. At its head is Dr. James H. Carlisle, who is one of the few living signers of the Ordinance of Secession adopted at Charleston in 1860.

COMPANY STORES IN VOGUE.

As has been mentioned, most of the mills in Spartanburg County are away from Spartanburg, some at greater distances than others, but each placed as if it were desired to isolate the mill from old neighborhoods. While some of them have been located with reference to the water power to be obtained by going out of town, and others have been erected in the country to escape future town rates of taxation—an exemption for ten years invites all new enterprises—I am assured that there is another reason controlling most of the mill companies. In many cases the mill is the motive and only excuse for the being of a settlement. The mill operatives live in the house built and owned by the companies, pay rent to the companies for their use, and obtain pretty nearly everything they need in the way of clothing and food from the company store.

Where you find a mill out of town there you find the general store, in which the operative keeps an account with the mill, and so he lives. There are no other stores. I did not hear any report that the system was complained of as a hardship, or that the corporations charged rates greatly in excess of those made in town. But it was asserted as a fact that the mills near Spartanburg, which soon will be connected by that town with a trolley line of street cars, do not look with great favor upon the coming of the trolley. If the town stores compete with the mill stores the mills must pay more cash and get less labor for supplies. By isolation the operatives are considered to be kept out of reach of agitators and trouble makers, although the mill owners admit that they have had little trouble here, and that their employes are not born strikers.

PUBLIC SPIRIT IN THE TOWN.

Public spirit is asserting itself in Spartanburg. J. C. Garlington, the proprietor of The Herald, who cherishes a worthy ambition for the town, predicts that it will not be long before the many evidences of awakening enterprise will be crystallized in improvements that will add to the comfort of a place greatly favored by nature. Hitherto there has been so much concentration of interest in the construction of mills that there has been little attention given to municipal improvemens. For the sake of business in its closely built-up main street, Spartanburg must soon have pavements. It is promising to be rich; it cannot afford to be wastefully economical. When prosperity has been sufficiently diffused, it is to be hoped that the people in the hotel business will rely less upon entertaining their guests with an infinite variety of slot machines making rag-time music, for a cent or a nickel and so contrive it that when the shivering Winter gust asks for steam in his cheerless room it shall not be necessary to wait until the laundry shuts up before steam is permitted to course its way through the radiators. And to compel guests to use lamps in order to be able to write in their rooms after dark is not keeping step to the march of Spartanburg's development in manufactures and in obvious propriety.

When you are in Spartanburg you cannot help getting the notion that Spartans may practice some of the rugged habits that inspired the man who gave the name to the place. The modern Spartanburger is not a Spartan in the historical or traditional sense. They turn up their coat-collars and shiver by the fire when the mercury drops to the freezing point. Perforce they are abstemious in their use of red liquor. But this is perforce. Of all other things that people everywhere else need and use, Spartanburg seems to have its share. When it comes to grog, that must be obtained, if it is used, at one of the dispensaries established under the rule of Gov. Tillman. As elsewhere in the State, the dispensary law is regarded as an impertinence and an encroachment upon personal liberty, while it is admitted that it has exercised a good purpose in keeping liquor out of the easy reach of the least educated and cultivated classes, and so has reduced the amount of drunkenness that once prevailed.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC HEAVY.

If railroad travel can be taken as any sort of an index of the business activity of a section, business is unquestionably active in and beyond Spartanburg in all directions. The trains of the Southern Railway, the main line of which runs through Spartanburg, reaching in its connections a vast area of Southern territory, which it gridirons in a most comprehensive manner, are constantly thronged with passengers, so that it is often difficult to find seats.

The demand for freight cars is incessant and increasing. The mills that run night and day demand that the goods they turn out shall be shipped promptly to market, and in the effort to gratify this demand every effort of the administration of the Southern is put forth to supply cars and keep them in motion. And it is an indication of the confidence of capital that it is preparing to embark in competition with the Southern Railway to Spartanburg's present facilities. The farmers in the outlying country are sharing the prosperity incidental to an increase of the number of mills. Formerly they dealt with a distant market and paid commissions that now are saved and put into their own pockets. It is the story heard all through the Piedmont district. It is but a beginning, the seed time, say the wise. "What will the harvest be?

TRIED TO BURN A THEATRE.

Building in Vancouver Occupied by Chinese Set Fire To.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 27.—Last night an attempt was made to burn down the Chinese theatre when there were probably 400 people in the building. The theatre is in the third story of a large boarding house. The fire was smouldering under the house, where a pile of kindling had been placed and lighted, but was discovered by Policeman Byers before any damage had been done.

The theatre had been closed for an hour and a half, but the Chinese in attendance were lying on the benches smoking. In the scores of rooms in the big boarding house there were at least 100 Chinamen sleeping. The police have been told that the cause of the fire was attempted revenge for the moving of the Chinese hospital to a dark alley from the site of the present boarding house. Chinatown is greatly excited.

SITE FOR WASHINGTON STATUE.

Paris Municipality Grants Good Place for American Women's Gift.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Washington Statue Association, the object of which is to present to France a statue of Washington, commemorative of the gratitude of the women of America for the aid rendered to their country in its infancy and hour of need by France, has just received a concession from the municipality of Paris of a site for the statue on the beautiful Place de Jena, at the intersection of the Avenue de Jena and the Avenue du Trocadero.

The monument will be thoroughly American, in that the statue was modeled in this country by American sculptors and has been cast in bronze by an American company. Moreover, the pedestal was designed by an American and will be executed in American granite.

The incident chosen is when Washington took command of the army at Cambridge, and he is represented with uplifted sword, invoking Divine aid.

The statue is equestrian, of bronze, and of heroic size, being about twenty-one feet in height. It is to be erected on a pedestal of granite fourteen feet in height.

It is designed to unveil the monument next July 3, the anniversary of the day on which Washington assumed command of the army. The statue has been fully paid for, but several thousand dollars are needed for the completion of the pedestal, and the expenses incident to the unveiling. The association hopes for the prompt co-operation of patriotic women of the United States in raising the additional amount required.

Method of Unseating Roberts Is Being Criticised.

SECRETARY GAGE TO REMAIN

Washington Hotels Unfavorably Affected by Mild Weather—Mr. Allison Tells a Lincoln Story.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Brigham Young Roberts, who came to the National capital with the support of 35,000 voters of Utah and with a majority of 5,600 over his opponent, has been sent back to Utah with an admonition to that State not to send any more polygamists to Congress. Now that the vote has been taken, and an immense vote was secured for the report of the majority of the Elections Committee, there are much more than eighty-one members of the House who admit in private conversation that the proposition of Representative Littlefield of Maine, to admit and then expel him, was the less brutal method to be followed. But there was a weight of sentiment, exerted by so many respected people all over the country, known to the Representatives of each district, that it became practically—from a political point of view—impossible to avoid the most direct way to exclusion.

After the speech of Mr. Littlefield, which continues to be talked about as one of great interest, force, and ability, there was a decided trend of opinion in the direction of admission first, upon the ground that it is an unsafe thing to do to permit one or two objectors to set aside an unquestionably fairly elected Representative, and that it would have been wiser and quite as conclusive against Roberts to admit and then expel him, as the test shows would have been done by much more than the two-thirds vote required. It has been curious to observe the workings of men's minds as this case has proceeded. There was rage first, upon the appearance of Roberts in the House. Then, as members listened to him and really began to think of the matter for themselves, the manly bearing of the applicant, his isolation, the reports of indignities offered by vulgar and brutal persons to his daughter, a young woman who stood by him alone all through his contest, appealed to the common sense of fairness, this feeling being at once dissipated when the suggestion was made that all the appeals to charitable feeling were but part of the Mormon plan to defy the National antipathy to Mormonism and polygamy and that reliance had been placed upon the success of just such tactics when Roberts was chosen to be the representative of the old, defiant Brigham Young spirit. Roberts's statement, following the vote of exclusion, carries an intimation that the postponement of the dispute may not be perpetual, but it is believed that Utah will not send another polygamist to be its Representative in Congress.

Secretary Gage may be found in his office at the Treasury Department every day in the week except Sunday, from about 9 o'clock until after 4—usually some time after the last clerk is out of the building and on his way home. He has been astonished and amused to hear of surprise on the part of visitors, of course of that very large class that does not keep close track of Government and its personnel, because he has not complied with demands in a few newspapers, in large type, that "Mr. Gage Must Go." It cannot be ascertained from him or from the White House that there is any immediate or prospective intention to comply with that demand, whether made in small type or large. Intimations are made, from hostile sources that the Administration would gladly be relieved of his presence. They do not come from the President. It has not been possible to trace the reported hostility to him in the Cabinet to any member of it. There are Senators and Representatives who are sore about the publication of some letters that seemed to mix up business and politics rather indiscriminately, and one Senator has been heard to express his disgust because Mr. Gage uncovered the awkward correspondence. From the point of view of the Secretary, the publication of the embarrassing letters, which manifestly were not intended to be published, could not have been evaded, if he had desired to screen the imprudence of those who sent them. It is believed at the Treasury that the character, if not the contents, of the letters which have provoked so much comment, was known to those who have been promoting the attacks upon the Secretary, and that if they had been withheld there would have been a second demand for them that would have put the Secretary of the Treasury in a very serious predicament. Unless a more effective and damaging attack is to be made on Mr. Gage, it is safe to say that he will serve out his term.

"Right here, where we are sitting," said an old resident of Washington, while in the new and elaborately decorated hall of the Arlington Hotel, "is where Secretary of State William L. Marcy lived. It was a plain brownstone-front building, very stylish in Marcy's day, and resorted to by the leading Democrats as to a shrine. Marcy exercised a profound influence over his associates, and in the Cabinet he was regarded as a man of statesmanlike qualities that never wavered or paled. In Marcy's day there was more talk about some other New York men who had served in Cabinets than there is now. Gen. John Armstrong, who was seventh Secretary of War, who suffered from public criticism about as much as Gen. Alger has since suffered, was often talked of in Marcy's time as the most unfortunate of Secretaries. It was he who invited the President and Cabinet out to Bladensburg to see the British beaten in 1814, and he was among the hurrying crowd that fled back to Washington to avoid being captured. His portrait in the War Department, painted by Huntington and presented by William B. Astor, I have been assured is an excellent one. Public clamor drove him out of the Cabinet about a week after the capture of Washington by the British forces. There was also much talk about Gen. Peter B. Porter, who was twelfth Secretary of War. He had fought against the British and the Indians, and had received a medal of gold from Congress. He had personal bravery, for he fought a duel with an officer of the army, who had intimated that Porter made money out of contracts. He lived to be seventy-one years of age, and when he died he was reputed to be worth half a million—a great fortune in 1844. A really great New York man, whose reputation should be kept alive, was Benjamin F. Butler, who had the blood of Cromwell in his veins. He left the Democratic Party in 1854, in consequence of his opposition to the Nebraska compromise, and died in Paris in 1858, without having won the enduring renown to which he is entitled."

Long-tailed horses may be forced into fashion in Washington. There have been laws upon the books to prevent "docking," but it has been discovered that they are of little or no avail to prevent the practice of amputating horses' tails, and then bringing the horses into Washington in defiance of the legislation intended to check the practice, which humane observers consider cruel. While short-tailed horses do not seem to be so generally favored as formerly, the "docking" practice continues, and even in fly-time the beast is sometimes deprived of his only means of discouraging the pest that thrives here as it does along the Jersey shore in months of the year that would be pleasant but for its aggravating presence. The friends of long-tailed horses have hit upon a way of stopping amputation. They have asked for a law which will impose a penalty upon the owner or user of a horse with an amputated tail. Under this law it will not be possible for a person to take his horse out into Montgomery County to have him deprived of excessive tail and then to flaunt his mutilation in the faces of the helpless police. Owners of horses already docked must at once register their animals, or suffer a penalty for failure to do so. From statements made by the promoters of the bill it is believed that the fashion has so passed that as soon as the bill is a law it will be found that the docked horses registered are mostly once fine animals that have deteriorated and fallen from the service of stylish owners until they have landed between the shafts of cabs and carts. This inevitable relegation of horses trimmed to any fashion is regarded as having helped the decline of the cruel practice that the proposed law has undertaken to make criminal.

Beautiful Winter weather is all very well, but some of the Washington hotelkeepers would be glad if it were not so general as it has been since Winter ought to have set in in the lake region. The season in Washington has been about what it usually is up to New Year's. But it is commonly the case that this section enjoys a monopoly of mild Winter weather long after people to the north of the mountains have had several snowstorms and incidental inconveniences. The snow, the bad walking, the damp that comes with melting intervals, send Northern unfortunates toward the South, and many of them stop at Washington on the way. This arrested flight tells upon the hotel registers, and as the travelers are usually persons of means who live by the way, they make good guests, requiring everything that money can buy of comfortable things. As the Winter has held off, the rush of these seekers for sunshine and a temperature somewhere near 70, have yet to their homes. The hotels have missed them. The same thing is true of the Florida hotels, which have been tenanted up to this time chiefly by those who must have milder weather than that of this season in New York or Chicago. But the Washington hotels have not thought of closing. The business has not been much better than half as much as it was in December, 1898, but the coming of severe weather may yet make up in February for all losses this season. The throng of sightseers is about as large as ever. Capitol guides assert that the people who come here do not care as much for guides as formerly. Some of those who dispense with them miss a treat, for several of the Capitol men are entertaining enough to justify the small outlay that their services call for. Many residents have adopted the plan of turning their guests over to the guides. They cannot stand the same sights over and over again, and would prefer to pay the professional guide and lecturer rather than wander and talk themselves.

Senator Allison, who was giving some reasons a few days ago for asking to be excused from making a dinner engagement, told a story that sometimes came to him to remind him of the danger of making dinner engagements and forgetting them. "When Henry Wilson was a Senator and Lincoln was President," said Senator Allison, "the two men, being very intimate, and Lincoln very much enjoying the friendship of Wilson, the President sent an invitation to dinner to Senator and Mrs. Wilson. I do not know whether the invitation was formally accepted or not. When the dinner night arrived President Lincoln and his guests waited at the White House until 8 o'clock, the dinner having been appointed for 7:30, which was late enough for Washington back in those days. Wilson was a forgetful man. That was notorious. He and his wife sat in their rooms until 9:30 o'clock, when Mr. Wilson remembered the dinner. 'Why, Becky,' he said, 'we ought to have gone to that dinner. But it is too late now.' Next day, or the day after that, Wilson was at the White House. President Lincoln mildly suggested that Wilson ought to have come, and told him that he had been waited for for half an hour after the appointed time. Wilson expressed his regret. 'Do you know, Mr. President,' he said, 'that Becky and I quite forgot it?' The President looked queerly at him. 'Oh!' said Wilson, anxious to make amends, 'it shall never happen again. The next time you invite us to the White House to dinner, I promise you we'll be there.'

"I do not know," said Senator Allison, "whether Wilson was ever invited again or not. I know that his experience ought to be a warning to forgetful men." E. G. D.

NEW WEATHER BUREAU SYSTEM.

Committee's Report on the Bill to Inaugurate a Merit System.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The report of the House Committee on Agriculture on the bill to reorganize and improve the United States Weather Bureau states that this measure is designed to inaugurate an ideal merit system. The report says in part: "The aim is to make ability and industry the basis of promotion, and to prohibit the advancement of employes by means of political or other influence, which has proved so demoralizing to the public service.

"To briefly summarize the salient features of the proposed law, it may be said that it apportions appointments among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates without regard to their political faith, and it provides that candidates shall be nominated under such conditions as will render it difficult if not impossible to effect the permanent appointment or the promotion of an unfit person. It prohibits the use of political or other influences to secure promotin or assignment. The bill is strictly in line with the most advanced ideas on civil service as espoused by many executive officers who have had wide experience in the public service."

To Occupy the Late Prof. Hazen's Post.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Prof. Alfred J. Henry, who for twenty years has been actively connected with the Weather Bureau service, has been chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Prof. Henry A. Hazen. At present Prof. Henry is Chief of the Meteorological Division.

THE SCOTT CONTEST IS ARGUED.

Senate Elections Committee Takes Up the West Virginia Dispute.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections met to-day to hear arguments by counsel in the case of the remonstrance against permitting Nathan B. Scott of West Virginia to occupy his seat in the Senate. The principal objection to Mr. Scott urged by the protestants was based upon the contention that he received only 48 votes, or one less than a majority, and that he secured his election by causing the suspension of two members of the Legislature who were afterward given seats, thus reducing the membership from 97 to 95.

Much was also made of the circumstances that two of the members of the State Senate, by which he was elected, were officers in the volunteer army of the United States during the Spanish war. These Senators were named Getzendanner and Pierson. They were hold-overs, having been elected in 1896. Both accepted commissions in the Second West Virginia Regiment in the Summer of 1898, and, notwithstanding this circumstance, entered the Legislature in the Winter of 1898-9. They voted for Mr. Scott, and with their votes he received 48 votes, or a majority of one of the ninety-five members of the joint Assembly then occupying seats. The protestants claimed that by accepting commissions in the army, Getzendanner and Pierson, respectively, vacated their office as members of the State Senate. Without their votes Mr. Scott would have had 46 votes.

John H. Holt, for the protestants, devoted much of his time to consideration of the right of the Senate of the United States to investigate the qualifications of members of the State Senate, holding that, as a matter of self-preservation. The Federal Senate was bound to go behind the decisions of a State body. The qualifications of its own members were involved, and the Federal Senate could not afford to say that it would be bound by the conclusions of a State Legislature, however foolish they might be.

Ex-Senator Faulkner presented the case of Senator Scott.

EX-TRUANTS OF NEW YORK.

They Become Steady, Industrious Boys—Respond Quickly to Personal Interest—To Save Juvenile Criminals.

"The best part of it," says Mrs. Alger, when she talks about her friends the boys, "is that the little chaps remember me." These are the little fellows she has picked up on the streets, hundreds of them, since she first became attendance officer, some years ago, the boys who went to the truant school which she organized and was in charge of for over a year, and many of whom have become honest, self-respecting little fellows, working or at school. There are others who have grown up in the time, but when they meet her on the street, young men of eighteen or nineteen, they know her immediately. "When I get home some nights," she goes on, "tired, and life seems hardly worth living, and I find a letter from some little fellow who has been bad, but is doing well now, it makes it all seem worth while again."

Mrs. M. E. R. Alger was the first woman attendance officer in New York to look after small truants. People said she could not do the work, but she had a warm personal interest in every little truant, and there are hundreds of urchins in the city whom she has steered into a steady business life.

This is one of the letters that came not long ago from one of "her boys." It was written from a small place up the State, and began:

"Dear Miss Alger: I am gald [glad] to write I am sound and safe in the village of Blank. I go to school steady. I will be in New York before this Winter is over. I am sorry I could not visit you before I rode away. Give my regard to all. Yours truly, Abr." The abbreviation stands for Abram.

He was one of the bad boys. He had never been in the country until last year, when Mrs. Alger took a host of her boys to Flushing on an outing. It was after that that she advised him to go to the country to get out of the way of temptation. She would try to get him a place. But in the meantime he found one himself, and his first thought was to tell Mrs. Alger that he had followed her advice.

"This compulsory education law is one of the most important we have," Mrs. Alger says. "If it was properly enforced, if there was school room enough for all the children and a truant school that would accommodate from 300 to 500 boys, we would not have any juvenile criminals. It only needs a short time in the school. Four weeks is as goods as six months. Keep the boys busy until they are fourteen, and then get them to work, and they will be all right and look out for their small brothers.

"Some of the boys are doing this now. The other day I said to one of them, who is a clever little fellow and has a responsible place in a big dry goods house:

"'How is your little brother? It's about time he was running away from school.'

"'I'd like to catch him running away,' answered the one-time truant and now steady business man. 'Why, I'd throw him out the window.'

"He did run away,' another elder brother and ex-truant said of his younger brother, 'and Mis' Alger, I locked him in a room all one day.'

"The boys who have given up playing truant themselves realize the value of going to school now. The little fellow in the dry goods house had never been on Broadway until he went up one day to get the position which had been promised him. He had been down to the Board of Health to get his permit to go to work, and went up to the store and looked at the beautiful things in the window, but he couldn't go in. It was too big. He wanted to know if he was really going to work inside that great big store. He was one of the bad boys, and he didn't have a coat or shoes to go to work in at first, but now he is a regular little dude. He is at the head of a department in the store, and you ask for him by name anywhere in the store and they know him. He goes to night school now. As soon as he got into business he realized the deficiencies in his education. He learned more of arithmetic, spelling, and writing in the twenty-seven weeks of night school than he had in the whole six years of his regular school days. He had something to work for, he knew why he should study, and he made the most of his time. He comes to see me now and then. The other night two other little fellows came with him. They had heard that I was going to leave my present residence, and thought I was going to leave the city, and came to see me before I went.

"There isn't a boy that can't be reached and saved, I believe, if there is only a little personal interest taken in him. It is that personal equation which means so much. In the case of some boys no one has taken an interest in them in all their lives, and when they feel that somebody really cares whether they do well or not and remembers them it will work wonders in them.

"The Principal of one of the schools came to visit the truant schools while I was there and inquired for one of the boys in his school. 'We can't have this,' he said. 'I can't have one of my boys down. I want my boys in school.' And it made a most wonderful difference to the boy. If it had been the teacher it would have been of importance, but to think that the Principal knew him by name and had thought about his being in the truant school. Such a thing will change the entire life of the boy. Some of the teachers take this personal interest in the boys. One of them will say to a boy who has been absent: 'I couldn't help thinking about you last night after I went home and wondering where you were.' That teacher doesn't have truants in her school. Every scholar knows that she is personally interested in him.

"Some of the boys are really bad, but I don't believe that there are any that can't be reclaimed if some one will only be interested enough to follow them up. It means so very little to them and so much to the boy. On one occasion I came across some boys who were having what they called a 'Dewey' bake. I saw them in a vacant lot through a fence. They had stolen potatoes and built a fire, and were cooking them. As I came up they dropped one little fellow over the fence, and he had picked up some potatoes from in front of a near-by store, and was throwing them over a fence to them. I find it hard to blame the little fellows for stealing when they are hungry, and things are spread out so temptingly before them.

"I took th's boy to school, and the others followed, calling me names; nothing very bad, only rather impudent. 'Why do you do that?' I asked the eldest boy. 'Well, you can't arrest me,' he said. 'No,' I answered. 'I can't. You are too old, but I would like to talk to you. If you will go up to the school door I will tell you what you can do for me.' He followed to the school. 'If you will wait now until I come out I will tell you what you can do for me,' I repeated, and when I came out he was there, but he rather edged away as if he was afraid I would try to take him.

"'You can tell me,' I said, 'who the boys are who were with you in the lot, and where they live.'

"'I ain't goin' to tell,' he answered.

"'You needn't,' I said, 'I shall get them anyway, but I am going to trust you. You will have all day to-morrow to get them. I am going to give you this card—one of the prepared postals we have—and you can mail it to me, or you can come up to my house after 5 o'clock.' He came to the house with the card and the names in his hand. I told him to come in; that I would like to talk to him, and he did.

"His father and mother were dead, and he lived with a married sister, who didn't know what to do with him. He slept on the floor. That is nothing, however; many of the boys do that.

"'Don't you know that is all your own fault?' I said. 'You could go to work and earn nice money and get good clothes and go to Coney Island and have a good time.' Some of those trips have been the rewards I have given to the boys. I had at one time tickets on the boat that went around Staten Island and to Rockaway. The boys couldn't go alone, but they could go with mother or sister. This boy had tried to get work, and they wouldn't have him, he said. That was the truth, too. That's the way it is with a great many of the boys. I told him I would take him around to the rope factory and they would take him.

"We went to the factory, and they took him, and he staid three weeks. That showed what he could do. They don't usually work more than a week or two at first. He went to a carpet factory after that, and now he is in an iron foundry. I hadn't seen him until the second of this month, and I hardly knew him. 'I know you are one of my boys,' I said. He was at work and paying his board to his sister.

"Then there was the little fellow who wrote to me from the Tombs. He had been in bad company. I found him in a craps cellar. He said he was bad, and I couldn't do anything with him. He had been arrested eighteen times. For a long time he went straight. He came to report to me every week that he was getting along all right. Then one night he failed to come. The night before I had given him 25 cents to go to the theatre. But on his way home he met some of his old friends with a sheep. They had stolen it from the slaughter house, and when they met him they said that if he would help them carry it they would give him part. Then the police found them, and this boy had a bad record, and he was put in the Tombs and wrote me from there. He had been guilty every time before, and served short sentences, but this time he was arrested for grand larceny. I knew that he couldn't have gone to the theatre and afterward to the slaughter house way up town, and I went down to see the Judge, and sentence was suspended. He is doing well, a big fellow in his nineteenth year. The Judges have been more than kind in helping with the boys.

"I met a little fellow recently for whom I had found a position as messenger. He was a regular messenger two years, and now he is on the bicycle squad and gets $6 a week. 'How nice you look,' I said. 'This is a fine job, Mis' Alger,' he answered. He was suspended nine times from school. The little fellows walk way up town from Oliver Street now to report their progress, and some of them used to walk down town to the truant school from a long distance. There was a Christmas tree at one time at my house, and no boy could come unless he had a good card from his teacher to hang on the tree for me.

"One poor little fellow whom I found one day was covered with vermin. The teachers wouldn't have him in school, he said. I took him to an Italian barber nearby and had his hair cut, got some medicine for him, and took him home. His mother, poor woman, was a tired-out creature who didn't have strength to do anything for her children. The house was filthy. The baby was playing with the ashes, and the other children were in as bad condition as the one I had found. Her husband was dead and she tried to support the family by scrubbing in a saloon.

"'I am going to give you $1,' I said, 'and send you some soap. The dollar is more than you will earn scrubbing in one day, and you can stay at home and clean up, because I couldn't ask any one to come and see you here.' The boys had to have shoes, too, before they could go to school, but they are paying for them now with good tickets, and they are nearly paid for.

"It takes very little personal effort and interest, with the co-operation of the city and State, to save the boys, and the results mean a great deal for the future."

GRIDIRON CLUB AT DINNER.

Many Prominent Men Among the Organization's Guests.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The fifteenth annual dinner of the Gridiron Club was given at the Arlington Hotel to-night, and, like its predecessors, was the most successful event of the season. The club is composed of forty Washington correspondents, who each year give a number of dinners and make the last Saturday evening in January a notable occasion, as it is the anniversary of the organization.

The menu was an exquisite affair, being a little volume bound in leather, each page having the name of a member together with his vignette set in a reduced front page of the paper he represents. It was designed as a souvenir of the fifteenth annual dinner. The initiation of two new members was made the text for a burlesque on imperialism. The club "expanded" for the new members, raised the President to the rank of Emperor and "crowned" him. Reports from colonial Governors and vassal States and the conferring of titles were rudely interrupted by "Uncle Sam," who seized the "crown" and drove the decorated "officials" from the room.

The speeches were especially good, Senator Depew and the Chinese Minister being at their best, while the remarks of Messrs. Frye, Bryan, Gorman, Chandler, Tillman, Hanna, and Beveridge were of the usual high order.

Among the guests were the following: Senator Frye, President of the Senate; William J. Bryan, Arthur P. Gorman, Mr. Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese Minister; Senators Depew, Beveridge, Burrows,

BIRTHDAY OF THE KAISER

Generally Celebrated in Berlin, but Court Fetes Omitted.

Many Decorations and Promotions Conferred—Diplomatic and Reichstag Dinners.

Copyright, 1900, The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Excepting that it was lacking in Court fêtes, the Emperor's birthday to-day was kept in the usual way. Flags were displayed everywhere, and the papers published congratulatory articles, in which his Majesty was praised as the champion of peace, the promoter of civilization and the vigorous helmsman of Germany's destinies. The Freuz Zeitung's house poet published his usual congratulatory ode. The Centre organs reminded the Emperor that the Jesuits were not yet recalled, and said he would earn the Catholics' lasting gratitude by signing the Jesuit recall.

The Emperor conferred many decorations and promotions. Count Posadowsky-Werner received the decoration of the Wilhelm Order; Dr. Schoenstedt, Prussian Minister of Justice, and Freiheer von Hammerstein-Loxten, Prussian Minister of Agriculture, the Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Eagle, and Dr. Studt, Minister of Public Instruction, and Count Hochberg, the Order of the Red Eagle, first class. Admiral Tirpitz, the Secretary of the Admiralty, received the first-class Order of the Red Eagle, with oak leaves.

Prince Guenther of Schwarzburg-Budolstadt and Hereditary Grand Duke Ernst Ludwig of Hesse were promoted to be Generals of Cavalry.

All the Ambassadors and Ministers, including United States Ambassador White, attended the dinner given this evening by Prince Hatzfeldt. Dr. Leyds and the British Ambassador, Sir Frank Lascelles, exchanged friendly greetings. The subject of the war in South Africa was not mentioned during the evening.

At the banquet of members of the Reichstag this evening in celebration of the anniversary of the Emperor's birth, Count von Ballestrem, the President, in proposing the health of the Emperor, described his Majesty and the Reichstag as the two representatives of German unity. The Reichstag, he said, constituted the support of the empire through the love and confidence of the people. In order that the two national forces might understand each other, the Emperor took his position on all questions, raising his banner aloft, visible to all men, where it might be observed and discussed with reflection. Count von Ballestrem pledged himself to promote as far as possible "the admirable intentions of the Kaiser, for whom we must always be grateful to Providence."

The birthday illumination was less general by half than in previous years. None of the public buildings, except that of the Reichstag, was illuminated, and the crowds on the streets were much smaller than on former occasions, owing to the rainstorm which prevailed.

Munich celebrated the Emperor's birthday by a banquet, in which all the Bavarian Princes shared. The heir to the throne, Prince Ludwig, toasted the Emperor, and spoke in favor of the naval increase.

The Court mourning has stopped projected festivities among the higher classes in Berlin. The Austrian Ambassador's big ball, arranged for the 29th, is off, and the same is the case with the balls which were to have been given by Count Schaffgotsch, Count Sierstorf, and Count Beraldingen, the two last named with American wives; Count Lerchenfeld and Admirals Tirpitz and Sendenbibran. All of these balls were to have been honored by the Emperor's presence.

M. CAMBON DUE HERE TO-DAY.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—M. Cambon, the French Ambassador at Washington, who is due to arrive in America to-morrow, delayed his departure from the date originally fixed in an effort to overcome the opposition to the French-American reciprocity treaty, and occupied much time in explaining its terms. But protests against it are coming to the Government from Chambers of Commerce all over France.

The Agricultural Committee of the Department of Seine et Oise denounces the measure as an economic peril, because, it is claimed, it would destroy the effects of the protection so laboriously acquired for French agriculture in the last few years. The Chamber of Commerce of Elboeuf bitterly complains that the Government has secured no benefits for French wool and wool products at a time when that industry is so tried by the lack of markets.

5,000 MEN FOR MADAGASCAR.

France Denies that They Are Sent in Fear of a British Attack.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Repeated affirmations by a large section of the French press that the British Jingoes and the Chamberlain clique in the Cabinet had determined to pick a quarrel with France in order to recover the prestige Great Britain has lost in Europe by her reverse in South Africa, and that Madagascar would be the first point of attack, have received what is regarded here as confirmation in the announcement that the Government has decided to dispatch 5,000 troops there and to form a fortified camp and arsenal at Diego Suarez. The Government explains that this move has no special significance, but is merely a part of the already announced plan of fortifying the colonies. It is denied that it has any connection whatever with Great Britain.

English designs in Madagascar and her rumored intention to provoke war sooner or later is not merely a constant cry of "wolf" in Anglophobe papers, but is undoubtedly becoming an article of faith with the mass of the French people.

The composition of the body of troops destined for Madagascar marks an innovation in the system of reinforcing the colonies. Instead of sending French troops, Algerian and Soudanese sharpshooters have been forwarded.

WOMEN SPECULATORS POSTED.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—A sensation has been caused in society and Stock Exchange circles by the recent posting on the Stock Exchange of the names of two women, clients of well-known bankers. The brokers requested other brokers to communicate with them before carrying out any transactions with these women, who were declared to be unreliable. One of these is Lady Elizabeth Bertie, sister of the Earl of Lindsey, one of the oldest peers in England, while the other is a Mrs. Manby, whose antecedents are little known.
